QUARTERLY REPORTS*

*All alphanumeric characters and monetary amounts refer to receipts and expenditures on page 2, paragraphs D and E of the Quarterly Report Form.

The following reports for the third calendar quarter of 1988 were received too late to be included in the published reports for that quarter:

PLEASE RETURN 1 ORIGINAL TO: THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, OFFICE OF RECORDS AND REGISTRATION, 1036 LONGWORTH HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING, WASHINGTON, D.C. 20515

PLEASE RETURN 1 ORIGINAL TO: THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE, OFFICE OF PUBLIC RECORDS, 232 HART SENATE OFFICE BUILDING, WASHINGTON, D.C. 20510

PLACE AN "X" BELOW THE APPROPRIATE LETTER OR FIGURE IN THE BOX AT THE RIGHT OF THE "REPORT" HEADING BELOW:

"PRELIMINARY" REPORT ("Registration"): To "register," place an "X" below the letter "P" and fill out page 1 only.

Year: 19 . . . . .

REPORT

PURSUANT TO FEDERAL REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th
(Mark one square only)

IDENTIFICATION NUMBER

Is this an Amendment? ☐ YES ☐ NO

NOTE on ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:

(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)

(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".

(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:

(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.

(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:

1. State name, address, and nature of business.

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

☐ CHECK IF ADDRESS IS DIFFERENT THAN PREVIOUSLY REPORTED

NOTE on ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE on ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§ 302(e).

(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).

(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports. ☐

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) description, (b) quantity distributed, (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed.)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and, if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly Report."

STATEMENT OF VERIFICATION

[Omitted in printing]

NOTE on ITEM "D."—(a) IN GENERAL. The term "contribution" includes anything of value. When an organization or individual uses printed or duplicated matter in a campaign attempting to influence legislation, money received by such organization or individual—for such printed or duplicated matter—is a "contribution." "The term 'contribution' includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution"—§ 302(a) of the Lobbying Act.

(b) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN EMPLOYER.—(i) In general. Item "D" is designed for the reporting of all receipts from which expenditures are made, or will be made, in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Receipts of Business Firms and Individuals.—A business firm (or individual) which is subject to the Lobbying Act by reason of expenditures which it makes in attempting to influence legislation—but which has no funds to expend except those which are available in the ordinary course of operating a business not connected in any way with the influencing of legislation—will have no receipts to report, even though it does have expenditures to report.

(iii) Receipts of Multi-purpose Organizations.—Some organizations do not receive any funds which are to be expended solely for the purpose of attempting to influence legislation. Such organizations make such expenditures out of a general fund raised by dues, assessments, or other contributions. The percentage of the general fund which is used for such expenditures indicates the percentage of dues, assessments, or other contributions which may be considered to have been paid for that purpose. Therefore, in reporting receipts, such organizations may specify what that percentage is, and report their dues, assessments, and other contributions on that basis. However, each contributor of $500 or more is to be listed, regardless of whether the contribution was made solely for legislative purposes.

(c) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN AGENT OR EMPLOYEE.—(i) In general. In the case of many employees, all receipts will come under Items "D 5" (received for services) and "D 12" (expense money and reimbursements). In the absence of a clear statement to the contrary, it will be presumed that your employer is to reimburse you for all expenditures which you make in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Employer as Contributor of $500 or More.—When your contribution from your employer (in the form of salary, fee, etc.) amounts to $500 or more, it is not necessary to report such contribution under "D 13" and "D 14," since the amount has already been reported under "D 5," and the name of the "employer" has been given under Item "B" on page 1 of this report.

D. RECEIPTS (INCLUDING CONTRIBUTIONS AND LOANS):

Fill in every blank. If the answer to any numbered item is "None," write "NONE" in the space following the number.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

PROTECTION OF PUBLIC INTERESTS IN HOSTILE BUSINESS TAKEOVERS

HON. TIMOTHY J. PENNY
OF MINNESOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. PENNY. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation with our colleagues JIM BATES, BILL LIPINSKI, MAJOR OWENS, HELEN DELICH BENTLEY, and JERRY COSTELLO to protect the public's interest in hostile business takeovers. Last Congress I had offered similar legislation (H.R. 2016).

We have heard a great deal about these takeovers in recent months. It is time to do something about them.

It is time to do something because there are many people who can be hurt by takeovers but who do not have any say about the takeover transaction itself. Too often, these are loyal, long-term employees concerned about their jobs and retirement and small investors who fear a loss of their savings.

The national economy itself is affected when investment dollars are tied up in a takeover battle. Dozens of takeovers have tied up tens of billions of dollars in the last few years. Economists agree that this is a very unproductive use of capital. These funds would be better used to buy new equipment, renovate plants, construct new buildings, do research on new products, and create more jobs.

For employees, the threat of a takeover has a negative impact. They rightfully fear plant closings, job losses and the wholesale restructuring of the combined business if a takeover is successful. These fears undermine employee/employer cooperation that becomes even more important if a merger occurs.

Customers and suppliers of a company that are bought out in a hostile takeover face the same kind of threat. Longstanding relationships, both nationally and within communities, can be disrupted by management and organizational decisions made by the new company resulting from a forced merger.

In addition, if plants are closed and jobs are lost, local governments lose their tax base, and communities lose their economic vitality. Local businesses are hurt, churches and schools close, residential property taxes skyrocket, and too often communities die.

Finally, if the new, combined company is weakened by the cost of a takeover, the stockholders of both companies lose.

Recognizing the negative consequences of many hostile takeovers, I believe something should be done. However, we can rely on the free market to do it. We can rely on the free market by providing additional information to the shareholders of both the target company and the acquiring company before a takeover begins. In addition, we must insure that all shareholders of the target company are treated equally in the takeover process.

The legislation I am introducing today has provisions designed to prevent the negative consequences of hostile takeovers.

First, the legislation requires that a company planning to acquire another prepare a statement of its plan for plant closings, changes in workforce, modification of supplier agreements, and any other major changes in its cooperate structure, management or personnel. This statement then must be made available to the shareholders of the target company. The takeover would be permitted to proceed only if the transaction were approved by a majority vote of the shares of the target company that are not owned already by the company planning the takeover. This statement guarantees that shareholders have more information about the planned takeover than just the price they are being offered for their stock.

Second, the bill would stop a company from paying more for the first shares acquired in a takeover than for those remaining after the takeover has progressed. To prevent this "two tier" pricing, under the terms of this bill, an acquiring company must pay the same amount for all shares acquired over a period of 2 years following an initial takeover attempt.

Mr. Speaker, megamergers have far reaching economic and personal effects. Employees, community officials, and stockholders should have information about planned corporate changes and should be given time to consider those plans. This bill requires both.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the text of this legislation follow my statement.

H.R. 2016

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This act may be cited as the "Community, Employee, and Stockholder Right-to-Know Act".

SEC. 2. PURPOSES.

The purposes of this Act are—

(1) To assure that the impacts of takeovers on all affected constituencies are identified and disclosed prior to the consummation of these transactions;

(2) to provide to shareholders both necessary information and the opportunity to thus cast fully informed votes on any takeover transactions; and

(3) to encourage reasoned decisionmaking by assuring equal financial treatment of all shareholders similarly situated at the time any takeover attempt is initiated.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

Section 3(a) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(41) The term 'beneficial owner' includes, but is not limited to, any person who directly or indirectly through any contract, arrangement, understanding, relationship, or otherwise has or shares the power to vote or direct the voting of a security or the power to dispose of, or direct the disposition of, the security, or both. 'Beneficial ownership' includes, but is not limited to, the right, exercisable within 60 days, to acquire securities through the exercise of options, warrants, or rights or the conversion of convertible securities, or otherwise. The securities subject to such options, warrants, rights, or conversion privileges held by a person shall be deemed to be outstanding for the purpose of computing the percentage of the class owned by any other person. A person shall be deemed the beneficial owner of securities beneficially owned by any relative or spouse or relative of the spouse residing in the home of such person, any trust or estate in which such person owns ten percent or more of the total beneficial interest or serves as trustee or executor, any corporation or entity in which such person owns ten percent or more of the equity, and any affiliate or associate of such person.".

SEC. 4. SUSPENSION AND TERMINATION OF TENDER OFFERS.

Section 14(d) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(9)(A) The Commission may by order summarily suspend the effectiveness of an offer for, or request or invitation for tenders of, a security if the Commission determines that the statement filed under paragraph (1) does not contain all of the information specified in section 13(d)(1) or that the information provided to offerees does not provide full disclosure to offerees of all material information concerning the offer for, or request or invitation for tenders of, a security. The suspension shall remain in effect only until a determination is made following a hearing held pursuant to subparagraph (B).

"(B) A hearing shall be scheduled by the Commission with respect to each suspension under this paragraph and shall be held within ten calendar days of the date of the suspension. Any determination made following the hearing shall be made within three calendar days after such hearing has been completed. If, based upon the hearing, the Commission finds that the offer, request, or solicitation fails to provide for full and fair disclosure to offerees of all material information concerning the offer, request, or solicitation, or that the offer, request, or solicitation is in material violation of any provision of this title, the Commission shall permanently suspend the effectiveness of the offer, request, or solicitation, subject to the right of the offeror to correct the disclosure and other deficiencies identified by the Commission and to reinstitute the offer, request, or solicitation by filing a new or amended statement pursuant to paragraph (1).

"(10)(A) No offeror may make an offer for, or request or invitation for tenders of, or acquire any equity securities at any time when any proceeding by the Commission is pending against the offeror alleging a violation of any provision of this title or of the Securities Act of 1933.

"(B) No offeror may acquire, remove, or exercise control, directly or indirectly, over any assets of the issuer pursuant to an offer for, or request or invitation for tenders of, such securities at any time when any proceeding by the Commission is pending against the offeror alleging a violation of any provision of this Act or the Securities Act of 1933.

"(C) No offeror may acquire any equity securities of any class of an issuer at any time within two years following the last purchase of securities pursuant to an offer for, or request or invitation for tenders of, securities of that class, including, but not limited to, acquisitions made by purchase, exchange, merger, consolidation, partial or complete liquidation, redemption, reverse stock split, recapitalization, reorganization or any other similar transaction, unless the holders of the equity securities are afforded, at the time of the acquisition, a reasonable opportunity to dispose of the securities to the offeror upon substantially equivalent terms as those provided in the earlier offer, request, or invitation.

"(11) All shares acquired in violation of any provision of this section or any rule or regulation hereunder, or any order of the Commission of which the person has notice, shall be denied voting rights for one year after acquisition. Such shares shall not be transferable on the books of the target company for one year after acquisition and the issuer shall, during this one-year period, have the option to call the shares for redemption at book value per share as of the last day of the fiscal quarter ended prior to the date of the call for redemption. Such a redemption shall occur on the date set in the call notice, but not later than 60 days after the call notice is given.".

SEC. 5. CONTENTS OF DISCLOSURE STATEMENTS BY PRINCIPAL SHAREHOLDERS AND TENDER OFFERORS.

Section 13(d)91) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (B), by inserting after "making the purchases," the following: "including (if applicable) a description of any securities which are being offered in exchange for the equity securities of the issuer,"; and

(2) in subparagraph (C), by striking out "merge it with any other person, or to make any other major change in its business or corporate structure" and inserting in lieu thereof "effect its merger or consolidation with any other person, to change the location of its principal executive office or of a material portion of its business activities, to change its management or make any major change in the number of its employees or make any other changes in its policies of employment, to materially alter its relationship with suppliers or customers or the communities in which it operates, or make any other major change in its business, corporate structure, management, or personnel".

SEC. 6. FRAUDULENT, DECEPTIVE, OR MANIPULATIVE PRACTICES DURING TAKEOVERS.

Section 14(e) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 is amended by inserting "(1)" after "(e)" and by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(2) As part of the rules and regulations defining, and prescribing means reasonably designed to prevent, acts and practices that are fraudulent, deceptive, or manipulative, the Commission shall promulgate rules and regulations to prohibit—

"(A) the sale by any principal stockholders of the issuer of any of their equity securities to the offeror for a consideration greater than that to be paid other stockholders pursuant to the offer, request, or invitation, or the purchase of any of the securities of a principal stockholder of the issuer by the offeror for a consideration greater than that to be paid other stockholders, pursuant to an agreement not disclosed to the other stockholders;

"(B) the refusal by the issuer to permit an offeror who is a stockholder of record to examine its list of stockholders, and to make extracts therefrom, for the purpose of making an offer, request, or invitation in compliance with this section, or, in lieu thereof, to mail any solicitation materials published by the offeror to its security holders with reasonable promptness after receipt from the offeror of such materials together with the reasonable expenses of postage and handling; and

"(C) the solicitation of any acceptance or rejection of an offer, request, or inivitation before the filing of the statement required by paragraph (1).

"(3) For the purpose of paragraph (2), the term 'principal stockholder' includes any person required to file a statement under section 16.".

SEC. 7. ACQUISITIONS OF CONTROL.

Section 13 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 is amended by redesignating subsection (h) as subsection (i) and by inserting after subsection (g) the following new subsection:

"(h)(1) Unless otherwise expressly provided in the articles of incorporation of an issuer, this subsection applies to a control share acquisition.

"(2) All securities acquired by an acquiring person in violation of paragraph (5) shall be denied voting rights for one year after acquisition. Such securities shall not be transferable on the books of the issuer for one year after acquisition. The issuer shall, during the one-year period, have the option to call the securities for redemption at book value per share as of the last day of the fiscal quarter ended prior to the date of the call for redemption. Such a redemption shall occur on the date set in the call notice, but not later than 60 days after the call notice is given.

"(3) A person proposing to make a control share acquisition shall deliver to the issuer at its principal executive office a statement in such form as the Commission may, by rule prescribe, setting forth—

"(A) the identify of the person;

"(B) a reference that the statement is made under this subsection;

"(C) the number of shares of the issuer beneficially owned by the person;

"(D) a specification of which of the following ranges of voting power in the election of directors would result from consummation of the control share acquisition:

"(i) at least 10 percent but less than 20 percent;

"(ii) at least 20 percent but less than 30 percent;

"(iii) at least 30 percent but less than 40 percent;

"(iv) at least 40 percent but less than a majority; and

"(v) at least a majority; and

"(E) the terms of the proposed control share acquisition, including, but not limited to, the source of funds or other consideration and the material terms of the financial arrangements for the control share acquisition, any plans or proposals of the acquiring person to liquidate the issuer, to sell all or substantially all of its assets, or merge it or exchange its shares with any other person, to change the location of its principal executive office or of a material portion of its business activities, to change its management or make any major change in the number of its employees or make any other changes in its policies of employment, to materially alter its relationship with suppliers or customers or the communities in which it operates, or make any other major change in its business, corporate structure, management, or personnel.

"(4) Within five days after receipt of a statement pursuant to paragraph (3), a special meeting of the stockholders of the issuer shall be called to vote on the proposed control share acquisition. The meeting shall be held no later than 55 days after receipt of the statement, unless the acquiring person agrees to a later date, and no sooner than 30 days after receipt of the statement, if the acquiring person so requests in writing when delivering the information statement. The notice of the meeting shall at a minimum be accompanied by a copy of the information statement and a statement disclosing that the issuer recommends acceptance of, expresses no opinion and is remaining neutral toward, or is unable to take a position with respect to the proposed control share acquisition. The notice of meeting shall be given within 25 days after receipt of the information statement.

"(5)(A) The acquiring person may consummate the proposed control share acquisition if and only if both of the following occur:

"(i) The proposed control share acquisition is approved by the affirmative vote of the holders of a majority of the voting power of all securities entitled to vote which are not beneficially owned by the acquiring person. A class or series of securities of the corporation is entitled to vote as a class or series if any provision of the control share acquisition would, if contained in a proposed amendment to the articles, entitle the class or series to vote as a class or series.

"(ii) The proposed control share acquisition is consummated within 180 days after shareholder approval.

"(6) Notwithstanding any contrary provision of this title, a proxy relating to a meeting of stockholders required under paragraph (4) must be solicited separately from the offer to purchase or solicitation of an offer to sell securities of the issuer and must not be solicited sooner than 30 days before the meeting unless otherwise agreed in writing by the acquiring person and the issuing public corporation.

"(7) An acquiring person may on written demand examine the most recently prepared stockholder register for the purpose of communicating with stockholders to obtain authorization for a control share acquisition under this subsection.

"(8) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) the term 'acquiring person' means a person that is required to deliver a statement under this section; and

"(B) the term 'control share acquisition' means an acquisition of shares of an issuer resutling in beneficial ownership by an acquiring person of a new range of voting power specified in paragraph (3)(D), but does not include any of the following:

"(i) an acquisition before, or purusant to an agreement entered into before, the effective date of this section;

"(ii) an acquisition by a donee pursuant to an inter vivos gift not made to avoid this subsection;

"(iii) an acquisition pursuant to a security agreement not created to avoid this subsection; or

"(iv) an acquisition from the issuer.".

LIBYAN-BACKED TERRORISM IN AMERICA: THE UNITED STATES MUST REMAIN VIGILANT

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, while I commend the fine work of New Jersey State troopers and the FBI in bringing convicted terrorist, Yu Kikumura, to justice, I am concerned that Qadhafi and other supporters of state terrorism may again try to bring the scourge of violence to our own shores. America must be prepared to defeat future terrorist attacks in our own land.

Over the years, as terrorist attacks against American targets overseas have become almost routine occurrences, our Government's focus has been directed toward the high-terrorist threat regions of the world. I am concerned about the possibility that terrorist might increase their efforts to infiltrate this country and operate in our own backyard. The openness of our society, our long borders and the huge illegal alien population in the United States are all factors which can facilitate the successful covert entry of terrorists into America.

In 1987, three suspected Arab terrorists of Lebanese origin crossed into the United States from Canada carrying explosives. Fortunately, they were arrested in Vermont before they could carry out their planned bombing operations.

Later that year, five members of one of this Nation's deadliest street gangs were sentenced to long prison terms for conspiring to acquire $2.5 million from Libya in exchange for their offer to commit terrorist acts in the United States. They allegedly bought a disabled antitank weapon from undercover Federal agents and then traveled to Libya to meet with Libyan representatives in order to discuss their planned terrorist operations in the United States.

Last year, Mr. Kikumura legally entered the United States, and planned to bomb three different locations in Manhattan in retaliation for the 1986 United States bombing of Libyan terrorist training facilities. Kikumura is a member of the Japanese Red Army and was secretly working with agents of Libyan leader, Mu'ammar Qadhafi. A recent State Department report on Libyan terrorism clearly links the JRA with Qadhafi and notes that the JRA does Qadhafi's bidding.

A few days after Kikumura was arrested, JRA terrorists successfully bombed a USO club in Naples, Italy. Italian authorities linked the car used in the attack of a known JRA terrorist, and an anonymous caller claimed that the attack was in retaliation for the United States bombing of Libya.

While the work of protecting U.S. diplomats and diplomatic facilities overseas continues, we must also remember that future acts of terrorism here in our own country are a distant possibility. The agencies of our Government responsible for America's domestic security need to have the resources necessary to carry on this battle and they must be eternally vigilant in combatting this new and deadly menace.

I commend the following Washington Post article to my colleagues in the Congress.

TERRORIST BOMB PLOT OUTLINED

(By Howard Kurtz)

NEW YORK, February 2.—A suspected Japanese terrorist was secretly working with Libya to detonate bombs at three sites in Manhattan, including a Navy recruiting office, when he was arrested last April, a federal prosecutor said today.

New details involving Yu Kikumura, convicted in November without offering a defense, emerged as prosecutors and defense lawyers prepared for his sentencing Monday in U.S. District Court in Newark.

In a confidential presentencing memorandum, the government charged that Kikumura is a member of the Japanese Red Army who was secretly working with agents of Libyan leader Moammar Gadhafi seeking retaliation for the 1986 U.S. bombing of Libya, according to Samuel A. Alito, U.S. attorney in Newark.

The government alleged that a map with three pinholes, found in Kikumura's car, showed that his targets were the United Nations, the Manhattan garment district and a Navy recruiting office. His goal was "mass slaughter," prosecutors charged in their 32-page memo.

Ronald L. Kuby, Kikumura's attorney, called the charges "wild and unsubstantiated speculation" and said, "We categorically deny that he was planning to injure or kill people."

Kuby said in his presentencing memo that prosecutors had resorted to "innuendo and guesswork" in an attempt to link Kikumura to Libyan terrorists.

Alito agreed to confirm the government's findings after being told that many of the details were cited in the defense memo, made available to The Washington Post. This is the first time that prosecutors have discussed publicly the alleged nature of Kikumura's mission.

Kikumura, 36, was arrested last April 12 at a rest stop on the New Jersey Turnpike by a state trooper who thought he was acting suspiciously. Kikumura, apparently heading for Manhattan, was found to be carrying three 18-inch pipe bombs loaded with gunpowder.

At a brief nonjury trial in November, Kikumura did not contest several federal charges, the most serious of which was transporting explosives with intent to kill.

Alito noted that Kikumura's arrest came two days short of the second anniversary of the U.S. bombing of Libya. Two days after the arrest, five people were killed in the bombing of a USO club in Naples, Italy. A Japanese Red Army member was the chief suspect.

"The Japanese Red Army was carrying out retaliatory bombings for the Libyan air strike," Alito said. He said a State Department report recently noted the group's role "in doing Gadhafi's bidding."

The govenrment memo alleged that a confidential informant reported having seen Kikumura, wearing a ski mask, training in Lebanon's Bekaa Valley with several other masked persons who later went to Libya.

Kurby denied this and, in his memo, assailed "the government's imaginative attempts to bootstrap this into the much-discussed 'Libyan terrorism' . . . Because the bombs were not planted or detonated, the prosecution feels free to conjure up scenarios of 'mass slaughter.'"

While federal sentencing guidelines call for Kikumura to receive a prison term of 27 to 33 months, prosecutors have asked that U.S. District Court Judge Alfred J. Lechner sentence him to spend most of his life in prison.

Kuby said he asked that the govenment be required to prove its terrorism allegations at a court hearing. "The Constitution does not permit imprisonment by innuendo," he said.

Alito said such a hearing would jeopardize confidential sources and hinder terrorism probes. "It's hard enough to get confidential informants to tell you what's going on in places like the Japanese Red Army," he said.

Alito said the sentencing guidelines "don't take into account the nature of the bombs he had, what he intended to do with the bombs or the fact that he's an international terrorist. I don't think you'd find a judge in the country who would give this guy two or three years."

Kuby declined to say why his client was carrying three powerful bombs in the back seat of a 1980 auto.

FLORIO HONORS ANDREW DiMATTEO

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues an outstanding individual from the State of New Jersey, Andrew F. DiMatteo.

Andy DiMatteo was born on February 27, 1924, in Trenton, NJ. After serving his country for 3 years in the Navy during World War II, he returned to Trenton to seek employment.

Andy was hired by the General Motors Corp. in November 1946. Two and a half years later he married a fellow employee, the former Irene Stolarski. On July 9 of this year, Andy and Irene will celebrate their 40th wedding anniversary.

There are few people who have demonstrated the level of leadership and community service as Andy DiMatteo. Recognizing the importance of the American Labor movement, Andy has a long history of service to the United Auto Workers of America. He has held several elected positions with local 731, including president, Executive Board and Election Committee. During the period from 1973 to 1988, Andy was elected five times as a delegate to the UAW National Convention.

While serving as president of local 731, Andy was elected vice president of the UAW Region 9 CAP Council. He also served for 5 years as the local 731 delegate to the Mercer County Industrial Union Council.

Andy was appointed by the international union to serve as the UAW joint member of the Local Health and Safety Committee. He has served in this position for the past 15 years and has received extensive yearly training. Andy holds union labor training certificates from Rutgers, Penn State, Cornell, and Flint Institute in Michigan.

In addition to his work with the UAW, Andy has been very active in local political and civic activities. Andy's community service includes 7 years as a member of the Ewing Township Zoning Board and 7 years as a board member of the Ewing-Lawrence Sewerage Authority, where he is currently serving his second term as chairman.

Andy and Irene have three children, Christine, Linda, and Drew; and three grandchildren, Amanda and David Spalinski, ages 7 and 6; and Andrew DiMatteo, age 1½.

On Saturday, February 25, 1989, Andy's many friends and family will join him at a testimonial retirement dinner, in honor of his many years of service to the United Auto Workers and community.

Mr. Speaker, I am certain that my colleagues would join me in congratulating Andrew DiMatteo, and wishing him and Irene many happy and healthy retirement years together.

INCLUDE THE DRUG CZAR IN THE CABINET

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, on February 9, 1989, I introduced House Concurrent Resolution 51 calling for the inclusion of the Director of National Drug Control Policy as a fully participating member of the President's Cabinet. A similar measure, Senate Resolution 19, was introduced by Senator ALAN DIXON on January 25, 1989.

By now, everyone knows of the damage drugs are doing to America—a murder a day in the District of Columbia, public housing projects made uninhabitable because of violence associated with drug dealing, and teenagers lured into the drug trade because of the money they can make serving as lookouts and pistol men for drug dealers.

Despite well-publicized seizures by the DEA, Customs Service, Coast Guard, and other agencies, drugs are cheaper in price and more available than ever. Illicit cultivation of drug crops abroad outpaces efforts by the Bureau of International Narcotics Matters to get foreign drug-producing nations to curtail their production. The United States itself is a significant producer of marijuana, and drug traffickers could not remain in business if there was not a huge demand for their product in the United States.

With a new President in office, now is an appropriate time to reassess our current policies for fighting drugs and to undertake some new initiatives. President Bush pledged in his inaugural address, "this scourge will stop."

President Bush said in this speech:

And when that first cocaine was smuggled in on a ship, it may as well have been a deadly bacteria, so much has it hurt the body, the soul, of our country.

He also called for a "new engagement . . . between the Executive and the Congress."

I welcome the President's call for a stepped-up attack on drugs, and I know Congress is ready at any time to cooperate with the administration in working toward the goal of a drug-free America.

Last year, as part of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988, the Congress created the Office of National Drug Control Policy headed by a Director of National Drug Control Policy, the so-called drug czar. William Bennett, the former Secretary of Education, has been selected by President Bush to be the Director of National Drug Control Policy. Mr. Bennett has testified twice before the Select Committee on Narcotics on drug abuse education programs. He is knowledgeable about the drug issue and committed to reducing drug usage in America.

President Bush pledged at his first news conference that he would be at Mr. Bennett's side whenever he needed him to show his commitment to winning the battle against drugs. In his budget address to Congress on February 9, he reiterated his commitment to a strong antidrug program and his full support for Mr. Bennett saying:

Our new drug czar, William Bennett, and I will be shoulder to shoulder in the executive branch, leading the charge in the war against drugs.

Nothing the President can say, however, would demonstrate his support of the drug czar more than making the drug czar a fully participating member of the Cabinet. This would be an unmistakable signal, to the rest of the Cabinet, to our Nation and to the world, that antidrug efforts will be given the highest priority by the Bush administration.

Congress gave the drug czar Cabinet rank, but the drug czar will not truly be a first-team player unless he is included in the Cabinet and can participate fully in Cabinet meetings. He cannot be an effective advocate for comprehensive antidrug strategy or adequately address the impact that other foreign and domestic policy decisions will have on drug policies and programs unless he has equal access to other Cabinet members and the President. I urge President Bush to reassess his decision to exclude Mr. Bennett from the Cabinet.

COMMEMORATING BLACK HISTORY MONTH: A TRIBUTE TO MRS. ROSA PARKS

HON. JAMES H. BILBRAY

OF NEVADA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. BILBRAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize a woman who is known to many as the "Mother of the Civil Rights Movement." She is one of our country's most respected civil rights activists, a reputation that she has earned for her years of persistence in pursuing racial equality. Mr. Speaker, I can think of no individual who better personifies the struggle for racial justice than Mrs. Rosa Parks.

Mrs. Parks is best known for her role in the Montgomery bus boycott, the event which is often credited for igniting the Civil Rights Movement. In his latest novel, "Parting the Waters: America in the King Years 1954–63," Taylor Branch gives an excellent account of what happened to Mrs. Parks on that fateful day when she refused to move to the back of the bus.

On December 1, 1955, Rosa Parks left the Montgomery Fair department store late in the afternoon for her regular bus ride home. All thirty-six seats of the bus she boarded were soon filled, with twenty-two Negroes seated from the rear and fourteen whites from the front. Driver J.P. Blake, seeing a white man standing in the front of the bus, called out for the four passengers on the row just behind the whites to stand up and move to the back. Nothing happened. Blake finally had to get out of the driver's seat to speak more firmly to the four Negroes. "You better make it light on yourselves and let me have those seats," he said. At this, three of the Negroes moved to stand in the back of the bus, but Parks responded that she was not in the white section and didn't think she ought to move. She was in no-man's-land. Blake said that the white section was where he said it was, and he was telling Parks that she was in it. As he saw the law, the whole idea of no-man's-land was to give the driver some discretion to keep the races out of each other's way. He was doing just that. When Parks refused again, he advised her that the same city law that allowed him to regulate no-man's-land also gave him emergency police power to enforce the segregation codes. He would arrest Parks himself if he had to. Parks replied that he should do what he had to do; she was not moving. She spoke so softly that Blake would not have been able to hear her above the drone of normal bus noise. But the bus was silent. She should not move until he returned with the regular Montgomery police.

As the cliche goes, "the rest was history." Mrs. Park's arrest provided the impetus for the local chapter of the NAACP to challenge the Alabama segregation laws, as well as kicking off a city-wide bus boycott which lasted 381 days and virtually crippled the bus system in Montgomery. On December 21, 1956, Montgomery's buses were integrated and the boycott was called off. This single event was perhaps the most effective grass roots effort by civil rights activists during the entire Civil Rights Movement. Much of its success is owed to Mrs. Rosa Parks.

Mr. Speaker, Mrs. Parks is known to many as the tired seamstress who refused to move to the back of the bus because her "feet hurt." This characterization is not only inaccurate, it is very unfair to Mrs. Parks. Rosa Parks was a dedicated member of the NAACP who was well aware of the larger struggle for racial justice. Her life as a civil rights activist has been exemplary, one that should serve as an example for all people concerned with promoting racial equality. I urge my colleagues to join me today in honoring Mrs. Rosa Parks for her commitment to civil rights.

PAY RAISE FOLLIES

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, with much of the press ballyhooing the payraise as a ripoff and a congressional boondoggle there were some beacons of light in both the electronic and print media who had the courage to cast the payraise issue in an ethical and realistic framework. Both Nancy Dickerson, of Fox Television News, in a broadcast on February 1, and Bob Talbert, writing for the Detroit Free Press on February 6, both pointed out the bottom line on the pay-raise issue: if the Congress does not permit the pay raise to take effect, the American people will be the ultimate losers. These commentators rightly argue that if we fail to pay our Federal judges and top Federal administrators a realistic wage, the exodus of talent from the executive and judiciary branches will be enormous. I couldn't agree with them more:

NANCY DICKERSON'S FOX TELEVISION NEWS COMMENTARY

Should congress get a pay raise and should they vote on it, publicly, one way or another?

The answer to the first question is yes. Yes, they should get a raise. And the answer to the second is no, they should not vote on it publicly because if they do, they will defeat it because voting yourself a raise is the most unpopular thing a congressman can do. So, unless congress decides to change it, the current plan provides that judges, other top government officials and congressmen get a raise without congress voting directly. This is not a sneaky device; it's the same way we determine which unnecessary military bases to close because no congressman wants a base in his district closed no matter how obsolete it is. So an impartial group makes the unpopular decision. In this case, salary increases were recommended by a commission headed by Lloyd Cutler, the distinguished Washington lawyer. He tells me that if congress votes publicly, the whole carefully crafted plan will fail.

In the past 20 years the general public has done better in real wages, has done better than congress, by 35%. In fact the entire structure of government results in top officials who are underpaid, their salaries not commensurate with the awesome responsibilities they bear. We must attract the very best that America produces. Under the current system good men can't afford to work here or to run for office unless they are rich. That doesn't make sense and may explain the low caliber of some bureaucrats.

Remember, you pay for what you get. And since government officials, congress in particular, decide so many crucial things about my life—I want the very best and believe me, I'm willing to pay for it.

I'm Nancy Dickerson and that's my commentary.

APATHY THAWS OUT AS NATION'S EMOTIONS RISE

(By Bob Talbot)

Emotions are running high, aren't they?

Sometimes they turn to blind rage—or sometimes into a blindfold.

Everyone, everywhere you turn, seems to be getting all emotional about something.

In one way this is good, even terrific. People are coming down on one side of an issue or the other. No wishy-washy fence-straddling here. No "who cares" and "why bother".

The fact that we are concerned, the fact that we are taking sides openly and noisily speaks well, if loudly, about us as a people.

As a people we seem to go through phases: periods of silence or speaking out. Right now, it's Stand Up and Speak Out Time in America. Some periods we say nothing about nothing. Sit on our hands, reserve our opinions, possibly because we're afraid they wouldn't jibe with everyone. Make no waves. Status quo.

I have to hand it to Ralph Nader and talk-show hosts like WXYT-AM's Roy Fox who emotionalize on the issue of federal pay raises, mobilizing it into a rage against the people we entrust to run out national government, rule on court cases and run programs.

We get the government we deserve and pay for. If we pay our legislators enough, we will attract the best and brightest who now wouldn't touch government on a bet.

If we pay our judges enough, the best and brightest in the law would seek the positions.

If you pay people a wage they are happy with, they are loyal to you. If we allow the single-issue Political Action Committees and the payers of favor-currying honoraria to pay our legislators more than we do, then guess who they are going to be more loyal to? Our votes and support don't mean beans when the PACmen come knocking and reminding.

If you think our congressmen acted like a bunch of chicken-skinned, yellow-livered, noodle-spined hypocrites during this whole thing—you are exactly right. Know why? That's exactly the sort of person you're going to get for that job at the price we pay them in this day and time.

We're getting discount legislators at discount prices and they're giving us discount government. And if the current methods of giving government workers pay raises remain in place, we'll soon be getting garage-sale legislators at garage-sale prices giving us garage-sale government.

So, I differed totally with the no raise, no-way attitude of Roy Fox and others who helped crank up the anti-government bandwagon early. I did appreciate Roy's kind offer to a Tea Bag critic like me to come on his show Tuesday "to get in on the fun," as he said.

I declined because "that's your fun, Roy, not mine." Fun, to me, is when energy is spent and progress is made. No matter what you say and do, there's no way I see any sort of progress in what the anti-pay raise forces have accomplished.

But I never became emotionally involved in the issue. I preferred the reasoned way of intellect and logic, which didn't seem to matter in this case from the start. Nothing was going to change America's decade-long mind-set against raising taxes and hiking the pay of our lawmakers.

Conservative, fed-up America is saying: don't throw money at problems and don't throw money at legislators because it won't do any good.

The populist backlash against the pay raise is our most glaring and extraordinary instance of emotions running high these days. But "highly emotional" is the state many are in.

In the last 24 hours, I've had people get extremely emotional with me about:

Hot singer Bobby Brown not showing up for his Sunday night Joe Louis Arena concert because the promoters said he was sick. My complainers heard he was "partying at the Pontch" and decided not to perform because it was his birthday.

Neil Diamond, wanting to open up great seats to his fans, making the Palace renege on promises to its Royal seat-holders ($5,000 a seat) for tickets to every show.

The movie "Mississippi Burning" for slandering Mississippi and the South in the '60s. That from a couple who worked there then in the civil rights movement.

Abortion, in every way, shape and form. I've yet to meet anyone without an opinion on this, or one with an opinion I thought was going to change.

Closing Detroit Catholic churches is proving so much more emotional than the Detroit Catholic hierarchy imagined; it doesn't know how to handle what it hadn't bargained for.

The next step after emotions running high is emotions running away. That next step is worrying me.

COSTLY PRESIDENTIAL INAUGURATION CEREMONIES

HON. TIM JOHNSON

OF SOUTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, with each Presidential inaugural in recent years, there have been sharp increases in costs—both public and private.

Although it is difficult to regulate private expenditures by corporations and individuals, we can hope that common sense will prevail in the future and lead to greater restraint and respect for the dignity of the occasion.

With respect to public costs, we can and should make an effort to see that taxpayer dollars are not used to pay for lavish balls and other private activities. The expenditure of public funds should be limited—as much as possible—to public activities such as the actual swearing-in ceremony and necessary security protection for the President, Vice President, their families and other inaugural participants. I have introduced legislation (H.R. 587) to move that goal.

Two South Dakota newspapers last month printed excellent editorials which deal with this subject, and I recommend them to my colleagues for serious consideration.

One editorial is from the January 18 issue of the Yankton Daily Press and Dakotan, where Noel Hamiel is editor:

INAUGURATION'S PRICE TAG SENDS WRONG MESSAGE

Ugh.

That's our reaction to the reports that Friday's inaugural for incoming President George Bush will cost $32 million.

For those of you who thought that Ronald Reagan set a new standard for pomp and spending, you were right. But it was mostly OK. It was reassuring. The country needed to see the commander in chief on a fancy pedestal. The president of the United States ought to be surrounded by a certain amount of gilt and glitter.

But step aside now for real power partying on Jan. 20, when Mr. Bush takes the oath of office.

The president-elect makes no apologies for the tab, most of which is being picked up by private concerns. But just because corporate high-rollers write checks for $25 million, and the public pays $7.1 million, doesn't make this entertainment extravaganza any less offensive. Why does everything have to be show-biz instead of just traditionally ceremonial?

Although we never were all that impressed with Jimmy Carter carrying his own luggage, he got by on just $3 million when he was sworn in, a mere 10th of the cost of the Bush gala.

Is this the sort of example the new administration should be setting for fiscal restraint? It's like the company president who tells his employees that it's been a bad year and there's no money for raises—and then he redecorates his office, complete with bar and and hot tub.

The country no doubt is looking forward to the inauguration ceremony and all that goes with it. We are too. Yet this event is shaping up as another example of the profligate spending that sends entirely the wrong signal to those who have deep concerns about the have-nots in this country, and the debt.

The other editorial is from the January 22 issue of the Huron Daily Plainsman, where Roger Kasa is editor:

INAUGURAL SPENDING TAB DOESN'T HELP GOP IMAGE

According to news accounts, the cost of President Bush's three-day inaugural festival cost $32 million.

If that's true, and we have no reason to believe otherwise, we suggest it is time for the American people to question such extravagant spending for such a simple, yet historical, ceremony. Granted, the swearing-in ceremony for the president and vice president is a grand event, but is it necessary to spend that much money?

At a time when the Republican Party is battling the image that it is the "party of the rich," we would have thought that the party's current leader would have tried to turn that image around by planning an inaugural that was more affordable.

As the Yankton Press and Dakotan noted editorially, before the inaugural event, "the president-elect makes no apologies for the tab, most of which is being picked up by private concerns. But just because corporate high-rollers write checks for $25 million, and the public pays $7 million, doesn't make this entertainment extravaganza any less offensive. Why does everything have to be show biz instead of just traditionally ceremonial?

Closer to home, Craig Wenzel, in his column in the weekly Wesington Springs True Dakotan, writes: "I know my desk is an easier place to run the country than the Oval Office, but this is incredible. With people starving right here in America . . . with farmers scrimping to make ends meet . . . small businesses closing all over the Midwest . . . senior citizens struggling to make Social Security checks last a month . . . with more than 4,000 homeless people in South Dakota alone, there must be better places to sink that kind of cash."

We admit that at the start of the recent political campaign it was our opinion that George Bush didn't stand a chance. He was nothing but a wimp. And after he announced his choice for vice president, we thought the coffin was nailed shut.

The long, weary political campaign didn't do much to change our mind about that image. But then, we weren't very impressed with the other candidate either.

On Nov. 4, the people decided they wanted Bush to lead the country for the next four years. And since election night, Bush seems to have made a complete turnaround. He now looks and acts like the leader this country needs to carry on after eight years of Ronald Reagan.

That's why we are having some difficulty in understanding why Bush feels it is necessary to spend $32 million to take the oath of office. Sure, it's a once-in-a-lifetime experience (Bush is probably hoping he will have two shots at it), but with the many problems facing the Bush administration and the nation as a whole, we feel he is sending the wrong signal to the American people. He says he wants to be a president for all the people. At the moment, we would say he's certainly not afraid to spend our money.

A CASE OF EXTREMES

HON. NEWT GINGRICH

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, the following is an editorial from the Clayton News Daily. It explains through a perfect example how the principle of separation of church and State can be taken to an extreme. While the Founding Fathers wisely recognized the inherent risks of a government sponsored religion, they did not intend to disallow the State from recognizing religion as a valid part of society. I would urge my colleagues to read this editorial.

[From the Clayton News Daily, Jan. 4, 1989]

WE REGRET THE RULING

Our sentiments about yesterday's 11th Circuit Court of Appeals ruling which bans pre-game invocations at public school athletic events are pretty much the same as those of Jonesboro attorney Larry Foster, a member of the State Board of Education and former attorney for the county school system.

We hate it and we hoped against hope that it would not come down as it did. However, we expected it.

Historically, this nation has been committed to the separation of church and state since its earliest days.

The trend in recent years, though, has been to interpret this commitment as erecting a complete barrier which bars almost any interaction between the two.

The always emotional question gets more difficult to decide when it is asked in terms of church-school relations.

Part of the growth of church-sponsored private schools over the last three decades has been due to the legal restrictions which have been placed on the relationship between the schools and religion.

As Mr. Foster pointed out, though, we are located within the 11th Circuit and—even if we should ignore this decision—that would be the court which would decide any case stemming from our local school system's action.

What the 11th Circuit rules is, in effect, the law until it is changed by a higher authority—either overturned by the U.S. Supreme Court or overruled by congressional action.

Since the Supreme Court has been ruling similarly over the years in cases involving church-state relations, we have to think they are not likely to overturn the Douglas County decision.

That means that if there are going to be any changes in the future, they will have to be enacted by Congress.

In the past, Sixth District Congressmen Newt Gingrich (who represents both Clayton and Douglas counties) has been supportive of local school systems who want to allow access to their facilities on an equal basis to all.

We think the time has come for some action to be taken which will set this nation back on a more equitable and reasonable foundation when it comes to the separation of church and state.

HONORING JOHN V. SCHMIDT

HON. BOB McEWEN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Mr. John V. Schmidt, who has received the 1988 Ohio Tree Farmer Award. His is truly an example of wise land management. His dedication to conservation, to understanding the forest, and to multiple use of forest resources while maintaining the forest beauty certainly makes him the best possible recipient of the Ohio 1988 Tree Farmer of the Year.

Caring for a farm such as his is no simple task. The use he and his family have made over their 100-year history of the educational and conservation tools of the Forest Service and Extension Services make the Schmidt Tree Farm certainly one of a kind.

He has also been nominated for the American Forest Council's Northeast Regional Tree Farmer of the Year Award. I can think of no better recipient. A man of diverse and interesting background, ranging from NCAA champion pole vaulter, Broadway singer, TV broadcaster for Ohio State basketball games, Ohio State University professor, and extenison specialist, Mr. Schmidt truly exemplifies the kind of person in whose hands we can trust our Nation's forests.

Mr. Schmidt's philosophy concerning forest conservation and forest has led him to these great achievements. I think no man can best describe it than himself. To this end, I would submit the following article for your interest. Taken from his address at the Ohio Forest Association Tree Farm Awards Luncheon, these words best explain Mr. Schmidt's belief in conservation combined with the sound management and use of our Earth's resources.

OFA/TREE FARM AWARDS LUNCHEON: 1988 TREE FARMERS OF THE YEAR JOHN AND MARY SCHMIDT

(By Mrs. Bert Silvius, Dundee, OH)

"One of the Hallmarks of the frontier tradition here in America is that of the trail blazing frontiersmen who opened this land to settlement and farming communities. Manifest destiny, a vision of one united community from sea to sea, was the password on the lips of every American citizen. This philosophy was strongly rooted in what Aldo Leopold called the Abrahamic concept of land use and management—that the highest purpose of any natural resource was to be found in the service of God's highest creation—man."

With this opening statement, John V. Schmidt began his presentation at the Ohio Forestry Association Annual Tree Farm Awards Luncheon, as he and his wife, Mary, were honored as the 1988 Ohio Tree Farmers of the Year. The luncheon also featured the recognition of new tree farmers and outstanding tree farm inspectors, in addition to several individual awards, and special songs sung by Schmidt.

"With the advent of the 20th century, this attitude began to change," Schmidt went on. "This Abrahamic, or intensely extractive concept, has been slowly giving way to an ecologically healthier point of view. This new attitude is mirrored in what Aldo Leopold referred to as his concept of the man/land community—a philosophy of partnership in which mankind's responsibilities to his other community members on this earth must always equal his rights of resource extraction from the land."

"The impact of this philosophy is manifested in the rise of our national and state systems of parks and forests. The changing resource management practices of our federal, state and local governments are here on display."

"Now as a nation, we must judge the progress of these management practices by diverse standards: the renewal of beauty, the recreational and educational opportunities, and last but not least, the economic perspective."

"However, it is my firm belief that the acid test of the success of today's resource management practices will be seen in the results that you and I and all other private landowners produce here in the United States and throughout the world."

"The promotion of biological and ecological diversity on our 'space ship' earth is a delicate balancing act between the forces of protection and extraction. The often diverging concerns of conservation and of economic growth must both be answered. To this end, the technique of conflict management most often employed in the public sector of land-management is diversification, or the application of the multiple use concept. Broadly stated, the mandates of our national parks and forests generally mention this multiple use concept and translate it into timber, wildlife and mineral resource management: recreational and educational activities; as well as wilderness designation and protection."

"But what of you and me? What is our mandate? In focusing on this issue, let me begin with one family's history on the land here in Ohio. That of my family."

"Back in 1985, my grandfather, Fred Schmidt, Sr., began clearing more than 600 acres of Ross and Pike County hills. His aim was to convert the land to cattle pastures. To this end, he hired six 'squatter' families to clear the land. After they burned and slashed their way through the timber, they had cropping privileges for three years. Crossties, posts, tanbark and hickory butts were sold."

"When we hear of the deforestation of South America's rain forests the parallels strike home hard. It is a classic case of human beings seeking to survive and prosper in the only way they knew how by an intensive exploitation of the land".

"Fortunately, the United States has developed into one of the world leaders in the science of forest resource management. We now have the technical expertise to seek that balance of protection and extraction which is, I hope, the goal of every sensitive observer of the natural world".

"In 1926, my dad, J. P. Schmidt, took over the management of our home place. Being a firm believer in managing with an eye to the future, he actively sought the advice of Ohio's foremost forestry professionals of the day such as Forest Dean, O. A. Alderman, Frank Needham and many others.

"Through the practices of selective cutting and occasional clear cuts, to manage for disease, along with other forest management problems, dad put their good advice to work."

"In 1929, J. P. Schmidt, then a professor of rural sociology at Ohio State University, also took over the direction of Ohio's Farmers' Institute. Following his strongly held beliefs of forest/land management, he enlisted the forestry division personnel as instructors and encouraged the developing school community forests."

"As the years passed, the timber on our farm slowly made a comeback and the erosive effects of the squatters pressure passed away. In 1944, dad began building the first of three farm ponds under the land improvement program of the Soil Conservation Service. In 1947, he was instrumental in the formation of a survey research group directed by state service forester, Frank Needham of Chillicothe. The goal of this group was to study the possible utilization and marketing of Ohio's forest products. By 1948, the first full timber survey of our farm was completed. It was in the early 1950's that service forester, Byron Kent, first began cruising and marking timber for our family. Looking back today, from the perspective of his several decades of association with our family, it is easy to see how both our family and our forests have benefited from this advice in forest management and product marketing."

"Through the '50's and '60's, dad looked to Pete Cross to cut our timber, and during this time, dad turned to my cousin, Edward Schmidt, to manage the day to day operations suggested by forester Kent. It was midway through the '60's that I first took on the responsibilities of the overall management of the family farm. By this time my wife, Mary, and I determined that we would continue my dad's programs aimed at sustained yields of timber, while expanding into the area of farmland recreation."

"To this end, our system of stocked farm ponds was expanded to a total of five, two of which have sand beaches for the swimmers. Then Mary and I instituted a program of cabin rentals, with cousin Eddy and his wife, Martha, managing the on-site rentals and activities of this program. In addition, we graded and improved many of our old logging roads. This enabled us to add the extra recreational activities of trail hiking and horseback riding."

"In just the last few years the sustained yield forest management practices of the past five deades have paid tremendous dividends toward our overall farm revenues. I've continued to rely on the expertise of Byron Kent who now works as an independent forestry consultant and now our new Service Forester, Lee Crocker, who has also given us the benefit of his excellent advice and experience. We have also been quite fortunate to find a logging contractor like Perry Mustard, whose harvesting techniques are environmentally sound."

"Our goal has been to leave as few scars as possible on standing timber from felling or dragging logs. Damage to our streams, watersheds, and roads are repaired after the cutting of each compartment. In the last three years, we have selectively marked and cut seven tracts."

"In addition, we have further expanded our operations to maple syrup production. If nothing else, we expect to gain some good experience and have some fun with our new sugar operation."

"Today, the only remaining evidence of our squatters' presence are a few remnant stones of their cabin foundations. Now that the more destructive methods of land use are beginning to fade and the public views of conservation and development are being educated, our mandate as landowners seems to have become much clearer. In the '80's the concept of eco-development is gaining acceptance in our country, as in most of the developing nations throughout the world. I feel that sustained development, both agricultural and industrial, must be based upon intelligent and sensitive resource management practices."

"Ohio is one of the world's major regions of hardwood lumber production and research tells us our success is due largely to the efforts of Ohio's private landowners and their willingness to seek and take good advice from forestry professionals. This also includes the efforts of organizations such as the Ohio Forestry Association which provide a valuable forum for our exchange of views and news."

In conclusion. Schmidt said: "It may not be too easy to judge our own success or failure in achieving the global goals of ecologically sound development through the local perspective of Ohio's forest products industry. I trust that these Ohio forests will hear testimony to future generations of our honest efforts to give back to the land as much as we have received."

In his introduction of Schmidt, Lee Crocker, nominating forester, noted that during the time John was away from the farm he helped produce many educational films on forestry while at Ohio State University. "Just as a tree is tied to his roots, so was John," he said. "He continued to come back to the farm whenever it was possible. Today we honor John and Mary Schmidt as Tree Farmers of the Year because they understood the principles of nature and forestry and they also practiced them for the wise use of their forest."

TRIBUTE TO FREDERICK CLOUD, JR.

HON. BOB CLEMENT

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. CLEMENT. Mr. Speaker, today I want to call to your attention the heroic efforts of a member of the Metropolitan Nashville Police Department.

His name is Frederick Cloud, Jr. On January 2, 1987, a very cold day in Nashville, Officer Cloud risked his life to save the life of a woman who was distraught and jumped from the Martin Luther King, Jr. Memorial Bridge into the icy waters of the Cumberland River.

Without regard to his own personal safety, Officer Cloud jumped into the river and saved the woman's life. This heroic deed should not go unnoticed.

Officer Cloud displayed the kind of courage and bravery that truly went above and beyond his call of duty. He is a shining example of a true hero not only to his fellow officers, all Nashvillians and Tennesseans, but to every person in our Great Nation.

On February 8, Officer Cloud was recognized by the U.S. Coast Guard. He received their highest meritorious award for a citizen—the Coast Guard Silver Award.

No tribute can reflect my own personal appreciation of his actions, but I do urge each and every member of the U.S. House of Representatives to take note of his deeds. He is an example of an American hero in which we can all be proud.

I have enclosed the following news article which offers more detail of his lifesaving effort:

[From the Tennessean, Jan. 2, 1987]

HEROISM AND "LUCK" SAVE WOMAN IN RIVER

(By Lacrisha Butler)

An alert police officer, a heroic rescue and a fateful landing combined to save a woman's life after she plunged into the chilly waters of the Cumberland River yesterday.

"It was stupid. It was stupid," Penny Evans, 29, of 1813 Manchester Ave., told paramedics after she was pulled from the river about 10:30 a.m. "My chest is hurting bad."

She was listed in good condition last night in Vanderbilt Hospital.

Police said she jumped from the Martin Luther King Jr. Bridge in Bordeaux after an apparent spat earlier in the morning with her boyfriend, Michael Farmer, of the same address.

But Evans phoned The Tennessean late last night from her hospital room to insist that she fell off the bridge into the river after "drinking" throughout the night and just before the incident.

"I was definitely not trying to commit suicide. I don't even have the courage to jump off a bridge," she said.

Evans, who said she was a self-employed typist, said she asked her boyfriend to stop the car because she felt ill and got out of her car to vomit over the bridge rail.

"I leaned over the rail and the next thing I knew was that I was falling," she said.

She confirmed that she and Farmer had a spat, but she said they had made up and were headed home.

"We're very fortunate to have gotten to her and I'd say she's very fortunate to have been rescued," said Lt. John Manning, who attributed Evans' survival in part to quick action by his partner, officer Fred Cloud. The two were the first officers on the scene.

In assessing how Evans survived the 100-foot fall, police also cited quick action by a passing police officer and the river's southwesterly flow.

Off-duty police Sgt. Shirley Davis was crossing the bridge on Clarksville Highway about 9:45 a.m.—the same time Evans and her boyfriend were driving north on Clarksville Highway.

Police said Evans opened the door of the car, ran across two lanes of traffic and jumped off the east side of the bridge.

Davis immediately alerted other police.

Evans was pulled south swiftly by the current, estimated at between 5 and 8 mph, near the west bank.

The National Weather Service said the air temperature was about 38 degrees at 10 a.m. About that time, Officers Cloud and Manning had worked their way to the area behind Marathon Petroleum Co., 2920 Hydes Ferry Road, near where the Illinois Central railroad trestle crosses the river.

Cloud jumped into the river and pulled Evans out almost a mile from where she splashed in.

"When we heard her hollering, that completely surprised me," Manning said. "We could hear her screaming, but we couldn't see her—there was thick underbrush.

"And we both kept hollering: 'We're coming to you! We're coming to you!' "

Cloud said he walked along the railroad bridge until he "spotted what I thought was her." Both officers then started down the 150-foot river bank.

"After I got off the trestle . . . I started going down the river bank," Cloud said. "I grabbed a tree limb of a dead tree and it broke. I hit on my bottom and I started sliding.

"When I got her in sight, I dove in. The current helped bring her to me.

"She was just floating in a ball when I got to her. I just pulled her in."

Cloud said that when he reached Evans he was not sure if she was still alive.

"She said: 'Am I still here?' " he recalled. "I said: 'Oh yeah, you're going to be here for a while.' "

Manning said that without his partner's heroic rescue, Evans probably would not have survived.

"I don't think there's any question about it," he said. "Officer Cloud showed great heroism, not only risking his life, but, in my opinion, if it hadn't been for him, I don't think she would have made it."

Cloud shrugged off the praise.

"I'm not a hero," he said. "Other officers would have done it. I'm just a police officer doing a job."

Officer Ed Moran said the fact that the current swept Evans to the west bank helped save her life.

"If she had come up on the other side, there's no way she would have made it," he said. "We wouldn't have been able to get to her."

INTRODUCTION OF THE CAPITAL INVESTMENT ACT OF 1989

HON. LES AuCOIN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to join my colleague from Washington, SID MORRISON, in the introduction of the Capital Investment Act of 1989.

Two weeks ago in his State of the Union speech, President Bush put the tax treatment of capital gains back on the legislative front burner. While I applaud his interest in stimulating investment, I am concerned that his proposal only covers investment in equity securities and it does not provide enough incentives for investors to make long-term financial commitments to U.S. industry.

The major difference between the President's plan and the Capital Investment Act is simple: our bill gives investors a greater incentive to make a long-term financial commitment to U.S. industry. By creating a more stable investment climate, this will allow the company to engage in strategic long-term planning. And this gets us closer to the goal we all share: the creation of more American jobs.

President Busch has proposed that most assets held for 3 or more years be taxed at a rate of 15 percent. Under our bill, an asset that is held for 5 or more years will not be taxed at all. For assets held from 3 to 5 years, 60 percent of the gain would be excluded from taxation. And for assets held from 1 to 3 years, 40 percent of the gain would be excluded. Our bill would also reduce the corporate rate from 34 to 20 percent.

Our bill provides a greater reward for venture capitalists if they keep their money invested in a U.S. company for a long period of time. By creating a more stable investment climate, this will allow the company to engage in strategic long-term planning.

All too often, the debate over the taxation of capital gains focuses on the immediate beneficiaries—the venture capitalists. We hear that reducing the capital gains rate is only a tax break for the rich.

I totally disagree.

First of all, under the Capital Investment Act a person who uses their money to buy a Mercedes Benz, a diamond ring or some priceless artwork will not be given a tax break if those items appreciate. So-called collectibles are excluded from our bill.

Our bill only provides a break to those who are willing to invest in American companies and American jobs. Our message is simple: if you have extra money, are willing to make a long-term investment in an American company, and that company happens to be successful, then and only then would you get a tax break.

Isn't that better than seeing their money go to less productive uses?

We have to remember that the ultimate beneficiaries of investment are not just the investors, but the workers and consumers as well.

Like every other State in the Nation, Oregon stands to reap tremendous benefits if we can create a strong investment climate. This is especially true in two industries: high technology and timber.

Twenty years ago, Washington County, OR, was dotted with a sprinkling of high technology companies. In 1978, however, the Congress dramatically cut the capital gains rate. Since then, this area has exploded. Venture capitalists came in and fueled the development of over a hundred new companies in what is now known as Silicon Forest. Companies like Support Technologies, Bipolar Intergrated Technology, Mentor Graphics, NW Instrument Systems, Sequent, and the Metheus Corp. might never have gotten off the ground if there weren't people out there willing to take a chance with their capital. These and other companies that were launched with capital now employ thousands of Oregonians.

Let's look at the high technology industry on a national level. According to the American Electronics Association, in the 3 years before 1978, venture firms committed only $950 million in new business ventures. In the 3 years following the capital gains cut, $2.6 billion was invested—an increase of almost 300 percent. From 1978 to 1987, when the capital gains rate was low, that industry created over 1 million additional jobs. Industry payrolls rose from $24 billion to over $72 billion.

Oregon's timber industry literally grew up on the basis of a favorable capital gains rate. The risk involved in growing timber is often higher than encountered in other investments. Weather, disease, insects, and fires can adversely affect this industry. A favorable capital gains treatment tempers the risks to a great extent. It also serves as an incentive for reforestation and as an inducement for prudent forest management.

That's one reason why the Oregon Small Woodlands Association supports the reestablishment of a capital gains differential. As they said in a letter to me last year:

The 1986 act (which eliminated the capital gains break) effectively doubled the tax bill of small tree farmers . . . That means less money available to improve the timber stand and to replant after harvest. The long-term impacts on Oregon are substantial and negative.

Mr. Speaker, I don't need to remind everyone that countries like Japan, Taiwan, and West Germany are knocking our socks off in the international marketplace. How can we make America competitive again? Is a question we are still grappling with.

There are many reasons why these countries are doing well. But there's one thing they all have in common—they don't tax capital gains. Is it any wonder that these countries are gobbling up American companies? Surely there is some correlation to the increasing level of foreign investment in the United States and the fact that their governments encourage their investors to take risks.

I believe it's time for us to strike back, to get our industry back into the ball game. U.S. industry needs a shot in the arm. We need to encourage those with money to take risks. We need to resurrect the innovative spirit that once drove this country to greatness. I believe that lowering the capital gains tax rate is one way to accomplish that.

I encourage my colleagues to support this legislation.

HONORING RALPH LIBERATO

HON. DENNIS M. HERTEL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. HERTEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Ralph A. Liberato, the chairperson of the Macomb County Democratic Party. Ralph has been selected "Democrat of the Year" by the 14th District Democratic Party, and will be recognized for this honor on February 26, 1989.

Ralph grew up in the Detroit area and attended Madison Heights High School. He received his B.A. from Wayne State University. He is also completing requirements for his M.A. in industrial relations at Wayne State University in Detroit, MI.

Ralph served his country by joining the U.S. Marine Corps. He became a marine when he was only 15 years old. Ralph fought for his country with distinction in World War II.

From 1952 to 1957, Ralph worked at the General Motors Technical Center, and served as committee chairperson of the shop committee and as president of the United Automobile Workers Local 160. During this time, Ralph served on the civil service commission of the city of Warren, MI. In 1958, Ralph was elected president of the Macomb County AFL-CIO, where he served until 1968. And from 1968 to 1988, Ralph continued with the AFL-CIO as secretary-treasurer of the Metropolitan Detroit AFL-CIO.

Throughout the years, Ralph has been a dedicated member of the Democratic Party. He represents the Democratic Party as a precinct delegate, and has since 1960. Ralph was also elected as a delegate to the Michigan Constitutional Convention in 1961. And from 1964 to the present, Ralph has served as chairperson of the Macomb County Democratic Party. In 1988, Ralph was chosen as the Michigan Democratic elector in the Presidental election.

Ralph has served his community with dedication and integrity for many years. His tireless work for his community knows no bounds. Whether organizing a spaghetti benefit dinner, or serving as a board member of the Macomb County Community Growth Alliance, Ralph seeks to assist his fellow citizens.

The honor bestowed on him, Democrat of the Year, is richly deserved. My dear colleagues, I ask you to join me, and the many friends of Ralph A. Liberato, in extending sincere congratulations and warmest wishes to a person so very much appreciated throughout the Detroit community and the State of Michigan, for giving so much to so many.

HONORING RABBI AND MRS. MOSHE GREENBERG

HON. CHARLES E. SCHUMER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride and pleasure I call my colleagues' attention to the work of Rabbi and Mrs. Moshe Greenberg on the occasion of the 18th Annual Young Israel of Midwood Dinner held in their honor.

Rabbi Greenberg became the leader of the Young Israel Synagogue during its early and formative years. His farsighted leadership, firm guidance, and wise counsel have been instrumental in this shul's tremendous progress and growth. He has devoted endless hours and energy to solving the problems of and to providing for the needs of both the congregation and the community.

Moshe Greenberg was groomed for Torah scholarship by his father Reb Chaim Dov, a disciple of the famed Slabodka Yeshiva. He continued his early education, after leaving his father's capable tutelage, at the Mestiva Torah Vodaath. While in his early teens, the sainted Goan Harav Aaron Kotler selected him to become one of the original talmidim at the Lakewood Yeshiva. At the time he had the honor of being the youngest talmud in attendance. Finally, he received his smicha from the eminent orthodox leader, the Reverend Posak Horav Moshe Feinstein SHLITA.

His secular scholastic achievements rival his rabbinical ones. Attending college as a married man with four children he gained the distinction of being elected to the Phi Beta Kappa Honor Society. Eventually, he would graduate summa cum laude, third highest in his class at Baruch College. Today, a senior rabbi in Midwood, Moshe Greenberg stands at the helm of one of the largest and most active congregations in Flatbush.

Through all of his work and study, the unsung heroine of Rabbi Greenberg's life has been his wife Evelyn. She has also been an active and concerned member of the community. In her quiet and unassuming way, Mrs. Greenberg has always been supportive of synagogue functions. With her gentle and diplomatic manner she has endeared herself to all who come into her reach. The community values her loyal support and sees her as a true Aishes Chayil.

It is with profound respect that I share with my colleagues the closeness this couple share and the energy they have dedicated to instilling the values of their lives embody into the community in which they live.

SCHOLARSHIP NAMED FOR MAIL CARRIER WHO TOUCHED HOMES

HON. BARNEY FRANK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, when I opened an office in Attleboro, MA, in 1983, after the redistricting which added that city to my district, one of the nicest parts of my new environment was my letter carrier—Walter Livramento. Walter was one of those people who exemplified public service at its best. He took his job seriously while performing it cheerfully. He was conscientious, helpful, and always a pleasure for those who dealt with him. And as the accompanying article from the Sun Chronicle of Attleboro points out, Walter was good at more than his job—he was one of those people who was very good at life.

Walter was active in the Letter Carriers Union in Attleboro, and active in a number of other civic activities. Tragically, Walter died last May of cancer. His death left a void, but it also left many of us with very happy memories of an extraordinary man. One of his good friends, Robert Otrando, who worked with Walter at the Attleboro Post Office has begun a scholarship fund—and nothing could be a more fitting tribute to Walter than this fund which will help deserving young people from Attleboro with their higher education plans.

Robert Ortrando and those who are working with him deserve congratulations for their efforts. At a time when our new President is highlighting the need for greater volunteer efforts, it seems to me that we ought to be giving due recognition to some of those efforts which are already going on, as an example of the sort of thing that can be helfpul.

Mr. Speaker, I want to send my congratulations to those who have begun this fund in Walter Livramento's name, and I ask that the article from the Sun Chronicle of Attleboro be printed here.

[From the Sun Chronicle, Jan. 31, 1989]

SCHOLARSHIP NAMED FOR MAIL CARRIER WHO TOUCHED HOMES

(By Virginia Terhune)

ATTLEBORO.—An Attleboro man has started a scholarship in memory of Walter Livramento letter carrier with the Attleboro post office who died of cancer last May.

The scholarship was started by close friend Robert Otrando, a fellow carrier at the post office.

A scholarship of $300 will be awarded this spring to a senior at Attleboro High School who is planning to continue his or her education.

Otrando said the money is intended to help pay for commuting costs, books or other expenses.

The memorial scholarship is a way of remembering Livramento and the rare quality he had of communicating with people.

"He was really a special person," said Otrando. "He made friends as soon as he walked into the room. . . He just had a way about him. He made you feel special."

Otrando said he and Livramento served as stewards in the local branch of the postal union. They went to meetings together and over time became close friends.

"We could depend on each other," said Otrando. "The friendship just grew day by day."

For almost 10 years. Livramento delivered mail to homes and businesses along County Street.

He took the time to talk to people and get to know them, and many also became his friends.

"He'd go out of his way to help people, and they knew it," said Ortando.

When Livramento fell seriously ill with liver cancer, people who knew him tried to help.

Otrando would sometimes take him an order of broiled haddock—one of his favorite dishes—from the Fish Net on South Main Street.

The restaurant was once on his route, and Livramento used to sometimes stop there for lunch.

Before he was a letter carrier, Livramento was in the Army, Born in New Bedford, he served 21 years before retiring in 1968.

He was a Korean War veteran and was stationed in Germany at the time he retired.

He then joined the U.S. Postal Service in Annapolis, Md. where he worked for 10 years before transferring to Attleboro in 1979.

Livramento was union president of both the Annapolis and Attleboro chapters of the National Association of Letter Carriers.

He was also a member of Attleboro Lodge 463, Loyal Order of the Moose, and the Cape Verdean Veterans' Association of New Bedford.

In addition, he received the Legion of Honor for his volunteer work with the Chapel of Four Chaplains, a group which encourages inter-faith and inter-racial unity.

When Livramento becaume seriously ill with cancer, his wife Regina, who is a registered nurse, took care of him at home.

Walter knew how sick he was, but he never asked, "Why me?" she said. "He would say instead, 'There is a reason, and it is mine to deal with.' "

Mrs. Livramento said she was "honored and proud" that a scholarship was being established in his name.

Her husband had a special quality about him, she said. He was a friendly, open person who was able to establish instant communication.

"He loved people . . . ," said Mrs Livramento. "You weren't just a letter box, you were a person behind that name."

Business people along County Street say they remember Livramento as a soft-spoken man who always had a kind word for everyone.

"He was a genuine, real person—he was very, very special," said Joyce Kelly, owner of Eli's Pizza. "He is very missed."

MEDICARE OUTLIER PAYMENTS

HON. THOMAS J. DOWNEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing legislation today to prevent the Health Care Financing Administration from taking further action to deprive New York and many other States of needed Medicare dollars for very costly cases, called outliers.

When the prospective payment system was enacted, Congress was concerned that a uniform DRG price would not adequately compensate hospitals for treating atypical cases. As a partial solution to this problem, the Congress required the Medicare Program to provide additional payments for these extraordinary cases. The payments outside of the typical DRG payments are called outlier payments.

The main purpose of outlier payments is to recognize extraordinary costly cases. Unfortunately, there is no simple or direct way to measure the cost of an individual patient's stay. Moreover, there is no way to determine whether the costs associated with an individual's stay are appropriate. Current law reflects this difficulty and establishes two proxies for measuring costs.

The first proxy is the length of time a patient stays in the hospital compared to the average patient. Hospitals can claim additional payments for patients with extraordinary long stays compared to other patients classified within the same DRG. These cases are known as day outliers.

The second proxy is a comparison of an individual patient's charges compared to the average patient. Hospitals can claim additional payments for patients incurring extraordinarily high charges compared to other patients classified within the same DRG. These cases are called cost outliers.

Last November, the Health Care Financing Agency [HCFA] implemented regulations that substantially increased the outlier thresholds—the point beyond which a hospital can claim outlier payments. These new thresholds were intended to correct inaccurate previous estimates of outlier payments and decrease the predominance of day outliers.

The decrease in payments for cases that qualified as day outliers was very significant. During 1988, payments for cases that qualified as day outliers accounted for 80 percent of all payments for outliers. Payments for cases that qualified as cost outliers accounted for 20 percent. These new regulations will reduce payments for day outliers from 80 to 45 percent of the total, and increase payments for cost outliers from 20 to 65 percent of the total.

The Prospective Payment Assessment Commission [ProPAC], a Commission explicitly established by the Congress to advise the Congress and the Secretary of HHS, recommended moderation in implementing these regulations and believed they should be phased in over several years. A number of ProPAC commissioners cited the problems this change in outlier payment policy would create for hospitals across the country and especially for those hospitals serving a disproportionate number of low-income patients.

These regulations have had the effect of redistributing hundreds of millions of dollars nationwide and have created financial hardships for hospitals across the country. My legislation would prohibit HCFA from making further changes in Medicare outlier payment policy for 3 years. Moreover, it would require the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services to phase in any future change in this policy. In particular, it would prevent the Secretary from making any change in outlier payment policy that would shift the percentage relationship between payments for day outliers and cost outliers to the total payments for outliers by more than 5 percent during any given year.

The legislation is necessary because hospitals must be given a chance to adjust to the November 1988 regulations. Many will be reeling from the loss of day outliers for quite some time. My legislation will permit the dust to settle. I have attached the language of the bill below:

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. MAINTENANCE OF PERCENTAGE OF OUTLIER PAYMENTS WHICH ARE PAYMENTS FOR DAY OUTLIERS.

Section 1886(d)(5)(A) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395ww(d)(5)(A)) is amended by adding at the end the following new clauses:

"(v) The Secretary shall provide that—

"(I) the day outlier percentage for fiscal years 1990, 1991, and 1992 shall be equal to the day outlier percentage for fiscal year 1989; and

"(II) the day outlier percentage for fiscal year 1993 and each succeeding fiscal year shall be not greater or less than 5 percentage points of the day outlier percentage for the preceding fiscal year.

"(vi) For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'day outlier percentage' means, for a fiscal year, the percentage of the total additional payments made by the Secretary under this subparagraph for discharges in that fiscal year which are additional payments under clause (i).".

SEC. 2. MAINTENANCE OF FORMULA FOR DETERMINING PAYMENTS FOR DAY OUTLIERS.

Section 1886(d)(5)(A)(iii) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395ww(d)(5)(A)(iii)) is amended by striking the period at the end and inserting the following: ", and, in the case of additional payment under clause (i), be derived by applying a percentage to the average per diem payment for the applicable diagnosis-related group, as calculated by dividing the applicable DRG prospective payment rate by the mean length-of-stay for that diagnosis-related group.".

TRIBUTE TO ANNIE RUTH BROWN, PRINCIPAL, NATHAN B. YOUNG ELEMENTARY SCHOOL

HON. WILLIAM LEHMAN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, during my 6 years serving on the Dade County School Board, I became aware that the most important person in a school system is the principal. Also, as a former teacher in public schools, I learned that every principal has his or her own system and personal style. Always, the success of the school was dependent on the effectiveness of the principal.

Mrs. Annie Ruth Brown, principal of Nathan B. Young Elementary School, has her own unique way of running her school and it works very well.

The following story in the January 19 Miami Herald describes how a school with such a principal can truly educate.

TRIBUTE TO ANNIE RUTH BROWN, PRINCIPAL, NATHAN B. YOUNG SCHOOL

When students enter the halls of Nathan B. Young Elementary School, they check any bad habits they may have picked up on the outside at the door.

Inside, they learn to use their hands not for fighting, but for eating, writing and touching. They use phrases like "Excuse me" and write letters to the principal about fights they were involved in or witnessed.

"They are survivalists," Principal Annie Ruth Brown says about the students growing up in drug-ridden neighborhoods surrounding the school at 14120 NW 24th Ave.

"They know how to survive. We need to polish the survival skills, enhance them with the basic skills and produce a child ready for the junior highs."

The staff credits Brown for the changes the children undergo at Young. Since Brown came in 1984, fights have decreased by 95 percent, she said.

Also, students have raised their scores on the state Student Assessment Test enough to have Young removed from the state's deficient list. And Young was named an outstanding school for the 1986-87 and 1987-88 school years for improving its students' Stanford Achievement Test scores.

Brown, who lives in North Miami, said she always wanted to be a teacher. When she was growing up in Jacksonville, she even held "class" for her elementary school classmates on the steps of her house.

She has been an educator for 31 years and joined the Dade system in 1969 as a teacher. Before coming to Young in 1984, Brown was an assistant principal at Royal Green Elementary and principal of Holmes Elementary.

Brown credits staff members for improvements at Young. And she said part of the credit goes to size of the school. With only 516 students, children have names and histories, not numbers.

"I know when they're upset," Brown said, "I know when something happy happened, when a little baby brother or sister is born, when relatives come to visit and when they're having a birthday party."

The school's size makes everyone there feel as though they are part of a family, said Ruth Mobley, the only secretary the school has had since it opened in 1962 as East Opalocka Elementary School with about six portables.

Assistant Principal Phyllis Whitmire said parents are involved in what happens to the school and their children, thanks to Brown.

"If she gets on the phone and calls parents, they would turn the sky over for her," Whitmire said.

This year, parents are working with the school to make the area safer.

The Parents Advisory Council and school staff have met with Opa-locka police to get a light placed outside the school because students sometimes are in the building until 6 p.m. for after-school programs, Brown said.

They also are asking police to fence the school to protect students from drug sellers and buyers. About midday, while students eat their lunch in the cafeteria, drug transactions take place across the street. And the students know what's happening, Brown said.

"That's why they have so many problems; because of the environment they're in." Brown said.

Since she came to the school four years ago, Brown said, the drug traffic has escalated. But while things may have gotten worse on the outside, things have only gotten better inside the walls of Nathan Young.

When Brown arrived, there was at least one fight every day, She asked parents for help. Now they stand outside their doors before and after school to break up skirmishes.

Brown initiated a "hands campaign" her first year. Students who grow up in an environment where fists are used to resolve problems learned their hands should be used for other things.

Another part of the campaign included teaching teachers to use their hands rather than raising their voices to control students. With a peace sign, Brown can silence the cafeteria. With a snap of her fingers, she can grab everyone's attention. By lowering her hands, she can lower students' voices.

Brown also has challenged students' minds to keep them from fighting and to help with their writing. She has students who were participants in a fight or witnesses to one write a letter telling her about the incident, their involvement and why they were there.

The letters also give students practice in writing, an area in which scores are low on the state Student Assessment Test, which measures basic skills in reading, writing and math.

Students love coming to Nathan B. Young, Brown said. Attendance is between 95 percent and 97 percent, and many of the classrooms have 99 percent attendance.

Sean Shannon, 11, just knows it feels good to be at Young. "It feels like being a hero because they teach us a lot of things."

A TRIBUTE TO JOSEPH H. NIXON

HON. JIM JONTZ

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. JONTZ. Mr. Speaker, Joseph H. Nixon of Wabash, IN, will be greatly missed by many of us in the Hoosier State. A community leader and newspaper executive for decades, Joe Nixon was a dedicated civic activist who worked tirelessly to improve the lives of his Hoosier friends and neighbors.

Joe Nixon was chairman emeritus of Nixon Newspapers, Inc., which publishes the Wabash Plain Dealer and the Peru Daily Tribune in my congressional district, as well as nine other newspapers in Indiana, Illinois, and Louisiana.

Joe Nixon served our community in many ways, including terms as president of both the Peru and Wabash Chambers of Commerce. During his tenure with the Peru Chamber, he successfully convinced the Navy to build the Bunker Hill Naval Air Station near Peru. Today, that facility is Grissom Air Force Base, a key link in our Nation's air defenses.

Joe Nixon worked for world peace on trips to South America, Europe, Russia, the Middle East, Asia, and Africa. His efforts for flood control resulted in construction of the Mississinewa, Salamonie, and Huntington Reservoirs in our State.

Joe Nixon began his career in the newspaper business in 1934, as a reporter for the Michigan City Dispatch. He served the Indiana journalistic community for 54 more years, including service as director of the Inland Daily Press Association and president of the Hoosier State Press Association.

Joe Nixon was honored for his public service by many civic groups. The distinctions that he has earned include the Wabash Chamber of Commerce's Distinguished Citizen Award, the Peru Kiwanis Club Community Service Award, the Wabash Valley Association Pioneering Award, the Indiana Council of Churches Christian Service Citation, and the Sagamore of the Wabash.

Joe Nixon devoted his life to serving the communities of northern Indiana, and he will be remembered by all whose lives he touched.

CITIZENSHIP AND NATIONAL SERVICE ACT OF 1989

HON. TIMOTHY J. PENNY

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. PENNY. Mr. Speaker, I have cosponsored the Citizenship and National Service Act of 1989 (H.R. 660) recently introduced in the House of Representatives by Congressman DAVE MCCURDY of Oklahoma. This legislation would create a national service corps to address some persistent problems facing our country while strengthening the ethic of civic obligation. Service would be voluntary but strongly encouraged by Federal education, job training, and other benefits in return for 1 or 2 years of service.

The prospect of national service for all citizens can be supported by both philosophical and practical arguments. On the philosophical side is the idea that every citizen should serve his country in some way, that is, public benefits should be earned through public service. And from a practical standpoint, our Nation faces problems of homelessness, hunger, illiteracy, deterioration of the environment, and a host of others that could be addressed by a well-supervised citizens' corps.

Service in a national program would expand the educational and job training opportunities available to many of our young people, especially the poor. Under our current student loan and grant system, the proportion of poor and minority students enrolling in college is declining. By putting a service-related grant system in place, I believe that we can expand access to higher education in this country. In addition, for those 50 percent of American youth who do not go to college, national service would offer many of them vocational training previously unavailable. It seems to me there is no better way of ending the cycle of poverty and despair that faces many of our youth than through education and job training.

A national service program would also address the cost of student loan defaults—some $1.6 billion in 1987! The National Service Corps would be funded from existing college loan and grant programs, to be phased in over several years. The costs of a national service program would, of course, depend on the level of participation, but I am convinced that the additional costs would be more than returned to society through better educated and training Americans.

It is time to seriously consider a national service plan that gives citizens the chance to address directly some of the ills of our society and be rewarded for their efforts. I urge my colleagues to support the Citizenship and National Service Act.

ASSISTANCE TO THE U.S. TRAVELER GOING OVERSEAS: THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE EXTENDS A HELPING HAND

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the Department of State for taking the initiative to establish a modern advisory system to help Americans planning to travel overseas. A traveler can now call a special number at the Department of State and obtain current information on the advisibility of traveling to certain countries around the world. This newly created program is a step in the right direction and the Department has wisely decided to keep traveling Americans informed about current developments in various regions of the world that could have an impact on the safety of travelers.

A few years ago, a constituent of mine encountered serious difficulties during a vacation in Mexico. She was unaware of the Department's former program which made available written advisories for Americans planning overseas travel. My constituent and many other travelers did not realize that this service existed.

After learning of my constituent's unfortunate experience, I wrote to the Department and strongly encouraged that agency to establish a better system for notifying future travelers and also suggested that the availability of this service be more widely publicized.

Under the new advisory system, a traveler calls (202) 647-5225 at the Department in order to listen to a series of recorded travel advisories. Also included in this modernized information program is guidance for helping U.S. citizens in distress overseas as well as guidance concerning the visa requirements of foreign governments.

In addition, the Department of State plans to place interactive TV equipment in passport offices for use by applicants for U.S. passports.

In the age of aircraft sabotage and foreign airport bombings, the traveling public deserves to have a rapid and accurate way of learning about potential problems in the countries they are about to visit.

I commend the following New York Times article to my colleagues in the Congress.

[From the New York Times, Feb. 5, 1989]

GETTING A DIRECT LINE TO THE STATE DEPARTMENT

(By Betsy Wade)

For 10 years, the Bureau of Consular Affairs in the State Department has been preparing, revising and rescinding informative notices to Americans about travel abroad. These information sheets, or travel advisories, to give them their official name, are based on reports from State Department people in the field. They may be headed "warning" or "caution" or labeled simply "travel to" the country in question, and range from reports on hotel crowding—during an international fair in Baghdad, Iraq, last October, for example—to a continuing warning of the danger of guerrilla land mines in rural areas of El Salvador.

The 46 advisories in effect today include admonitions that would keep prudent United States citizens away from a country altogether, because there are no diplomatic relations or the security situation is perilous, and enumerations of remote areas likely to be hazardous for vacationers. But for all of their obvious value, these reports have remained unknown to most pleasure travelers; to get the information, you had to know that the advisories existed to begin with and then ask someone who had them if there was one in effect for the place you planned to visit.

In other words, for the 10 years these messages have been available, it took pretty aggresive research to learn that the United States Government cautions travelers to Ghana against wearing camouflage jackets or any "clothing or items which may appear military in nature" or that adventure travelers planning to trek in Nepal should register with the United States Embassy before setting out and should never trek there alone because of the danger of being harassed, robbed or kidnapped.

In December the State Department took a modest step toward putting this kind of information directly into the ears of the traveling public. If you use a push-button phone to call 202-647-5225, a number used by the Citizens Emergency Center in the State Department, you will be told to punch particular numbers on your phone for certain areas of the world, further numbers for portions of the alphabet, and then numbers to activate the recording of an advisory applying to the country you want to visit. If you have a long itinerary in mind, you can listen to three advisories before the connection is broken, and then call again to hear three more. (Questions about visa requirements can also be answered.)

Right now, if you use a dial phone to make the call, you are told to remain on the line and an employee comes on to learn which advisories—up to three—you want to hear. If the emergency center is not overloaded, the reports will be read to you. If things are busy, you will get a call back—the Government pays this toll—and the advisories will be read to you then. You may also ask to have pertinent advisories mailed to you.

Until the department gets an additional system that can be activated by voice as well as phone push buttons, people calling on a dial phone will be able to get information only on weekdays between the hours of 8 A.M. and 10 P.M. and on Saturdays from 9 A.M. to 3 P.M., Eastern standard time. Those using a push-button system who want to hear recordings can call at any time. It may be midyear before a sytem for the voice-activated recordings is installed.

The basic purpose of the center's phone service continues to be providing expert help for callers who are anxious about someone missing or jailed overseas, need to arrange to send money to a stranded friend or want information on a storm or crash. Before Dec. 20, the Department's employees who answered on this line would also read travel advisories if asked, but the installation of the recorded service to take the burden of rote work means that emergency advice and action will be provided faster.

On Dec. 21, the day after the recordings were hooked in, the department had to cope with a surge of calls about the crash in Scotland of a Pan American plane flying to the United States. Understandably, the emergency overwhelmed the newly installed recorded advisory service; the department figures show that from Dec. 20 to Dec. 31, 1,090 calls were put through to the task force dealing with the Pan Am crash and 538 callers wanted to hear travel advisories. In the week of Jan. 8 to 14, 670 travel advisory messages were heard by callers either listening to a recording or to a staff person.

Before the recording device was hooked up, the State Department's advisories were posted in passport offices and supplied to big travel agents, major newspapers and airlines. This means your travel agent or your airline probably could have read you the information if you asked, but neither would have been likely to volunteer it.

Newspapers, at least this one, seldom carry travel articles that might encourage visits to places that are subjects of advisory notices. However, new State Department advisories are usually reported in The Times's Travel section, or old ones are noted where appropriate in articles on the country in question.

According to Philip Covington of the Department's Bureau of Consular Affairs, the recent rise in sabotage and terrorist attacks at airports has made the traveling public much more attentive to security matters, and this is part of the reason the department is making its advisory information more accessible.

The next step in this effort will be to place interactive television equipment in passport offices for use by applicants for passports. These TV sets will work like those in supermarkets or shopping malls, where the user presses a key or a spot on the screen to bring up a table of information on a particular topic. The first sets will probably be placed in four agency offices later this year. For the vaguer future is a plan to insert the advisories into computer reservation systems maintained by airlines for themselves and travel agents.

Travel agents and airlines have usually been reluctant to volunteer negative information that they receive from United States agencies, meaning the State Department and the Centers for Disease Control, unless clients specifically ask.

One New York travel agent, Roberta E. Barcelon of Union Tours at 79 Madison Avenue, thinks the display of advisories in the reservations systems would be valuable. "Quite a few people—travelers and travel agents—don't pay attention to what's going on in the world," Ms. Barcelon said. "People pick up tours that are going to parts of the world that aren't particularly safe. With this warning, you could check with the packagers and see if they are going to deviate from the itinerary. Business people always make a contact with people out there, but pleasure travelers do not always know what they are getting into."

Here is a list, as of early January, of the travel advisories in effect that may be heard on the recorded service. The department cautions: "The State Department does not advise avoidance of all travel to most of the nations listed but wishes Americans to be aware of problem areas." It lists these places:

Afghanistan, Angola, Burma, Cambodia, Chad, China, Colombia, Cuba, Cyprus, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guatemala, Honduras, India, Iran, Iraq, Kuwait, Lebanon, Libya, Malaysia, Mozambique, Namibia, Nepal, Nicaragua, North Korea, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Somalia, South Africa, Soviet Union, Sri Lanka, the Sudan, Suriname, Syria, Tanzania, Thailand, Turkey, Uganda, Vietnam, West Bank and Gaza, Zambia and Zimbabwe.

FLORIO HAILS POLICE CHIEF FOR LIFELONG SERVICE

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I bring to the attention of my colleagues a gentleman who is being honored by his community and friends upon the occasion of his retirement for his lifelong commitment to law enforcement. I am speaking of Chief of Police Andrew James Truex, of Pennsville, NJ.

Chief Truex began his career with the Delaware River Port Authority after serving admirably in the U.S. Marine Corps for 3 years. In November 1962, Chief Truex was appointed to the Pennsville Police Department as a patrolman; rising through the ranks with a steadfast determination, he became chief of police in February 1976.

Throughout this time, Chief Truex continually brought an extraordinary professionalism to all of the positions he has held—especially to the office of chief of police. He recognized the need for improvement while maintaining the tradition of excellence which has always been a part of this south Jersey police force. While firm handed and willing to make tough decisions, Chief Truex maintained a policy of fairness and pragmatism with his coworkers as well as the entire community.

It is indeed apparent that the modern, efficient, and responsive force that is the Pennsville Police Department is largely a result of the tireless efforts of Chief Andy Truex. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege for me to join with the chief's wife, Janice, and all of his family and friends in extending my best wishes for much success and happiness in the many years to come.

TRIBUTE TO MAX ROBINSON

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor and pay tribute to a man who will long be remembered as the Nation's first black newsman to anchor a network television program, and the first black to anchor a local television news program in the Washington metropolitan area. I am speaking of a man who never aimed low for what he wanted in life, but instead set his sights among the stars. And for that, we are all the more enriched. This man of whom I speak is Max Robinson. His untimely death on December 20, 1988, at the age of 49, was a tragedy and a great loss to those who knew him personally, and to those who only knew him by way of the medium of television.

Max Robinson's life is not one to be mourned, but one to be celebrated. His talents and perseverance helped cast him to the highest levels of his profession. He started his television career in 1965 in Washington, DC, at WTOP Channel 9 as a floor director trainee. He went on from there to become WRC–TV's first black reporter and to win six journalism awards. Shortly thereafter, Robinson received a major break for a young black reporter when he began doing the local news segment on the "Today" show. But the single most important thing that really boosted his career was a special called "The Other Washington," an Emmy-winning documentary on black life in Anacostia.

A short time later, Robinson was back at Channel 9, combining with Gordon Peterson as the top-rated anchor team in this city. But success would not stop there for him. In 1977, Robinson was the first to broadcast a conversation with Hanafi Muslim leader, Hamass Abdul Khaalis in the Hanafi hostage talkings at three downtown Washington buildings. It was his coverage for that event that attracted ABC executives to him and eventually lead to an anchor position on "World News Tonight" from Chicago.

Max Robinson was a gifted and talented television newsman who achieved a great deal in his life. He was a pioneer who paved the way for many black perspective journalists who were to follow him. He was also a role model for many would-be journalists. He was and will always be a symbol to society.

Truly, Max Robinson will be missed. His integrity, strong will, caring personality, and intelligence will always be remembered. He said it best during his last public appearance:

Try to keep your integrity, because you're going to find out in life that in the end, that's all you've got.

A TRIBUTE TO SAMMIE ROSS ARMSTRONG

HON. JAMES H. BILBRAY

OF NEVADA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. BILBRAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor an outstanding citizen of Las Vegas, Sammie Ross Armstrong. Mr. Armstrong will be honored on March 4, 1989, at the Beta Eta Theta Chapter of Gamma Phi Delta Sorority, a national business and professional women's organization, sixth annual "This Is Your Life" Banquet. He is truly deserving of this honor.

Born in Lisbon, LA, Mr. Armstrong graduated from Lincoln High School in Camden, AR, and studied at Chaffee Junior College in Ontario, CA, for 2 years. In 1964 he decided to make Las Vegas his home, and shortly thereafter, began his driving career at the Clark County School District, transporting handicapped students in specially equipped buses. From the school district, he moved on to work for Transportation Unlimited, at that time one of the largest bus companies in southern Nevada.

His natural management skills and a strong drive to "do it better" led him to purchase his first bus, and in 1975, with partner Douglas Ray McCain, he founded Ray & Ross Transport, Inc. This small business providing bus transportation services to the Las Vegas valley is solely minority-owned. With his careful hands-on attention, the company today is a growing and thriving concern located in west Las Vegas.

Mr. Armstrong has made community involvement an important part of his life. He coached Pop Warner Football from 1970–72. He has served as a deputy constable for the cities of Las Vegas and North Las Vegas since 1979. From 1970–74, he was a member and then chairman of the Clark County School District Transportation Safety Council, during which time he pioneered a prototype safety program which is still in use today. In addition to serving as an active member of the Private Industry Council—Southern Nevada Employment and Training Program—for 4 years, he was instrumental in starting the Las Vegas Chapter of the National Forum of Black Public Administrators in 1986. He worked on the Clark County School District Advisory Board's Student Activity Committee, and is currently an active member of the Clark County Community College Advisory Board.

Mr. Armstrong's years of hard work and dedication to the community have paid off in many tangible ways, the most evident being the number of jobs and specialized training being offered by Ray & Ross. His deep personal commitment to serve the economically disadvantaged neighborhood surrounding his business has not changed, yet he seldom seeks the limelight. Those who have worked closely with him over the past several years consider one of the greatest compliments to his efforts to be his recognition by the State of Nevada as the Minority Small Business Person of the Year for 1985.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Armstrong's contributions and endeavors have literally helped to create the community of Las Vegas as we know it today. I ask my colleagues to join me in commending one of Las Vegas's finest citizens, Mr. Sammie R. Armstrong.

TRIBUTE TO RAYMOND P. NOWOSATKO

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a distinguished veteran of the 16th District in Michigan, Mr. Raymond P. Nowosatko. Stationed in the Pacific, Mr. Nowosatko served over 4 years in the U.S. Army during World War II. He has been a continuous member of the Veterans of Foreign Wars Organization for over 35 years, holding many positions and receiving many awards. Mr. Nowosatko's pride and devotion to the VFW has earned the respect of all who know him. Known as "Doc" or "Ray Now" by his VFW comrades, Mr. Nowosatko is well known for not only the excellence of his service but also for the relentlessness with which he accepts each and every new position and project offered to him. Upon reviewing the lengthy list of his achievements, it is not difficult to understand why he is known as the man who "can't say no."

He has served as commander of Post 5120 three times, as well as junior vice commander, senior vice commander, and commander of the fourth district. In addition, Mr. Nowosatko has distinguished himself as department poppy chairman, national commander's Aide-De-Camp, inspector of VFW national, and hospital chairman of the VA hospital in Allen Park, MI. He has started at least six new VFW posts, signed up over 300 new members, and has received the Four Chaplains Award from the president of the Michigan VFW Womens Auxiliary.

In addition to his honorable activities in the Veterans of Foreign Wars Organization, Mr. Nowosatko has enriched the 16th District with over 22 years of service as a U.S. Postal Service employee. He is the kind of man who constantly thinks of others, and is always willing to help a friend or colleague. Throughout his years with the Postal Service, and to this day, he dresses as Santa Claus during Christmas and gives gifts to each employee of the Dearborn Post Office. Since retirement, he has expanded this to include the Allen Park Post Office. These activities exemplify the kind of spirit Mr. Nowosatko mustered in all of his endeavors.

As a devoted husband and father of four children, Mr. Nowosatko held two jobs for years in order to provide the best life possible for his family. As a dedicated son, he visited his mother twice a day for the last 3 years until her death January 16, 1989, at the age of 94. As a proud grandfather of five, he continues to enrich the lives of his beloved family.

Thus, I see it only fitting on this day that after his many years of dedicated service to others, my colleagues join me in honoring Mr. Raymond P. Nowosatko. His kind nature and unselfish devotion to the VFW, the Postal Service, and his family and friends represent a life truly dedicated to helping his fellow men.

COMMEMORATION OF THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE MOUNT RUSHMORE NATIONAL MEMORIAL

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, in 2 years we will be celebrating the 50th anniversary of the Mount Rushmore Memorial. Today I am introducing legislation which will in many ways help us to adequately celebrate this momentous occasion—an occasion which deserves our recognition, our respect, and our reverent reflection.

The facilities at Mount Rushmore are in desperate need of physical improvements and expansion to accommodate the vast number of tourists that visit the memorial every year. There have been no substantial improvements to the facilities in almost 25 years, and the annual visitation level has nearly doubled since that time. In 1991, we can anticipate an even stronger onrush of visitors who will wish to be a part of the golden anniversary celebrations. To help pay for badly needed renovation to accommodate these tourists, my legislation will call for commemorative coins to be issued which will recognize the golden anniversary of the memorial. Half of the surcharges from the sale of these coins will go toward improving the facilities at Mount Rushmore, and the other half will go toward reducing the national debt.

This bill, which will provide for the issuing of $5, $1, and half dollar commemorative coins, has been introduced by Senators DASCHLE and PRESSLER in the Senate. I would urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this extremely important legislation on behalf of one of America's greatest national shrines—the Mount Rushmore National Memorial.

WHY AMERICANS HATE THE PAY RAISE

HON. NEWT GINGRICH

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to urge my fellow colleagues to read the editorial appearing in the February 7, 1989, issue of the Atlanta Constitution regarding the congressional pay raise. After you read the editorial, however, you'll realize that it is not an argument against the raise. It is an argument for Congress to take a good look at itself. More than hating the idea of a pay raise, Americans hate the fact that it would be going to a Congress which is greedy, self-serving, and corrupt.

WHY AMERICANS HATE THE PAY RAISE

Americans don't merely dislike the idea of a 51 percent pay raise for members of Congress. They hate it. Congressional mail is running vehemently against the plan. In a weekend Gallup poll, 82 percent of those questioned opposed the raise and a scant 15 percent favored it. "People are ready to pick up a brick or a rifle," marveled Rep. Les AuCoin (D-Ore.). "It goes much deeper than the issue, the dollars." People feel alienated from their leaders, he suggested—and they feel an "inability to control events." In short, it's the last straw.

The American people are surely on to something. Thanks to campaign funding by political action committees, members of Congress are virtually assured of re-election unless they're enmeshed in scandal. Such a situation gives citizens the short end of the stick. The system allows wealthy industrial lobbies to kill clean-air legislation. It allows groups like the National Rifle Association to block efforts for safer streets.

What can be done? Often, the answer is "not much." Too many of our politicians are beholden to interests other than those of their home-state voters.

The pay-raise contretemps underscores congressional problems with accountability and credibility. Instead of confronting the issue head-on, Congress devised a scheme. Last week, the Senate voted against the raise, 95-5. Then the House was to vote on the plan, but there was a catch: Its vote was to come after the raise had taken effect at 12:01 a.m. Wednesday. With the increase a fait accompli, House Speaker Jim Wright (D-Texas) would propose to cut it from 51 percent to 30 percent.

It was an outrageously sneaky idea—designed to give each member of Congress a chance to claim a vote in favor of a smaller paycheck without jeopardizing the raise. Those who voted for a 30-percent increase could say they did so because it was better than a 51-percent increase. Those who voted against the 30-percent increase could say they opposed any pay raise.

Americans had every right to be furious—and on Monday the House acknowledged their wrath. It bucked the speaker and forced him to schedule a vote for today—before the raise takes effect.

The irony is: For all the hullabaloo, most of the pay-raise package is overdue. Included in the plan are federal judges (whose salaries would go from a yearly $89,500 to $135,000) and heads of agencies such as the FBI and CIA. Without a pay scale roughly equivalent to that of private enterprise, the quality of the government's workforce could suffer.

Even Congress deserves some raise. A yearly salary of $89,000 may look like a mint to most Americans. Still, members must maintain two homes, one on their home turf and one in Washington, and they face other expenses by virtue of their office.

But what Congress needs more than a pay raise is a stem-to-stern overhaul. The Senate has already voted for one reform in the event of a raise—a ban on honoraria, often a dodge for slipping heavy-duty special-interest money to members for light speaking chores. Beyond that, members must find ways to dilute the impact of political action committees and to bolster their accountability. Pay raises will always be controversial. Yet as public trust grows, the chances for firestorms will diminish.

The raises themselves are not alarming. What is alarming is the blind fury Americans feel toward Congress. Congress should take the money—or some percentage of it—straightforwardly. It should grant raises for judges and others. Then it should take a long, hard look at itself.

DEAN SIMERAL RETIRES AFTER LONG CAREER PROMOTING FARM ISSUES AND AWARENESS

HON. BOB McEWEN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a man who retires this year from spending so much of his time and energy throughout his long career in promoting farm issues and farm awareness, Mr. Dean Simeral.

As vice president for public affairs in the Ohio Farm Bureau, Mr. Simeral worked hard to keep Members of Congress informed about those issues which affect Ohio. During the drought crisis this past summer, moreover, he personally saw to it that the Ohio delegation was kept informed on the situation in Ohio as the Farm Bureau perceived it. But these actions were also examples of his personal dedication to Ohio agriculture. He made himself available with a friendliness and a helpfulness that went beyond devotion to his work. He understood the vagaries of working on Capitol Hill and always managed to find a way to work with the people there to bring out the farm issues so important to Ohio and the Ohio Farm Bureau.

As a native of Jackson County, OH, Mr. Simeral's commitment to public service started in the armed services. He fought for his country during World War II in the Air Force. Only after the war did Mr. Simeral follow his private calling, which led him to Bowling Green State University, where he graduated with a degree in business administration. But his roots in Ohio and his commitment to agriculture brought him back to public service in the Ohio Farm Bureau, which acts as an advocate for the many farmers in Ohio.

Mr. Simeral started with the Farm Bureau in 1949 as the organization director for Lorain County, OH. As his abilities in this area became apparent, Cuyahoga, Huron, and Summit Counties were added to his district. Eventually his expertise became available statewide upon his appointment as director of State activities for the public affairs department. This area proved to be his forte, for he eventually rose to the position of vice president for public affairs. In his capacity his responsibilities were for the organization's legislative and policy development program, a position which often took him around the State of Ohio and to Washington, thus giving both the farmers in Ohio and the Members of Congress the benefit of his insights into agriculture.

His contributions to agriculture have been recognized by many awards, including the Future Farmers of America Distinguished Service Award, the Meritorious Award for Distinguished Contributions to Agriculture from Ohio State University, and the College of Agriculture Centennial Award, as well as many others. His most recent awards include the National Friend of Extension Award, and the FFA degree. The variety and number of these awards serves to highlight both the expertise and devotion which has characterized Mr. Simeral's long and prosperous career. Like any well-rounded and respected person, he has not confined his activities solely to work and agriculture. In his community of Reynoldsburg, where he resides with his wife Ruth, Mr. Simeral is also known for his participation in his community and church. Whether private citizen or public official, Mr. Simeral dedicates himself to working for the good of those around him.

January 1, 1989, Mr. Simeral retired from his work at the Ohio Farm Bureau, leaving an example that will be difficult to follow. His advice and presence will be sorely missed, as will his personal warmth and humor. However, I am sure that he will continue to contribute his advice to the farming community and the many upcoming important farm legislation proposals, such as the upcoming 1990 farm bill discussions. Though Mr. Simeral's visits to my office will certainly be missed, I wish him a well-earned, restful, productive retirement with his wife and three grandchildren. I also look forward to hearing his voice in the future, since one of his knowledge will certainly continue to contribute to the farming community.

All of us who are privileged to call Dean a friend will miss him, but our lives have been immeasurably increased by our association with him and our benefit from his counsel. We all wish Dean and Ruth well in the many years of productive life before them.

TRIBUTE FOR BLACK HISTORY MONTH: "YOU CAN MAKE A DIFFERENCE"

HON. BOB CLEMENT

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. CLEMENT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to share with my House colleagues a portion of a speech I recently delivered at Fisk University in commemoration of Black History Month.

The theme of my message was "You Can Make a Difference."

I told Fisk students that each of them had the power and ability to make a real difference in the world in which we live today. I cited examples of the contributions of blacks throughout American history who made a significant difference in the struggle for equality and freedom in our country.

Although most Fisk students are too young to remember first hand the tremendous, sometimes almost insurmountable odds their forefathers faced in their effort to obtain equality, they are aware of the history of the struggle and the evolution of civil rights in America.

I believe they, and other young people, can use the examples of many heroic role models in determining the part they can each play in creating a better world. And I think the same message applies to blacks, whites, and persons of all ethnic origins and of all ages.

From Crispus Attucks to Harriet Tubman to Thurgood Marshall, we are all aware of the contributions that famous figures in black American history made to society. But I think it is very important to note that there are millions of people whose names we'll never know who played an equally important part in the area of civil rights and human equality. Individually and collectively millions of brave black Americans made a difference in our world.

For the benefit of my congressional colleagues, I would like to share an example—the Fisk Jubilee Singers.

While you may be unfamiliar with this dedicated group of musicians, their contribution illustrates how perseverance and dedication changed our society.

The Fisk Jubilee Singers demonstrated that black religious singing had an impact on history far greater than just the enjoyment of good music.

This group's singing tours during the 1870's provided funds which actually allowed Fisk to continue operating when the very future of the institution was in jeopardy.

Their efforts eventually led to the construction of Jubilee Hall, the first permanent structure erected in the South for the purpose of black education. A milestone in black history that certainly made a difference.

In my remarks to the Fisk students, I offered other examples of black Tennesseans who have made a difference in a variety of fields. These Tennesseans include well known figures like Alex Hailey, Wilma Rudolph, Tina Turner, and Oprah Winfrey.

There are educational leaders like Dr. Henry Ponder at Fisk, Dr. David Satcher at Meharry Medical College and Otis Floyd at Tennessee State University.

In government there are people like Lois Deberry, speaker pro tempore of the Tennessee House of Representatives and the entire Black Caucus of State Legislators and there is my close personal friend Assistant Adjutant Gen. Ken Jordan, the first black to ever head the Tennessee Air National Guard.

During my lecture, I pointed to national figures at the forefront of their respective fields. People like Michael Jackson, Michael Jordan, Ron Brown, Rev. Jesse Jackson, and my colleague Congressman BILL GRAY who has helped advise me and provided direction in my career as a Member of the U.S. House of Representatives.

Much progress has been made in America during the past 25 years, but we still have a long way to go.

While we are not in a period of slavery, or a civil war, or even the civil rights movement of the 1960's, we still haven't solved the problems of homelessness, overcome the culture of poverty, provided full educational opportunities, or eliminated drug abuse and disease.

But we are on the threshold of a new century, in an age of technology that can improve our world. We are in the middle of an era where every person who so desires can truly make a difference.

My message to the Fisk students and every person in our country is to make a difference in your own unique way, whether you be a doctor, lawyer, farmer, businessman, or politician.

Whether the contribution is large or small, we can all work toward leaving a legacy of hope for our children and other generations to come.

I concluded my message with a portion of what I believe to be the most inspirational speech delivered in my lifetime; Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.'s, "I Have a Dream" speech delivered here in Washington, DC.

After reciting some of his inspiration words, I said, "I am here today to tell you that Dr. King did not die in vain, and much of his dream has come true.

If he were here at Fisk University this morning, I believe he would have an even greater dream.

A dream of every student, every faculty member, teacher, and Congressman here today being able to make a difference.

A dream of all of God's children, black men and white men, jews and gentiles, Protestants and Catholics all joining hands, not just to sing the words of a great spiritual hymn.

But a dream to work together to provide housing for the poor, food for the hungry, new cures for dreaded diseases, and a better way of life for us all.

Can you make a difference?

If Dr. King were here today he would tell you I know you can!

I know you can too.

DRAWING THE LINE IN THE ARCTIC

HON. LES AuCOIN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Speaker, the Sierra Club's Doug Scott hit the nail on the head when he recently wrote that "* * * cautious development of oil and gas resources in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge * * * is an oxymoron."

Some may wonder why environmentalists are unwilling to accept "reasonable" development or "responsible" leasing in the Arctic refuge. It is a simple matter of fact that damage to the refuge from exploration and development of oil and gas resources there would be irreparable. And that conclusion is unacceptable to them and to me.

I commend Mr. Scott's recent opinion column to my colleagues.

The article follows:

[From the New York Times, Feb. 14, 1989]

DRAWING THE LINE IN THE ARCTIC

(By Douglas Scott)

SAN FRANCISCO.—In his budget address last Thursday, President Bush called for the "cautious" development of oil and gas resources in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. But for this last Arctic coastal wilderness, that is an oxymoron.

Both Mr. Bush and his Interior Secretary, Manuel Lujan Jr., want environmentalists to be more reasonable about all this. "I'm not happy" Mr. Lujan told the senators, "that the line has been drawn" over the issue of allowing oil drilling in the Arctic wilderness.

Sorry, Mr. Secretary. As willing as we are to resolve issues amicably, for environmentalists the Arctic is an issue that is precisely about drawing lines—and then respecting them. Environmentalists have drawn a line in the Arctic and it is imperative that the new Secretary and the new President understand why.

We draw lines to protect our national treasures. They are real lines—the boundaries of our national parks, our national wildlife refuges and our wilderness areas. Though established in laws and on official maps, the only true force these park lines have lies in the social consensus of the great majority of Americans that our parks, wilderness and wildlife refuges are to be preserved.

Environmentalists must often contest with developers over whether to sustain and respect these lines. The history of conservation in this country reflects a whole series of schemes to rip open our parks, refuges and wilderness areas.

In the 1940's, logging companies set up a huge clamor to sacrifice the deepest rainforests within the then-new lines demarcating Olympic National Park to build war planes from the spruce trees. In the 1950's, there was a stampede to violate the lines protecting our Western parks and wilderness. It was in all in the name of building dams to "make the deserts bloom"—at a horrendous costs in taxpayer subsidies and environmental damage. In the 1960's, these fights reached full scale when the Western development establishment even sought to breach the park line around the Grand Canyon to build dams.

In each case, environmentalists had to draw the line. No partial logging, no "little dams."

The new test is the Arctic. The fight over the Arctic costal plain is not just about this one refuge, even though it is America's second largest wildlife sanctuary and the world's only remaining intact and complete sample of the high Arctic ecosystem. Nor is the fight over the Arctic just about the astonishing stupidity of drilling for $40 dollar a barrel oil to fuel yet another generation of gas guzzlers that convey drivers, one person to a car, even more slowly into urban gridlock and that spew ever more carbon dioxide into the imperiled atmosphere.

No, the fight about the Arctic is bigger, more symbolic. It is a true litmus test. It is a fight about drawing lines—and then, against all comers, however powerful, defending those lines. To preserve America's parks, refuges and wilderness areas there is no other hope.

President Bush and Secretary Lujan begin their era of stewardship with their capability as stewards untested, however much it is self-proclaimed. They may yet earn the title of environmentalists. Mr. Bush's call for the indefinite postponement of two lease sales in California and one in Florida is a promising start. But they must follow through by defending all the lines that have been drawn around America's most sacred natural treasures.

And they must proceed by leading us through the difficult but economically and environmentally essential transitions needed for a sound energy policy that will pull us back from the brink of atmospheric disaster. Respecting the lines in the Arctic is a good and vital first step.

HONORING WALTER FRANCHUK

HON. DENNIS M. HERTEL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. HERTEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the retirement of a great American and friend, Walter Franchuk. Walt's retirement from 30 years of politics in Michigan's Macomb County will be celebrated with friends on February 16.

Walt has dedicated many years of public service to the people of Macomb County and the State of Michigan. His public sector career has spanned almost three decades. During this time, he has served as a member of the New Haven Community School's Board of Education and has also held the position of Lenox Township supervisor. In 1972 he was elected to his first term as a Macomb County Commissioner and was responsible for the development and implementation of many major projects for Macomb County during his subsequent terms. In January of 1985 and again in January of 1986, Walter Franchuk was elected chairman of the Macomb County Board of Commissioners. As chairman, Walter Franchuk represented the Macomb County Board of Commissioners at the community, county, regional, State, and Federal levels of government, and was responsible for the coordination of all operational activities of the board of commissioners.

Walter Franchuk has served the citizens of Macomb County with integrity. Always involved with the needs and interests of his constituency, Walter dedicated his years as a public servant to achieving the goals of the people he represented.

Walt is a truly remarkable person. Not only has he held public office, but he has owned and operated a business for 23 years in Macomb County. Walter is committed to his family. He has been married to his wife Freda for 44 years and has four daughters, Susan, Annete, Dora, and Julie.

I congratulate and express my gratitude to Walter Franchuk for his many years of honorable service. On behalf of the citizens of Macomb County and the State of Michigan, I thank Walt and wish him and Freda a warm and enjoyable retirement.

A TRIBUTE TO DR. AND MRS. METRICK

HON. CHARLES E. SCHUMER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I call my colleagues' attention to Dr. Bernard Metrick and his wife Irene, two outstanding leaders of the Jewish community of Brooklyn.

The East Midwood Jewish Center Shaare Torah has benefited as has the whole community from this couple's integrity, devotion, and support of all aspects of Jewish life. Dr. and Mrs. Metrick's dedication to the synagogue/community center has helped place it at the forefront of conservative Judaism. Their continued dedication to the center will guarantee it remains the focal point of the Brooklyn conservative Jewish community.

For the past 65 years, the East Midwood Jewish Center has played an active role in the community. A small sampling of the projects the center endeavors to support include neighborhood associations, programs for all age groups, both teenagers and senior citizens, a Braille institute, and child education. This center's desire to provide a diversified nonsectarian community organization is a tribute to East Midwood's desire to reach out into the community beyond the boundaries of religion.

It is fitting that the East Midwood Jewish Center Shaare Torah has chosen to honor Dr. and Mrs. Metrick in their upcoming souvenir journal, for no two individuals better embody the standards the community center represents than these two. While, in the East Midwood Center, the Metricks have found the perfect vehicle to carry out their good work.

Mr. Speaker, it is with the greatest admiration that I share with my colleagues the role both this center and this couple have played in strengthening the social fabric of the Jewish community and Brooklyn. I am heartened to know that such good work continues in communities like Brooklyn, taking place without Government incentive, but instead through a civic desire to better a community.

TRIBUTE TO MICHAEL PELAVIN

HON. DALE E. KILDEE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to salute Mr. Michael Pelavin of Flint, MI, who today completes his 3-year term as chairman of the National Jewish Community Relations Advisory Council.

NJCRAC, founded in 1944, is one of the world's most influential and respected voices for the rights and dignity of Jews everywhere. Mr. Pelavin, like NJCRAC itself, has an impressive history of fighting, and winning, battles against the oppression, prejudice, and ignorance that still exists in this country and runs brutally rampant in others.

And they do still exist here. The ugliness of anti-Semitism still mars our society. Whether anti-Semitism is subtle or violent, it, like every other hatred, is an assault upon the rights of individuals and a threat to the foundation of any just society.

Mr. Pelavin's leadership of NJCRAC's relentless war on hatred is making this country a better place to live for all of us because it is making this country a fairer place to live for all of us. It is forcing America to live up to its hope of freedom and justice for all.

Internationally, too, Michael has carried the banner of human dignity to foreign officials who hold in their hands the fate of Jewish men, women and children. In fact, he was among a handful of American Jews who journeyed to Reykjavik, Iceland to press for the rights of Soviet Jews. He recognized a momentous opportunity to speak out for those who have been silenced, and he took it. He helped pry open a few more precious inches a door that Perestroika had barely begun to crack. As NJCRAC continues to force it to open ever wider, more and more Soviet Jews will find their way to peace and safety.

Michael Pelavin is a leading attorney in my hometown of Flint, and I have had the pleasure and privilege of counting him as a friend for many years. Long before his fight for justice brought him to the international arena, Michael was fighting in the trenches in Flint. I will never forget our success in pushing through a fair housing measure in Flint, in 1968—a giant step forward for civil rights in Flint that forever bettered our city and our way of life.

In addition to Mr. Pelavin's role as chairman of the NJCRAC, he has also served as president of the Flint Jewish Federation, chairman of the United Jewish Appeals Young Leadership Cabinet, and in community organizations such as the Greater Flint Urban Coalition.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask all of my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives to join with me in paying tribute to this remarkable man. As a civil rights activist wrote in the 1960's, a threat to justice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere. Mr. Pelavin's fight for the rights of Jews is a fight for all of us. Indeed, Mr. Pelavin's respect for human dignity includes the entire human race. We will not be a just Nation until all of our citizens are treated justly. Please join me in commending the leadership and vision of Mr. Michael Pelavin of Flint, MI.

TRIBUTE TO THE CAUCUS ON TRAVEL AND TOURISM

HON. TOBY ROTH

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to report on the efforts of the caucus on travel and tourism. Since I became a member upon entering Congress, the caucus has grown considerably, and this year we expect to have over 200 members. In recent years, the travel and tourism caucus has been very effective in promoting tourism as a national industry, for instance spearheading our support of the U.S. Travel and Tourism Administration and its promotion of our tourism resources.

Tourism is the second largest private employer in the United States. It is one area in which we actually have a $1 billion surplus with the Japanese. We must recognize the opportunity that lies in this sector to contribute to our future economic growth.

We must consider tourism as an export. Foreign visitors are eager to come to the United States—it is up to us to improve the incentives. Last year, an estimated 33.5 million people visited this country, and that figure should rise about 7 percent in the coming year. The travel and tourism caucus is now working with Members to provide materials to set up a tourism economic development conference for their districts.

In my home State of Wisconsin, tourism has become a key element in our economy. I have an advisory group in my district to monitor tourism issues. I work very closely with this group to determine the best initiatives for our tourist business. The advisory group is composed of restaurant owners, travel agents, gas station owners, boat manufacturers, and many others. Together, we are able to promote the tourist trade in northeast Wisconsin.

In the 101st Congress, there will be several issues that interest the tourism industry. First, we must continue adequate funding levels for the U.S. Travel and Tourism Administration. The funding for this program must reflect the importance of the industry to our economy.

The proposed increase on the gas tax would be an enormous burden on much of the tourism business—and the caucus will help Members assess this issue.

Our experience in promoting tourism in Wisconsin can apply throughout America. I encourage my colleagues to support tourism in their area, and be aware of any initiatives that affect it. The outlook for tourism in America is bright—and the caucus is committed to seeing that the industry remains strong.

ELMER GATES, DISTINGUISHED AMERICAN AND VALUED FRIEND

HON. DON RITTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, since leadership and deliberation in the midst of diversity are highly regarded by the Congress, it is a real privilege for me to honor a friend and distinguished citizen who embodies so many of these American foundation principles. Elmer Gates, raised in "Small-Town" New York State, has worked hard all his life to rise up and fulfill the American dream.

Elmer Gates, president and CEO of Fuller Co., in Allentown, PA, and the Lehigh Valley, is a proven, established leader on the national and international level of business and commerce. Moreover, his dynamism and energy continue a quiet, driving force in a remarkably wide range of community interests and business endeavors. One striking instance is Elmer's leadership in an extraordinary team effort to bring Fuller Co. to world leadership. What Elmer Gates and the Fuller team have done is symbolic of what can be done to build up our country's industrial base that some wrote off not so long ago.

On February 24, 1989, Elmer Gates receives the "Distinguished Citizen Award" by the Lehigh Valley Chapter of Sales and Marketing Executives. This is presented annually to an individual in recognition of his or her outstanding achievements in the sales and marketing professions, their contributions to the strengthening of the American free enterprise system, and their concern for human betterment through community involvements.

According to Scott Stoneback, chapter president, "the term 'distinguished' is most appropriate in describing Elmer Gates. Both as a leader in the Lehigh Valley business community, and in many important civic affairs, Mr. Gates is truly a giant among us."

In 1987, Elmer Gates received the Americanism Award from the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith for having "made a difference through your outstanding leadership and the inspiration you bring to so many others." The Americanism Award is a tribute to strong family values, the rich cultural heritage, and the respect for achievement through hard work of Jewish communities across America.

These achievements and projects would be sufficient to draw great honor to this man. Add his diversity in other areas such as the Boy Scouts, the Allentown Art Museum, and the Lehigh and Northampton County Community Colleges where we see the kinds of citizenship important to the very mission of our representative government. It's simple. People like Elmer Gates make American democracy work—make the Lehigh Valley, Quality Valley.

All that being said, Elmer, the remarkable human energy machine, remains a down-to-earth guy, a really likable fellow. And his family deserves praise. It would be missing something to not mention Elmer's very special family. I'm speaking of his lovely and capable wife Betty, and their two children, Patti and Jody. They are an adventuresome lot but stay close together.

For Elmer Gates, the concept of Quality is a living, breathing organism. The leadership of Elmer Gates steered the Fuller Co. to a principal role in founding Quality Valley, U.S.A. while making Quality the first priority at Fuller. The Vocational industrial Clubs of America [VICA], developed locally by Elmer, are imbued with the idea that Quality must guide our jobs from beginning to end. He is providing new leadership to vocational education in America, making attitudes change and upgrading performance. He realizes the importance of the future member of team America's workforce. Elmer Gates understands the bond between intelligence, leadership, and the physical, emotional human being whose hands and minds do the jobs for our companies, our communities, and our country.

And so Mr. Speaker, I can say to Elmer Gates, your understanding of the meaning of teamwork, your love of competition and your ability to convey that spirit, serves the Lehigh Valley and America well. I can personally say "thanks," Elmer and Betty, for your friendship and for bringing those qualities to all of us.

THE NATIONAL COOPERATIVE INNOVATION AND COMMERCIALIZATION ACT OF 1989

HON. RICK BOUCHER

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. BOUCHER. Mr. Speaker, today the gentleman from California, Mr. CAMPBELL, and I are introducing the National Cooperative Innovation and Commercialization Act of 1989. This legislation calls for a fundamental reformation of existing antitrust laws to permit rival U.S. companies to create joint ventures for production in order to compete more effectively against foreign companies in technically oriented global markets.

America today finds itself at an important crossroad in defining its role in the global marketplace. The ability of domestic companies to compete with European and Japanese rivals, especially in technically sophisticated industries, is a subject of the highest national importance.

The need to address questions of competitiveness is patently obvious. Indeed, a cursory glance at the business section of virtually any newspaper starkly reveals the challenges we face.

America's surplus in high technology exports over imports has dropped alarmingly from $26 billion in 1981 to less than $600 million in 1987. 1988 actually produced a $2.5 million deficit. It is critical to restore this balance. Failure to act now carries the risk of America becoming a second-tier industrial power by the year 2000.

Japanese producers of semiconductors have solidified their dominant position in this vital international industry. The United States' steady decline in the semiconductor market over the past 8 years now raises concern within our Government that this country's commercial and military manufacturers are becoming too dependent on overseas suppliers for key parts.

In another field, there is alarm over the failure of the United States to gain a foothold in what is expected to be a new multibillion-dollar television market. High Definition Television, or HDTV, promises a technology which will deliver crisp, motion-picture quality pictures to homeowners before the end of the century. HDTV assumes an even higher importance because it dovetails with clear needs in such critical areas as computers, defense, and medical know-how. Already, America lags far behind Japan and Europe in developing HDTV technology.

Vast economic opportunities also await successful competitors in the emerging fields of high temperature superconductivity and robotics.

The future success of U.S. firms in these markets is questionable today. American companies often face barriers not faced by companies in our competitor nations. some countries, notably Japan, offer direct government financial support to private industry in markets targeted for national dominance. Almost uniformly, companies in other nations do not face the antitrust restraints which confront U.S. firms.

Bringing a new product to market involves both research and production. The costs of developing technically sophisticated products, such as HDTV, semiconductors, or high temperature superconductors, and bringing them to market often exceed the resources of any single firm. Intense coordination among companies in both the strategic and operational phases is required.

Existing antitrust laws in both Europe and Japan recognize that cooperation through interfirm alliance is beneficial to industry as well as to the consumer. It is time for American law to make a similar recognition and sanction joint production ventures in those instances where competition will be preserved. That is the purpose of the legislation we are offering today.

Current antitrust law needlessly inhibits joint production ventures. The legal standards for these alliances are not as clear or as friendly as they are for mergers. Under existing law, two or more American firms interested in the joint production or marketing of an expensive new product or pioneering a more efficient manufacturing process cannot even discuss such an alliance without incurring potential treble damage liability. At the same time, current law provides far more friendly treatment and certainty if these two firms want to merge, even if that merger poses an anticompetitive risk.

The cooperative industrial activity that yields a competitive advantage to America's foreign rivals is, for the most part, effectively denied to our own companies.

It is true that joint ventures for production are not illegal per se under U.S. antitrust laws. But even in those instances where the principals are fairly certain that a joint venture does not violate the law, the risk of guessing wrongly is simply too great. The threat of treble damages and attorney's fees broadly inhibits the kinds of cooperative arrangements in the United States that flourish in Japan and Europe.

What U.S. companies need is assurance before the joint venture is undertaken that it will not violate the antitrust laws. It is that assurance which our legislation provides.

We propose a procedure through which the Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission, in consultation with the Department of Commerce, will review proposed joint ventures for production and determine which can go forward consistently with a competitive market. Once so sanctioned, the joint venture participants would be relieved of all potential civil liability, save injunctive relief, for activities within the scope of the sanctioned proposal.

Either the authorizing agency or a private plaintiff could thereafter seek review of the appropriateness of the joint venture, and if it is found to have outgrown its original charter and poses anticompetitive risks, a court could order its termination. Our bill offers prospective joint venturers the protection they need from civil antitrust liability and offers the public protection from anticompetitive activities. In short, we both foster a higher American ability to enter important new markets and protect competition for consumers.

Congress recognized, in 1984, that the uncertainties of antitrust laws and the potential for treble damage litigation were primary reasons why U.S. firms have failed to enter into cooperative innovation arrangements for basic research and development. The resulting legislation, the National Cooperative Research Act of 1984, took significant steps in the direction of fostering joint R&D efforts domestically. What this important legislation failed to do was offer protections to joint arrangements for production.

The National Cooperative Innovation and Commercialization Act of 1989 carefully preserves the antitrust law's protections against any abuse of cooperative arrangements. The power to enjoin any anticompetitive joint venture is unimpaired. Upon approval of the arrangement by antitrust authorities, however, the risk of costly damage actions is removed. Basically, if firms can merge under existing antitrust standards, they would be allowed to form joint ventures for the limited purposes stated in their applications for approval.

Our legislation simultaneously preserves protections against anticompetitive conduct for the public and business competitors and resolves the uncertainties which currently inhibit the formation of joint ventures for production. By encouraging procompetitive joint ventures, our bill will help open the door to U.S. participation in the manufacture of high technology products which will be the major staple of tomorrow's global market and assist current domestic industries now undergoing rapid technological changes.

This legislation enjoys a broad range of support in business, legal, and academic circles. I invite my colleagues to join with Mr. CAMPBELL and me in this effort to enhance America's role in the world economy.

TRIBUTE TO THE ST. CHARLES BORROMEO CHURCH

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, it is with great honor that I acknowledge the 100th anniversary of the St. Charles Borromeo Church, located in my district in New York City. In addition to this monumental event, I would also like to acknowledge the beautification of Mother Katherine Drexel, who was the founder of the Order of the Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament.

Under the direction of Mother Katherine Drexel, who died in 1955 at the age of 96, The Order of the Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament established more than 60 schools. These schools were located in 23 States, and among there number was and still is the St. Charles Borromeo School in my district.

Throughout its 100 year history, the St. Charles Borromeo Church has performed innumerable services to the Harlem community. Perhaps their largest contribution has been their commitment to education in the black community. When the Pope spoke of Mother Drexel in his homily, he spoke in particular of her commitment to education and said of it:

What better way could be found to conquer the devastating effects of racism and to provide effective help for these disadvantaged brothers and sisters.

I salute the St. Charles Borromeo Church for all of its services to my community but in particular because it has carried on this great tradition of commitment to education.

It is with great pleasure that I share this tribute with my colleagues. The St. Charles Borromeo Church has long been a pillar of good in my district and on its 100th anniversary is deserving of great praise.

THE FOURTEENTH ANNUAL BROOKLYN IRISH-AMERICAN PARADE

HON. CHARLES E. SCHUMER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I commemorate the 14th annual Brooklyn Irish-American Parade, taking place March 19, 1989. This fine occasion, begun on the year of America's bicentennial celebration, continues as a reminder of the role the Irish freedom fighters played in America's battle for independence.

The parade will highlight the cultural, historical, and educational accomplishments of Brooklyn's Irish-American community and will encourage the appreciation of ancient Irish traditions. Yet the day will be more than a tribute to the Irish Americans of Brooklyn, it will be a celebration of Brooklyn's cultural diversity and richness. The parade takes place in the neighborhood of Prospect Park, the historic site of the Battle of Brooklyn, the battle in which the Irish freedom fighters gave their lives to secure American independence. The Honorable William Bellard of the supreme court will be the grand marshal of the parade.

This year's parade will honor Padraic Pearse on the 75th anniversary of his visit to Brooklyn. Padraic Pearse embodied the very spirit that the Brooklyn Irish-American Parade tries to recapture. Pearse, a Gaelic scholar, poet, educator, political philosopher, and Irish nationalist delivered his prophetic and eloquent address on Robert Emmet and Irish independence at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on March 1, 1914. Two brief years after his visit to Brooklyn, Pearse would become a key leader in the Easter uprising of 1916 and as commander-in-chief of the Irish forces was chosen to become president of the provincial government of the Republic. Padraic Pearse's life and work came to an end shortly thereafter when he was executed by a British firing squad.

We can draw important parallels between Pearse's life and battle for the independence of his homeland, commemorated in this year's Brooklyn Irish-American Parade, and the same struggle America underwent to secure its own freedom over 200 years ago. The role the Irish played in the successful American endeavor for freedom should not be forgotten, even as the Irish struggle carries on.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to remember the spirit that the annual Brooklyn Irish-American Parade tries to recapture and the critical role that spirit has played in our own history.

A TRIBUTE TO J. MICHAEL LAUMANN

HON. THOMAS A. LUKEN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. THOMAS A. LUKEN. Mr. Speaker, it is with the greatest pleasure that I call my colleagues' attention to the accomplishments of Mr. J. Michael Laumann, the mayor of Cheviot, OH. Mr. Laumann will be receiving deserved recognition for his community dedication at the Cheviot Eagles Annual Hall of Fame and Civic Appreciation Testimonial Dinner tomorrow night.

Mike Laumann has had an impressive career in public service. His loyalty to the people of Cheviot is obvious. In 1973 he was elected to Cheviot City Council and reelected to the council in 1975. Following that he served as my administrative assistant and business district manager from 1977 until 1980. IN 1981 he returned to Cheviot City Council as president, and became their mayor in March 1983.

Since the beginning of his tenure in Cheviot, he has greatly contributed to the distinction of the city. A lawyer's attention to detail causes him to check that addresses read "Cheviot, OH" rather than "Cincinnati, OH." And a sincere respect for Cheviot caused him to see through the new Cheviot City Hall from its conception years ago to its dedication in 1987.

Along with the familiar civic management, he preserves the "small town" atmosphere and charm of his city with such involvement as calling Bingo games, and personally swearing-in organizations' officers. Speaking for the people of the First District of Ohio, especially those in Cheviot, I would like to thank J. Michael Laumann for his many years of devoted service.

Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I have known Mike for many years and consider him to be a good friend. I take much pride in giving him this tribute, and I join his wife Debbie and young daughter Courtney in honoring him today.

SALVATORE LoPINTO GUEST OF HONOR

HON. ROBERT J. MRAZEK

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Speaker, the Cellini Lodge No. 2206 of Order Sons of Italy in America, representing the village of New Hyde Park, Long Island, and surrounding hamlets, has chosen to honor Salvatore LoPinto of Stewart Manor as the guest of honor at its 21st annual dinner this year. I rise today to bring to the attention of my colleagues the record of service and involvement which has led to this milestone for Brother LoPinto.

A member of the OSIA since 1974, Brother LoPinto has served as trustee, orator, first vice president and, from 1985–87, as president of the Cellini Lodge. He has led by example from his early days at the lodge, when he assisted in raising $50,000 for the St. Francis Heart Program in Italy project, building bridges of friendship both within the order and with the motherland in Italy.

During his presidency of the lodge, Brother LoPinto shepherded several important projects to fruition. He initiated an annual formal "Salute to Mothers" each May, establishing a stronger relationship between the lodge's ladies of the auxiliary and a then-all men's lodge. He ramrodded "Project Italia," a culturally based organization encouraged by the lodge, and encouraged establishment of regular Saturday morning Italian language classes as sponsored by the lodge.

Professionally, Brother LoPinto has had a variety of accomplishments and interests. He began at age 15 as a baker, became a New York City firefighter at age 25, then moved on to become an entrepreneur in the garment industry. He now works as an insurance manager for the Prudential, where he has won numerous awards for his outstanding service.

Brother LoPinto's mother and father came to the United States from Sicily. His mother hailed from the city of Palermo, his father from the town of Corleone. Brother LoPinto grew up in Brooklyn, the Bronx, and Long Island, and met his wife Carmela "Millie" Nizzari while they were both students at Lafayette High School. The couple has three sons, Robert, Salvatore, and Stephen, as well as grandchildren. Also, Brother LoPinto's mother-in-law, Anna Nizzari, has actively supported the couple's activities and is a lodge member, as are Millie, Salvatore, and Stephen.

The Cellini Lodge has chosen to honor Salvatore LoPinto for his record of service, his business acumen and his leadership ability. Mr. Speaker, I join with the membership of Order Sons of Italy in America's Cellini Lodge in congratulating Salvatore LoPinto for his outstanding contributions to the community, and I wish Brother LoPinto and his family all the best in the years ahead.

A LARGER ROLE FOR JAPAN

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, Japan is garnering more than its share of news headlines these days. Prime Minister Takeshita met with President Bush at the White House on February 2, the first foreign leader to do so. Japan announced in late January that it would increase its foreign aid budget by almost 8 percent and its defense budget by almost 6 percent. In doing so, Japan becomes the largest foreign aid donor in the world. Meanwhile, Japan continues to run huge trade surpluses with the United States and the European Economic Community and has emerged as the world's largest creditor nation.

In short, Japan has come of age on the world stage and must begin to play the part. Although Japan is seeking a more dominant role for itself in international affairs, it has yet to assume its full responsibilities. A February 6 Omaha World-Herald editorial entitled "More Responsibility for Japan" expresses that viewpoint by pointing out that the time has come for Japan to take "a larger role in matters of foreign aid, diplomacy and global security." I agree completely and commend this editorial to my colleagues.

MORE RESPONSIBILITY FOR JAPAN

Japan recently passed the United States in the amount of foreign aid it dispenses. The Tokyo stock exchange rivals Wall Street. The central bank in Tokyo is busier with international loans and investments than any U.S. bank. Now the Japanese are openly seeking a greater role in diplomatic affairs.

Fifty years ago, the rising sun fluttered on Japanese military flags as the Japanese army pushed into China and the Japanese navy prepared to challenge the U.S. Pacific fleet. The Japanese war cabinet, led by General Hideki Tojo, had formulated the notion of establishing a "greater East-Asia co-prosperity sphere."

In other words, an empire abroad.

The Japanese generals, admirals and industrialists tried to justify their actions by pointing out that Japan was a small, overcrowded island, lacking in minerals and other raw materials. Its assets included factories and an industrious population. Following a simplistic line of reasoning, the leadership concluded that the raw materials were ready at hand—in China, Manchuria, Indochina, the Philippines and the Dutch East Indies.

The American Pacific fleet, a potential obstacle to exploitation of the Pacific, was attacked at Pearl Harbor.

The resulting war with the world's strongest industrial power was a disaster for the Japanese. More than two million Japanese casualties resulted. Virtually the entire navy and many of the merchant ships were destroyed. Japanese cities were laid waste by heavy bombing raids, including the nuclear destruction of Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

Now Japan has developed a different kind of influence. It is the major power in the robust Pacific Rim economy. It has investors and sales people in nearly all the countries it once sought as colonies. It has moved ahead of the United States and Western Europe in significant technological and electronic fields.

Japan achieved some of the goals economically that it failed to achieve militarily.

In recent meetings with President Bush, Prime Minister Noburu Takeshita urged the United States to consult Japan on an equal basis so that his country could play a major role in world political affairs. Under the protective umbrella of the United States, Japan has prospered without having to spend huge amounts for defense. It is time Japan took a larger role in matters of foreign aid, diplomacy and global security.

CREDIT REFORM

HON. WILLIS D. GRADISON, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Speaker, over time, and on a bipartisan basis, the Congress and the executive branch have become more cognizant of the need for the accurate budgetary treatment of Federal credit programs. The basic purpose of credit reform is to reflect the true costs of credit programs in the budget. Over the past decade, significant progress has been made, but more needs to be done.

In his budget proposal for fiscal year 1987, President Reagan put forward several credit management reform initiatives. The use of loan asset sales and borrower prepayments were among them.

Loan asset sales have been the subject of considerable debate during the most recent budget deliberations in the Congress. However, loan prepayment programs have attracted less attention.

During fiscal year 1987, as required either by the 1986 Budget Reconciliation Act (Public Law 99-509) or the administration's Loan Prepayment Pilot Program, several Federal agencies initiated borrower loan prepayment programs. The aggregate unpaid principal balance of these programs was $3.7 billion and they yielded $3 billion in net prepayment proceeds. Under two programs, borrowers prepaid their loans at the unpaid principal balance—$1.9 billion. Under the remaining programs, borrowers prepaid their loans at less than the unpaid principal balance. Specifically, loans with an unpaid principal balance of $1.8 billion yielded $1.1 billion in net proceeds.

In these cases, the agencies surrendered the financial right of the Federal Government to recover the full amount loaned to the borrower. Absent specific statutory authority, no officer of the Federal Government may surrender or waive contract rights vested in the Government, including the right to receive loan repayments on a certain schedule and at a certain interest rate, without a compensating benefit to the United States.

In August 1987, I requested that the General Accounting Office investigate these loan prepayment programs and ascertain whether they conformed with this legal principle. The GAO has recently completed its investigation. The report, "Borrower Loan Prepayments: OMB Guidelines Need To Be Strengthened" (GAO/AFMD-88-19), is now available.

Among its principal findings, GAO determined:

First. The loan prepayment programs reviewed by GAO were all within the law. Each agency had the statutory authority to accept loan prepayments at less than the unpaid principal balance.

Second. The costs of the prepayment program generally exceeded the benefits to the Government. That is, the Government generally received less in net principal proceeds than the present value of future loan principal and interest payments. Put another way, the Government took a loss.

Third. Loan prepayments do not effectively achieve credit reform objectives. As is the case with seasoned loan asset sales, prepayments cannot accurately measure credit program subsidies.

Fourth. OMB's guidelines need to be strengthened. OMB's current loan asset sale guidelines also address how to conduct a loan prepayment program. The guidelines, however, do not adequately ensure that sale or prepayment decisions are made consistently across the Government or that individual agency decisions yield the optimal financial and credit reform benefits to the Government.

Although I generally support GAO's conclusions, I do have a disagreement with GAO's methodology. I join OMB and CBO in taking issue with GAO's longstanding position on the proper way to measure the cost of Federal credit programs. GAO believes that federally assisted loans should be valued by using yields on similar-maturity Treasury debt, adjusted for expected defaults, as the discount rate. This, I believe, is wrong.

The Government, like any investor, bears the risk that default and other costs may be higher than expected. This risk lowers the value of federally assisted loans relative to what their value would be if expectations were certain—as with Treasury securities. By failing to recognize the effect of uncertainty on the value of federally assisted loans, GAO's approach understates the true subsidy cost of Federal credit programs.

In the past, the understatement of credit programs cost may have biased Government decisions toward federalization of our financial system. We should not continue this bias.

Notwithstanding this technical, albeit important, disagreement, I commend GAO for its effort in producing this report. I am especially heartened that OMB concurs, in large part, with GAO's analysis and has agreed to strengthen its loan asset sale and loan prepayment guidelines in a manner generally consistent with GAO's recommendations.

PROF. DAVID EISENBERG—FACULTY RESEARCH LECTURER

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to report that the UCLA Faculty Research Lecture will be delivered tomorrow by Prof. David Eisenberg, a distinguished chemist and molecular biologist and one of the most respected and popular men in the Los Angeles community.

Dr. Eisenberg has determined the atomic structure of the most abundant protein on Earth. Last year he and his associates reported the precise atomic structure of the more than 37,000 atoms that form the three-dimensional shape of RuBisCo, the most abundant protein on Earth and a substance critical to life because it starts the sequence that transforms carbon dioxide into sugar during photosynthesis.

Knowledge of RuBisCo's structure is important to applied scientists who may be able to increase crop yields by modifying its structure, to biochemists who are interested in a detailed understanding of the organization of RuBisCo and other molecules, and to theoreticians interested in such questions as how the atoms form the protein's three-dimensional shape.

Being named a faculty research lecturer is the highest honor bestowed by the university's faculty on its members. Recipients are selected by a committee of former honorees based on exceptional research achievements.

Eisenberg's lecture, titled "Protein Structure and Design," will be presented free of charge and is open to the public.

Professor Eisenberg has been a member of the UCLA faculty for over 20 years since 1968. He has received international recognition for his research on the structure and function of protein molecules, and has played a key role in the development of UCLA's highly acclaimed biological structure laboratories.

David Eisenberg is not only a shining star in the University of California constellation but also has a remarkable family, including his talented and terrific wife, Lucy, and children, Jenny and Nell. He is also a special friend, whose lecture I am pleased to call to the attention of my colleagues.

A BILL TO RAISE THE GASOLINE TAX

HON. ANTHONY C. BEILENSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing a bill today to increase the Federal excise tax on gasoline by 50 cents a gallon, phasing it in by 10 cents annually for 5 years. This proposal would make an enormous contribution toward reducing our Federal budget deficit, the No. 1 problem facing our Nation today. It would also reduce the U.S. trade deficit, lessen our Nation's vulnerability to a new energy crisis, improve U.S. auto industry competitiveness, and reduce the auto emissions that are contributing to air pollution and the global warming phenomenon.

This additional tax would apply to other motor fuels as well, including gasohol, ethanol, methanol, and diesel fuel sold at the pump. It would not apply to gasoline used for noncommercial aviation, however, so as to avoid creating a large discrepancy between the costs of gasoline and jet fuel for aircraft. Revenues from the added tax would accrue to the General Treasury, to be used to reduce the Federal budget deficit, rather than to the highway trust fund, for which the revenues from the existing 9.1-cent-a-gallon tax are earmarked.

Since each penny per gallon of gasoline tax raises about $1 billion annually, this bill would reduce Federal budget deficits by a total of roughly $150 billion over the next 5 years, and by about $50 billion annually thereafter. Yet, because the cost of gasoline is so low—about 40 cents a gallon lower than its peak price in 1981—this huge deficit reduction is possible without asking Americans to pay much more for gasoline than we were accustomed to paying in the past. And, even after the full 50-cent increase in its place, we would still pay less for gasoline than our counterparts in European countries and Japan pay, where the taxes on gasoline range from $1.20 to $3 per gallon.

The low price of gasoline has contributed to another critical problem that would be addressed by this bill: Our Nation's growing dependence on imported oil. In 1985, we imported 27 percent of our Nation's oil supplies; we're currently importing over 40 percent of the oil we consume, and much of it from countries in the politically unstable Middle East. By the early 1990's, energy experts are predicting we will be importing more than half the oil we use—a greater proportion than that which triggered our energy crises of the 1970's, bringing not just the inconvenience of long gas lines but also two serious recessions, high unemployment, and the worst period of inflation in American history.

This dangerous trend toward increased reliance on imported oil would be reversed if Americans had an incentive to conserve. If gasoline cost more, people would buy more fuel-efficient cars and, where possible, cut back on driving by using mass transit or forming carpools. Since any increased demand for oil is met by increasing imports, our reduced gasoline consumption would translate into reduced imports of oil.

As we lower our oil imports, we would also reduce the enormous U.S. trade deficit. Because oil accounts for nearly one-quarter of that deficit, lowering our demand for just this one commodity would substantially reduce the total amount of money we sent overseas. Our trade deficits would decline further in response to the lower Federal budget deficits which would result from the higher gas tax. Reducing our Nation's so-called twin deficits would stop the hemorrhaging of our Nation's economic resources and bring about lower rates, less unemployment, higher economic growth, and a higher standard of living for all Americans.

Gradually raising the gas tax by 50 cents a gallon would also help save domestic automakers from the devastating blow they are setting themselves up for by continuing their production of gas-guzzling cars. Their competitors in Europe and Japan are now developing and will soon be marketing 60 to 90 miles per gallon vehicles, while the U.S. industry, which has successfully petitioned the Federal Government to roll back our relatively modest fuel-economy standards, is moving in precisely the opposite direction. When the world oil market tightens, as it inevitably will, and rising oil prices again generate a frenzied demand for higher-mileage cars, U.S. automakers will be demolished—unless we help them prepare for that day by stimulating demand now for more efficient cars, as a higher gas tax would do.

Finally, by lowering our consumption of gasoline, raising the gas tax would also help reduce auto emissions, which are the primary cause of polluted air in most U.S. cities. It would also help slow the buildup of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere, which is believed to be the main contributor to the global warming phenomenon. Although a higher gasoline tax by itself would not solve these critical problems, it would help control the damage while we work on more comprehensive solutions.

Despite the enormous potential benefits of this proposal, critics have opposed raising the gas tax for three commonly stated reasons: that it would deplete a source of funding that has traditionally been reserved for building highways, that it is a regressive tax, and that it would hurt people who must drive long distances or who work in the tourist industry. Each of these criticisms deserves a response.

Although the current Federal tax on gasoline is dedicated to the purpose of paying for highway construction and mass transit, and despite the fact that many communities urgently need new or improved roads, in recent years Congress has appropriated a lower level of funding for roads than the revenues from the gas tax would allow so that at least a portion of those revenues could be used for deficit reduction. Congress has thus already implicitly decided that the need for reducing the deficit is more important than fully funding road construction.

And, in fact, that is a good decision, and a good precedent. As obvious and as critical as is the need for new roads, bridges, and mass transit, the need to reduce the deficit is even more so: the deficit problem is entwined with every national problem we face, and until we get it under control, we cannot begin to address the growing needs of our Nation in a responsible manner. The gas tax has the potential to make a much greater contribution to the solution of the deficit problem than it has been used for thus far, and we should not refrain from using it just because historically it has been levied for a different purpose.

There is justifiable concern about levying any tax that would hurt lower-income individuals, and I would favor raising the earned income tax credit for low-income workers or developing another way—other than a direct rebate, which would nullify the conservation incentive—to help compensate those at the lowest end of the income scale for the higher gas tax. However, it is doubtful that this measure would hurt the poor as much as is commonly believed. A Congressional Budget Office study conducted last year on the distributional effects of higher excise taxes found that, for all but the very highest and very lowest income classes, an increase in the gasoline tax would have the same effect on all income classes when measured as a percent of total expenditures. Also, because the price is so low, and because of the fuel-efficiency gains made in the past, gasoline represents a fairly small component of most household budgets, even for families of modest means.

Because this tax would be phased in by 10 cents per gallon per year, this bill would give people time to adjust to higher gas prices. A person who drives 10,000 miles a year in a car that gets 25 miles per gallon would pay an extra $40 each year for gasoline—assuming oil prices stay the same—or $200 more annually by the time the full 50 cents increase is in place—if he made no changes in driving patterns or car ownership.

However, if that same driver bought a car that gets 35 miles per gallon, he would only pay an extra $29, instead of $200, in gasoline taxes once the full tax increase is in place. Or, if he decided to carpool to work with another person and thereby cut his driving by one-third, he would offset the additional tax completely. As we learned from the gas price hikes in the 1970's, most people will lower their consumption of gas by one means or another in response to higher prices—and that is precisely the goal of this legislation.

Those who must drive long distances, or who work in the tourism industry, or who depend on the continuation of low gasoline prices for any other reason are the very same people who will be hurt the most if we do not raise the gas tax.

If we do nothing to curb our demand for imported oil, the cost of gasoline will go up because world oil supplies will decline. We could soon by paying $2 or $3 a gallon more, and OPEC will again be able to raise its prices as it gains more control over the world oil market.

On the other hand, the cost of gas will go up modestly if we raise the tax on it, but we will have lowered our demand for imported oil and kept OPEC from being able to raise its prices. We will thus pay the entire cost of gasoline to ourselves, so that it can be used for purposes here at home, instead of sending tens of billions of dollars overseas to foreign oil producers.

Americans will thus pay more for gasoline whether we in Congress raise the price ourselves, or do nothing and thereby set the stage for OPEC to raise its prices, but if we act, we will ensure lower prices and greater supplies of oil, as well as the economic benefits that reduced trade and budget deficits will bring.

In other words, if we raise the gasoline tax, we will pay more for gasoline, but our standard of living will rise; whereas, if we do nothing, we will pay more for gasoline and our standard of living will decline. Over the long run, the economic benefits that would result from raising the gas tax will far outweigh the near-term disadvantages of higher gas prices.

There are, of course, other ways to decrease our dependence on foreign oil besides raising the gasoline tax. But every other major proposal for doing so creates new problems, and not one does nearly so much to help reduce the Federal budget deficit as does a higher gasoline tax.

For example, the most commonly suggested way to reduce our imports is to impose an oil import fee. Although a fee would bring in some revenues, it would also result in inexcusable windfall profits for domestic producers who would raise the price of their oil to match the higher price of imported oil. Thus, we would be raising the cost to American consumers of both domestic and imported oil, but only receiving the benefit of revenues from imports. With a gasoline tax, however, all the additional cost of gasoline would be used to reduce the deficit.

In addition, an oil import fee would cause resentment and retaliation from trading partners and would reduce incentives for our own oil industry to improve its international competitiveness. It would also raise the cost of all uses of oil, from home heating to manufacturing, whereas a gas tax would affect only transportation costs. And, an oil import fee would be difficult to administer, compared with the ease of administering an increase in the Federal gasoline tax, for which there is already a collection system in place.

Most of the other frequently suggested ways of reducing our oil imports involve various means of expanding domestic production of fuel, such as opening more public lands for oil development, creating synthetic fuels, or providing tax incentives for our own oil industry. But these and virtually all other means of increasing domestic production have environmental, administrative, or economic drawbacks that a gasoline tax doesn't have. Because of those drawbacks, all of these proposals would be subject to lengthy consideration before they could be implemented. Raising the gas tax, on the other hand, could be implemented—and would show results—immediately.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is not a cure-all for the severe economic and environmental problems facing our Nation, but it is the one measure that can do more to ease the array of serious problems we face than any other I know of. It is a wise and sensible step that is long overdue.

TRIBUTE TO E. CONRAD TURNER

HON. CARL D. PURSELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. PURSELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to acknowledge a milestone in the life of one of my constituents, E. Conrad Turner of Jackson, MI. On March 5, 1989, Mr. Turner will celebrate the 80th anniversary of his birth. In honor of his birthday, I submit the following tribute written by his grandson and commend it to the attention of my colleagues.

IN PRAISE OF MY GRANDFATHER ON HIS 80TH BIRTHDAY

From even a casual examination, you can see that my grandfather is a very special man. He embodies the ideals we cherish in all human beings. A man of unquestioned integrity and an enduring conviction to the values we hold dear, Grandpa projects a vision of strength and optimism to all who are fortunate to know him.

Born on a small farm in rural Ballard County, Kentucky into a family of humble means, Grandpa learned the value of hard work at a young age and in the process developed a myriad of talents. This work ethic and the skills he mastered have served him well throughout his life. When he was 18, Grandpa moved to Jackson, Michigan to earn a living and at the age of 24 he made one of the best decisions of his life, he married Emma Lee Bugg. Even today, they are an inseparable unit bonded by the lasting love that only a lifetime of devotion and fidelity can cement. Together they raised two children; Shirley J. Heydlauff, a mother and wife whose innumerable achievements are due in no small way to the guidance received from her parents; and Captain James R. Turner, USN, whose keen intellect and fierce patriotism were molded in large part by the example of his father and mother.

In many respects, my grandfather exemplifies what is good and commendable in people. A man whose life is governed by Christian principles, Grandpa possesses a gentle and loving heart, abundant generosity and kindness, resourcefulness and a commitment to hard work. Always ready with a helping hand, Grandpa consistently exhibits fine moral character and high ethical standards. He resembles a beautifully woven cloth comprised of stitches of wisdom, decency, compassion, strength and peacefulness. He truly symbolizes what we should all strive to attain.

On behalf of his eight grandchildren, their spouses and seven great grandchildren, I want to express our heartfelt appreciation for the many contributions he has made to our lives. We are grateful for his existence and elated at his achievement of this important event in his life. We honor him today with a celebration of the life he has had and to toast the years to come.

Dedicated to my grandfather with love and gratitude. Dale E. Heydlauff.

MAINE'S BLIND WORKER OF THE YEAR

HON. OLYMPIA J. SNOWE

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to extend my congratulations to Roger Nadeau, who has been named Blind Worker of the Year by the Maine Center for the Blind. Roger will now compete for the Peter J. Salmon National Blind Worker of the Year Award given by the Board of Directors of National Industries for the Blind.

Roger has been chosen Blind Worker of the Year, not only because of his successful on-the-job performance but also for his work in the community. He is employed by the Maine Center for the Blind where he produces flyers' kit bags for the Air Force and a retention strap for the parachutists' version of the new Kelvar helmet under Federal contracts. He also produces pens for the State of Maine. Aside from his excellent work record, Roger also is a consumer representative to the Board of the Directors of the Maine Center for the Blind and is an officer in the Portland Chapter of the American Council of the Blind.

I would like to commend Roger on the receipt of this award, and am pleased he will be Maine's candidate for the Peter J. Salmon National Blind Worker of the Year Award.

TRIBUTE TO WALTER FRANCHUK

HON. DAVID E. BONIOR

OF MICHGIAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a good friend of mine, Walter Franchuk. Walt retired last year from the Macomb County, MI, Board of Commissioners after nearly 26 years of distinguished service. He left an indelible mark on the county and will be sorely missed by those he served.

I have known Walt for 30 years. He served on the old board of supervisors with my father, and it has been a privilege to be friends with Walt and his wife Freda over the years. I have always been impressed with his ability to bring people together to solve problems. As chairman of the board of commissioners earlier this decade, Walt oversaw the growth of northeastern Macomb County and aided the development of better services to the entire county. Always ready with a smile, Walt was a dedicated and much-loved public servant.

People of all political stripes couldn't help but to admire Walt Franchuk. His sense of fair play and his gentle disposition enabled him to bring divisive factions together over the course of his three decades in politics. Macomb County is a better place because of Walt Franchuk. Lean and trim, Walt has a great future ahead of him, and I am proud to honor him today.

THE MASK OF THE RED DEATH

HON. THOMAS J. MANTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. MANTON. Mr. Speaker, recently the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration [NOAA] announced the results of its multi-year study into the tragic deaths of hundreds of bottlenosed dolphins experienced along the East Coast and, to a lesser extent, the Gulf Coast during the summer of 1987 and into early 1988. The results, to say the least, are remarkable in that the cause of this unfortunate event differs greatly from what many would have had us believe.

The deaths were not the result of the vast quantities of man-made pollutants which enter our coastal waters daily. Rather, they were the result of natural causes. The NOAA study concluded these dolphins were poisoned by eating fish tainted by a naturally occurring toxin [brevetoxin] from "red tide" algae [Ptychodiscus brevis]. NOAA reported this is the first known instance of the toxin being transmitted to a mammal through tainted fish.

Red tides are normally confined to the Gulf of Mexico, although occasionally they can be found around Florida and along the Atlantic Coast. This particular algae "bloom" reached as far as North Carolina, where it had a devastating effect on the local shell-fish industry.

From the moment these dolphin deaths began, a collective finger was pointed towards the treated municipal sewage sludge which is disposed of at the 106-mile deepwater municipal dump site off the New York and New Jersey coast. As a result, last year the Congress passed the Ocean Dumping Ban Act, which sets a deadline for the ocean disposal of municipal sludge and establishes a new fee and penalty structure for ocean dumping.

Mr. Speaker, the Ocean Dumping Ban Act is good legislation which will assure the practice of ocean disposal of industrial wastes and treated municipal sludge ceases as expeditiously as possible. However, this legislation will do very little to prevent future such episodes of mass dolphin deaths. This situation should be a good reminder for all of us not to point an accusatory finger without having all the facts in hand, and not to react in a "knee-jerk" fashion in addressing our pressing national pollution problems.

This year I intend to pursue legislation to remedy the direct discharge of pollutants into our Nation's wetlands, estuaries, near coastal and ocean waters. Also, I will be looking for support for an increase in our research efforts into determining what causes such red tides and how we can protect our coastal waters and marine life from these occurrences. However, I hope these important issues can be pursued in a calm and rational manner.

Mr. Speaker, I commend to my colleagues attention two articles which appeared in the Washington Post and the New York Times concerning the NOAA study.

TOXIC ALGAE KILLED DOLPHINS—MARINE MAMMAL CATASTROPHE BLAMED ON POISONOUS RED TIDE

(By Philip J. Hilts and Lisa Leff)

Half the bottlenosed dolphins off the Atlantic Coast died during the past three years after eating fish loaded with poisonous "red tide" algae, researchers at the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration reported yesterday.

It apparently was the first time that marine mammals have been poisoned on such a large scale, said Dr. Joseph R. Geraci, a veterinarian from the University of Guelph in Ontario, who headed the NOAA team investigating the deaths.

The dolphin deaths were widely reported in the summer of 1987, when hundreds of the dead and dying animals washed ashore on East Coast beaches from New Jersey to Florida. The event sparked concern that a man-made hazard was threatening the species.

As recently as last summer, no one could say what had contributed to the massive kill. But after an 18-month investigation that checked for more than 12,000 chemicals, investigators said the cause apparently was a natural, albeit unusual, event.

More than 750 emaciated and peeling dolphin bodies infected with several common viruses and bacteria have washed ashore since July 1987, but NOAA officials estimate that as many as 3,000 dolphins have died with similar symptoms. Afflicted dolphins continued to wash ashore in large numbers through the first few months of last year, and the numbers of dead are still above normal levels.

Geraci said the mass poisoning was the result of a rare set of circumstances that brought together the poison naturally produced by one species of algae and the dolphins, which do not normally eat the algae.

Some of the animals died from the poison outright, but most died of diseases that overtook them after their immune systems were weakened by eating the toxin-loaded fish.

The poison strikes the central nervous system, the heart and the lungs, Geraci said.

Menhaden, a small fish somtimes used to make fish meal and oil, was apparently the fish that the dolphins ate, Geraci said. The menhaden ate the algae, ptychodiscus brevis, which produces the potent nerve poison called brevetoxin.

Spanish mackerel is another fish that may have eaten the menhaden, and then were eaten by the dolphins in turn, Geraci said.

The scarred dolphins were first noticed in June 1987, when they began turning up on the beaches of southern New Jersey.

NOAA investigators began working on the case that summer and pieced together the following sequence of events that they believe led to the natural catastrophe:

In the fall of 1986, the "red tide" algae began to bloom off the west coast of Florida, a normal annual occurrence. But instead of dissipating over the winter as usual, the bloom continued into the early spring.

A loop current from the Gulf of Mexico drew some of the algae around the tip of Florida and sent it hundreds of miles up the East Coast. By March, the menhaden had begun feeding on the algae, the mackerel feeding on the menhaden, and the dolphins eating both.

The fish were found to have high levels of brevetoxin in their guts, but were apparently not affected by it, Geraci said. NOAA fisheries experts said that because the poison did not show up in the meat of the fish, it would not be a threat to humans who eat fish.

During the summer, the dolphins and the fish headed north toward New Jersey. That year, the fish ran farther north than they had in more than a decade. The dolphins continued to feed on them, and by June began to wash ashore.

Geraci said the dolphins may have been poisoned a second time when they migrated south in the fall. By then, the red tide had drifted north with the Gulf Stream to North Carolina waters, where they poisoned local oyster and clam beds.

The NOAA team had not determined the cause of the deaths until, in January 1988, they investigated a similar but smaller event. That winter, 19 whales washed ashore in Cape Code, dead of paralytic shellfish poisoning. That toxin is more familiar and was quickly identified.

"Then I realized that a toxin could kill marine mammals. I hadn't through of it. Once I had the idea, within 36 hours we confirmed it," Geraci said.

Seventeen dolphin carcasses were examined in exhaustive detail, and of those, eight had brevetoxin in their livers. Some of the others may have, but the data was not clear enough to be certain.

William E. Evans, NOAA administrator, said that a coast watch has been started, including satellite observations of the Gulf Stream and shore observers to look for the red tide in Florida and North Carolina. Others will be started soon in the Chesapeake Bay and the Pacific Ocean. Brevetoxin does affect humans when they eat shellfish contaminated with it. The sickness has symptoms like severe 24-hour influenza, but is not fatal, authorities said.

"DEATH OF DOLPHINS ARE LINKED BY U.S. TO NATURAL CAUSES"

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1—Hundreds of bottlenose dolphins found dead on East Coast shores two summers ago were poisoned after eating fish contaminated with a toxin from an algae rarely found in those waters, a National Ocean and Atmospheric Administration study has concluded.

Gerald Scott, an official of the agency, said that as many as a thousand dolphins, half of the coastal migratory population, were lost. It could take up to a century to regain their former population level, he said. The "red tides" algae was found in the liver and other viscera of menhaden and Spanish mackeral and other fish eaten by the dolphins.

Officials of the oceanic administration said the toxin was not found in the flesh of the fish and thus posed no threat to humans eating fish fillets.

The officials said the algae occurred naturally and not because of any manmade pollutant. The deaths had puzzled scientists for 18 months and caused concern among the public about the health of the nation's waters, some of which are threatened by industrial discharges, sewage, air pollution, and acid rain.

HUNDREDS OF SCIENTISTS

The dolphins' death from such a cause "is a first," said Joseph Geraci, professor of veterinary medicine in the pathology department at the University of Guelph near Toronto. Dr. Geraci headed an 18-month investigation that involved hundreds of scientists at dozens of Federal, university and private agencies and laboratories.

The agency's findings were disputed by Greenpeace, a worldwide environmental group, which said brevetoxin and red tide blooms are common in the Gulf of Mexico, which is inhabited by thousands of bottlenose dolphins. "There have never been any recorded cases of dolphins in the Gulf being affected by brevetoxin," said Bruce McKay, Greenpeace spokesman.

Mr. McKay said the agency supplied no documented evidence for its theory. Officials said a final report would be available in three weeks.

When asked why dolphins survive in the Gulf of Mexico with the red tide algae, Brian E. Gorman, an agency spokesman, said the red tide blooms there tend to be denser and more discrete then that found along the Atlantic coast. "The red tide algae we are talking about in the dolphin episode was more widely dispersed and more easily taken up by the fish," he said.

Agency officials did, however, find elevated levels of some pollutants, mainly PCB's in the internal organs of the dolphins, Mr. Gorman said. But, he said, "We are convinced that it wasn't the high pollution level that lead to their death."

Today's explanation for the dolphins' death is consistent with Dr. Geraci's earlier finds in August 1987 that the dolphins died from common bacteria normally found in coastal waters. Dr. Geraci said today that, while some of the dolphins died immediately from the brevetoxin, others were weakened by it and became more susceptible to bacterial and viral infections.

DR. W.R. GOMES

HON. TERRY L. BRUCE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 21, 1989

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege for me today to recognize the nomination of Dr. W.R. Gomes to the position of dean of the College of Agriculture at the University of Illinois. Through my dealings with the University of Illinois as its Congressman I have developed a great fondness for the quality of research and instruction conducted by an outstanding College of Agriculture faculty. I am positive that Dr. Gomes will provide inspirational leadership for college as it heads into the 1990's.

Arriving at the University of Illinois in 1981, Dr. Gomes was then head of the dairy science department. In 1985, when the animal science department and the dairy science department merged Dr. Gomes successfully headed up the expanded animal sciences department. As an expert in animal reproduction, Dr. Gomes has a long list of scientific research papers and abstracts to his credit.

Dr. Gomes holds a doctorate in animal sciences from Purdue University in 1965, a master's degree from Washington State University in 1962 and a bachelor of science degree from California Polytechnic State University in 1960. He has taught at Ohio State University from 1965 to 1981, with time out as a Fulbright-Hayes professor in Yugoslavia in 1974 and a guest professor at Kyoto University in Japan in 1980. The native Californian was one of six children reared on a dairy farm. As a youth, he was active in 4–H and Future Farmers of America.

As dean of the College of Agriculture, Dr. Gomes' responsibilities will include a $78 million budget, overseeing new research initiatives in animal genetics, biotechnology, and the field of agronomy. The agriculture community of Illinois is fortunate to have Dr. Gomes at the helm directing the university's efforts in this area. I look forward to working closely with this distinguished leader in the field of agriculture during his term as the dean of the College of Agriculture at the University of Illinois.

SENATE—Wednesday, February 22, 1989

(Legislative day of Tuesday, January 3, 1989)

The Senate met at 12 noon, on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Honorable HERBERT KOHL, a Senator from the State of Wisconsin.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

Righteousness exalteth a nation: but sin is a reproach to any people.—Proverbs 14:34.

Eternal God, our fathers' God, thank Thee for the first President of the United States. As we listen to his word today, help us to hear and heed the wisdom which guided him and his peers in founding our Nation. Make us aware that their faith was not incidental or peripheral to their vision for our Nation, but that it was central and foundational. Help us to realize how Biblical truth pervaded their minds and hearts and nurtured their convictions which produced our Nation. Help us to see that if we forsake the spiritual roots which made us great, we imperil the benefits which grew from those roots.

"Our fathers' God, to Thee,
Author of liberty,
To Thee we sing:
Long may our land be bright
With freedom's holy light;
Protect us by Thy might Great God our King."

Amen.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

The assistant legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, February 22, 1989.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, section 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable HERBERT KOHL, a Senator from the State of Wisconsin, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. KOHL thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

READING OF WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the order of the Senate of January 24, 1901, the Senator from Virginia, Mr. WARNER, having been appointed by the Vice President, will now read Washington's Farewell Address.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I have the distinct honor and privilege of addressing the Senate today. It is a longstanding custom, reading in its entirety the Farewell Address given by the first President of the United States, who said:

To the people of the United States.

FRIENDS AND FELLOW CITIZENS: The period for a new election of a citizen to administer the executive government of the United States being not far distant, and the time actually arrived when your thoughts must be employed in designating the person who is to be clothed with that important trust, it appears to me proper, especially as it may conduce to a more distinct expression of the public voice, that I should now apprise you of the resolution I have formed, to decline being considered among the number of those, out of whom a choice is to be made.

I beg you, at the same time, to do me the justice to be assured, that this resolution has not been taken, without a strict regard to all the considerations appertaining to the relation which binds a dutiful citizen to his country; and that, in withdrawing the tender of service which silence in my situation might imply, I am influenced by no diminution of zeal for your future interest; no deficiency of grateful respect for your past kindness; but am supported by a full conviction that the step is compatible with both.

The acceptance of, and continuance hitherto in the office to which your suffrages have twice called me, have been a uniform sacrifice of inclination to the opinion of duty, and to a deference for what appeared to be your desire. I constantly hoped that it would have been much earlier in my power, consistently with motives which I was not at liberty to disregard, to return to that retirement from which I had been reluctantly drawn. The strength of my inclination to do this, previous to the last election, had even led to the preparation of an address to declare it to you; but mature reflection on the then perplexed and critical posture of our affairs with foreign nations, and the unanimous advice of persons entitled to my confidence, impelled me to abandon the idea.

I rejoice that the state of your concerns external as well as internal, no longer renders the pursuit of inclination incompatible with the sentiment of duty or propriety; and am persuaded, whatever partiality may be retained for my services, that in the present circumstances of our country, you will not disapprove my determination to retire.

The impressions with which I first undertook the arduous trust, were explained on the proper occasion. In the discharge of this trust, I will only say that I have, with good intentions, contributed towards the organization and administration of the government, the best exertions of which a very fallible judgment was capable. Not unconscious in the outset, of the inferiority of my qualifications, experience, in my own eyes, perhaps still more in the eyes of others, has strengthened the motives to diffidence of myself; and, every day, the increasing weight of years admonishes me more and more, that the shade of retirement is as necessary to me as it will be welcome. Satisfied that if any circumstances have given peculiar value to my services they were temporary, I have the consolation to believe that, while choice and prudence invite me to quit the political scene, patriotism does not forbid it.

In looking forward to the moment which is to terminate the career of my political life, my feelings do not permit me to suspend the deep acknowledgment of that debt of gratitude which I owe to my beloved country, for the many honors it has conferred upon me; still more for the steadfast confidence with which it has supported me; and for the opportunities I have thence enjoyed of manifesting my inviolable attachment, by services faithful and persevering, though in usefulness unequal to my zeal. If benefits have resulted to our country from these services, let it always be remembered to your praise, and as an instructive example in our annals, that under circumstances in which the passions, agitated in every direction, were liable to mislead amidst appearances sometimes dubious, vicissitudes of fortune often discouraging—in situations in which not unfrequently, want of success has countenanced the spirit of criticism—the constancy of your support was the essential prop of the efforts, and a guarantee of the plans, by which they were effected. Profoundly penetrated with this idea, I shall carry it with me to my grave, as a strong incitement to unceasing vows that heaven may continue to you the choicest tokens of its beneficence—that your union and brotherly affection may be perpetual—that the free constitution, which is the work of your hands, may be sacredly maintained—that its administration in every department may be stamped with wisdom and virtue—that, in fine, the happiness of the people of these states, under the auspices of liberty, may be made complete by so careful a preservation, and so prudent a use of this blessing, as will acquire to them the glory of recommending it to the applause, the affection and adoption of every nation which is yet a stranger to it.

Here, perhaps, I ought to stop. But a solicitude for your welfare, which cannot end but with my life, and the apprehension of danger, natural to that solicitude, urge me, on an occasion like the present, to offer to your solemn contemplation, and to recommend to your frequent review, some sentiments which are the result of much reflection, of no inconsiderable observation, and which appear to me all important to the permanency of your felicity as a people. These will be offered to you with the more freedom, as you can only see in them the disinterested warnings of a parting friend, who can possibly have no personal motive to bias his counsel. Nor can I forget, as an encouragement to it, your indulgent reception of my sentiments on a former and not dissimilar occasion.

Interwoven as is the love of liberty with every ligament of your hearts, no recommendation of mine is necessary to fortify or confirm the attachment.

The unity of government which constitutes you one people, is also now dear to you. It is justly so; for it is a main pillar in the edifice of your real independence; the support of your tranquility at home; your peace abroad; of your safety; of your prosperity; of that very liberty which you so highly prize. But, as it is easy to foresee that, from different causes and from different quarters much pains will be taken, many artifices employed, to weaken in your minds the conviction of this truth; as this is the point in your political fortress against which the batteries of internal and external enemies will be most constantly and actively (though often covertly and insidiously) directed; it is of infinite movement, that you should properly estimate the immense value of your national union to your collective and individual happiness; that you should cherish a cordial, habitual, and immovable attachment to it; accustoming yourselves to think and speak of it as of the palladium of your political safety and prosperity; watching for its preservation with jealous anxiety; discountenancing whatever may suggest even a suspicion that it can, in any event, be abandoned; and indignantly frowning upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest, or to enfeeble the sacred ties which now link together the various parts.

For this you have every inducement of sympathy and interest. Citizens by birth, or choice, of a common country, that country has a right to concentrate your affections. The name of American, which belongs to you in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism, more than any appellation derived from local discriminations. With slight shades of difference, you have the same religion, manners, habits, and political principles. You have, in a common cause, fought and triumphed together; the independence and liberty you possess, are the work of joint counsels, and joint efforts, of common dangers, sufferings and successes.

But these considerations, however powerfully they address themselves to your sensibility, are greatly outweighed by those which apply more immediately to your interest.—Here, every portion of our country finds the most commanding motives for carefully guarding and preserving the union of the whole.

The north, in an unrestrained intercourse with the south, protected by the equal laws of a common government, finds in the productions of the latter, great additional resources of maritime and commercial enterprise, and precious materials of manufacturing industry.—The south, in the same intercourse, benefiting by the same agency of the north, sees its agriculture grow and its commerce expand. Turning partly into its own channels the seamen of the north, it finds its particular navigation invigorated; and while it contributes, in different ways, to nourish and increase the general mass of the national navigation, it looks forward to the protection of a maritime strength, to which itself is unequally adapted. The east, in a like intercourse with the west, already finds, and in the progressive improvement of interior communications by land and water, will more and more find a valuable vent for the commodities which it brings from abroad, or manufactures at home. The west derives from the east supplies requisite to its growth and comfort—and what is perhaps of still greater consequence, it must of necessity owe the secure enjoyment of indispensable outlets for its own productions, to the weight, influence, and the future maritime strength of the Atlantic side of the Union, directed by an indissoluble community of interest as one nation. Any other tenure by which the west can hold this essential advantage, whether derived from its own separate strength; or from an apostate and unnatural connection with any foreign power, must be intrinsically precarious.

While then every part of our country thus feels an immediate and particular interest in union, all the parts combined cannot fail to find in the united mass of means and efforts, greater strength, greater resource proportionably greater security from external danger, a less frequent interruption of their peace by foreign nations; and, what is of inestimable value, they must derive from union, an exemption from those broils and wars between themselves, which so frequently afflict neighboring countries not tied together by the same government; which their own rivalship alone would be sufficient to produce, but which opposite foreign alliances, attachments, and intrigues, would stimulate and embitter.—Hence likewise, they will avoid the necessity of those overgrown military establishments, which under any form of government are inauspicious to liberty, and which are to be regarded as particularly hostile to republican liberty. In this sense it is, that your union ought to be considered as a main prop of your liberty, and that the love of the one ought to endear to you the preservation of the other.

These considerations speak a persuasive language to every reflecting and virtuous mind, and exhibit the continuance of the union as a primary object of patriotic desire. Is there a doubt whether a common government can embrace so large a sphere? Let experience solve it. To listen to mere speculation in such a case were criminal. We are authorized to hope that a proper organization of the whole, with the auxiliary agency of governments for the respective subdivisions, will afford a happy issue to the experiment. It is well worth a fair and full experiment. With such powerful and obvious motives to union, affecting all parts of our country, while experience shall not have demonstrated its impracticability, there will always be reason to distrust the patriotism of those who, in any quarter, may endeavor to weaken its hands.

In contemplating the causes which may disturb our Union, it occurs as matter of serious concern, that any ground should have been furnished for characterizing parties by geographical discriminations,—northern and southern—Atlantic and western; whence designing men may endeavor to excite a belief that there is a real difference of local interests and views. One of the expedients of party to acquire influence within particular districts, is to misrepresent the opinions and aims of other districts. You cannot shield yourselves too much against the jealousies and heart burnings which spring from these misrepresentations; they tend to render alien to each other those who ought to be bound together by fraternal affection. The inhabitants of our western country have lately had a useful lesson on this head; they have seen, in the negotiations by the executive, and in the unanimous ratification by the senate of the treaty with Spain, and in the universal satisfaction at the event throughout the United States, a decisive proof how unfounded were the suspicions propagated among them of a policy in the general government and in the Atlantic states, unfriendly to their interests in regard to the Mississippi. They have been witnesses to the formation of two treaties, that with Great Britain and that with Spain, which secure to them everything they could desire, in respect to our foreign relations, towards confirming their prosperity. Will it not be their wisdom to rely for the preservation of these advantages on the union by which they were procured? will they not henceforth be deaf to those advisers, if such they are, who would sever them from their brethren and connect them with aliens?

To the efficacy and permanency of your Union, a government for the whole is indispensable. No alliances, however strict, between the parts can be an adequate substitute; they must inevitably experience the infractions and interruptions which all alliances, in all times, have experienced. Sensible of this momentous truth, you have improved upon your first essay, by the adoption of a constitution of government, better calculated than your former, for an intimate union, and for the efficacious management of your common concerns. This government, the offspring of our own choice, uninfluenced and unawed, adopted upon full investigation and mature deliberation, completely free in its principles, in the distribution of its powers, uniting security with energy, and containing within itself a provision for its own amendment, has a just claim to your confidence and your support. Respect for its authority, compliance with its laws, acquiescence in its measures, are duties enjoined by the fundamental maxims of true liberty. The basis of our political system is the right of the people to make and to alter their constitutions of government.—But the constitution which at any time exists, until changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people, is sacredly obligatory upon all. The very idea of the power, and the right of the people to establish government, presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government.

All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberations and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency.—They serve to organize faction, to give it an artificial and extraordinary force, to put in the place of the delegated will of the nation the will of party, often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community; and, according to the alternate triumphs of different parties, to make the public administration the mirror of the ill concerted and incongruous projects of factions, rather than the organ of consistent and wholesome plans digested by common councils, and modified by mutual interests.

However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely, in the course of time and things, to become potent engines, by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men, will be enabled to subvert the power of the people, and to usurp for themselves the reigns of government; destroying afterwards the very engines which have lifted them to unjust dominion.

Towards the preservation of your government and the permanency of your present happy state, it is requisite, not only that you steadily discountenance irregular opposition to its acknowledged authority, but also that you resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretext. One method of assault may be to effect, in the forms of the constitution, alterations which will impair the energy of the system; and thus to undermine what cannot be directly overthrown. In all the changes to which you may be invited, remember that time and habit are at least as necessary to fix the true character of governments, as of other human institutions:—that experience is the surest standard by which to test the real tendency of the existing constitution of a country:—that facility in changes, upon the credit of mere hypothesis and opinion exposes to perpetual change from the endless variety of hypothesis and opinion: and remember, especially, that for the efficient management of your common interests in a country so extensive as ours, a government of as much vigor as is consistent with the perfect security of liberty is indispensable. Liberty itself will find in such a government, with powers properly distributed and adjusted, its surest guardian. It is, indeed, little else than a name, where the government is too feeble to withstand the enterprises of fraction, to confine each member of the society within the limits prescribed by the laws, and to maintain all in the secure and tranquil enjoyment of the rights of person and property.

I have already intimated to you the danger of parties in the state, with particular references to the founding them on geographical discrimination. Let me now take a more comprehensive view, and warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effects of the spirit of party generally.

This spirit, unfortunately, is inseparable from our nature, having its root in the strongest passions of the human mind.—It exists under different shapes in all governments, more or less stifled, controlled, or repressed; but in those of the popular form it is seen in its greatest rankness, and is truly their worst enemy.

The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge natural to party dissension, which in different ages and countries has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism.—But this leads at length to a more formal and permanent despotism. The disorders and miseries which result, gradually incline the minds of men to seek security and repose in the absolute power of an individual; and, sooner or later, the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purpose of his own elevation on the ruins of public liberty.

Without looking forward to an extremity of this kind, (which nevertheless ought not to be entirely out of sight) the common and continual mischiefs of the spirit of party are sufficient to make it the interest and duty of a wise people to discourage and restrain it.

It serves always to distract the public councils, and enfeeble the public administration. It agitates the community with ill founded jealousies and false alarms; kindles the animosity of one party against another; foments occasional riot and insurrection. It opens the door to foreign influence and corruption, which finds a facilitated access to the government itself through the channels of party passions. Thus the policy and the will of one country are subjected to the policy and will of another.

There is an opinion that parties in free countries are useful checks upon the administration of the government, and serve to keep alive the spirit of liberty. This within certain limits is probably true; and in governments of a monarchial cast, patriotism may look with indulgence, if not with favor, upon the spirit of party. But in those of the popular character, in governments purely elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. From their natural tendency, it is certain there will always be enough of that spirit for every salutary purpose. And there being constant danger of excess, the effort ought to be, by force of public opinion, to mitigate and assuage it. A fire not to be quenched, it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent it bursting into a flame, lest instead of warming, it should consume.

It is important likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration, to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department, to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. A just estimate of that love of power and proneness to abuse it which predominate in the human heart, is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position. The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power, by dividing and distributing it into different depositories, and constituting each the guardian of the public weal against invasions of the others, has been evinced by experiments ancient and modern: some of them in our country and under our own eyes.—To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them. If, in the opinion of the people, the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the constitution designates.—But let there be no change by unsurpation; for through this, in one instance, may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil, any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism, who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and to cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked, where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice? and let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect, that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle.

It is substantially true, that virtue or morality is a necessary spring of popular government. The rule, indeed, extends with more or less force to every species of free government. Who that is a sincere friend to it can look with indifference upon attempts to shake the foundation of the fabric?

Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it should be enlightened.

As a very important source of strength and security, cherish public credit. One method of preserving it is to use it as sparingly as possible, avoiding occasions of expense by cultivating peace but remembering, also, that timely disbursements, to prepare for danger, frequently prevent much greater disbursements to repel it; avoiding likewise the accumulation of debt, not only by shunning occasions of expense, but by vigorous exertions, in time of peace, to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars may have occasioned, but ungenerously throwing upon posterity the burden which we ourselves ought to bear. The execution of these maxims belongs to your representatives, but it is necessary that public opinion should co-operate. To facilitate to them the performance of their duty, it is essential that you should practically bear in mind, that towards the payment of debts there must be revenue; that to have revenue there must be taxes; that no taxes can be devised which are not more or less inconvenient and unpleasant; that the intrinsic embarrassment inseparable from the selection of the proper object (which is always a choice of difficulties), ought to be a decisive motive for a candid construction of the conduct of the government in making it, and for a spirit of acquiescence in the measures for obtaining revenue, which the public exigencies may at any time dictate.

Observe good faith and justice toward all nations; cultivate peace and harmony with all. Religion and morality enjoin this conduct, and can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and, at no distant period, a great nation, to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence. Who can doubt but, in the course of time and things, the fruits of such a plan would richly repay any temporary advantages which might be lost by a steady adherence to it; can it be that Providence has not connected the permanent felicity of a nation within its virtue? The experiment, at least, is recommended by every sentiment which ennobles human nature. Alas! is it rendered impossible by its vices?

In the execution of such a plan, nothing is more essential than that permanent, inveterate antipathies against particular nations and passionate attachment for others, should be excluded; and that, in place of them, just and amicable feelings towards all should be cultivated. The nation which indulges towards another an habitual hatred, or an habitual fondness, is in some degree a slave. It is a slave to its animosity or to its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest. Antipathy in one nation against another, disposes each more readily to offer insult and injury, to lay hold of slight causes of umbrage, and to be haughty and intractable when accidental or trifling occasions of dispute occur. Hence, frequent collisions, obstinate, envenomed, and bloody contests. The nation, prompted by ill will and resentment, sometimes impels to war the government, contrary to the best calculations of policy. The government sometimes participates in the national propensity, and adopts through passion what reason would reject; at other times, it makes the animosity of the nation subservient to projects of hostility, instigated by pride, ambition, and other sinister and pernicious motives. The peace often, sometimes perhaps the liberty of nations, has been the victim.

So likewise, a passionate attachment of one nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favorite nation, facilitating the illusion of an imaginary common interest, in cases where no real common interest exists, and infusing into one the enmities of the other, betrays the former into a participation in the quarrels and wars of the latter, without adequate inducements or justifications. It leads also to concessions, to the favorite nation, of privileges denied to others, which is apt doubly to injure the nation making the concessions, by unnecessarily parting with what ought to have been retained, and by exciting jealousy, ill will, and disposition to retaliate in the parties from whom equal privileges are withheld; and it gives to ambitious, corrupted or deluded citizens who devote themselves to the favorite nation, facility to betray or sacrifice the interests of their own country, without odium, sometimes even with popularity; gilding with the appearances of a virtuous sense of obligation, a commendable deference for public opinion, or a laudable zeal for public good, the base or foolish compliances of ambition, corruption, or infatuation.

As avenues to foreign influence in innumberable ways, such attachments are particularly alarming to the truly enlightened and independent patriot.

How many opportunities do they afford to tamper with domestic factions, to practice the arts of seduction, to mislead public opinion, to influence or awe the public councils!—Such an attachment of a small or weak, towards a great and powerful nation, dooms the former to be the satellite of the latter.

Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence, (I conjure you to believe me fellow citizens,) the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake; since history and experience prove, that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. But that jealousy, to be useful, must be impartial, else it becomes the instrument of the very influence to be avoided, instead of a defense against it. Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike for another, cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots, who may resist the intrigues of the favorite, are liable to become suspected and odious; while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people, to surrender their interests.

The great rule of conduct for us, in regard to foreign nations, is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith:—Here let us stop.

Europe has a set of primary interests, which to us have none, or a very remote relation. Hence, she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves, by artificial ties, in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics, or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.

Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one people, under an efficient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon, to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation, when we may choose peace or war, as our interest, guided by justice, shall counsel.

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice?

It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliance with any portion of the foreign world; so far, I mean, as we are now at liberty to do it; for let me not be understood as capable of patronizing infidelity to existing engagements. I hold the maxim no less applicable to public than private affairs, that honesty is always the best policy. I repeat it, therefore, let those engagements be observed in their genuine sense. But in my opinion, it is unnecessary, and would be unwise to extend them.

Taking care always to keep ourselves by suitable establishments, on a respectable defense posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

Harmony, and a liberal intercourse with all nations, are recommended by policy, humanity, and interest. But even our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand; neither seeking nor granting exclusive favors or preferences; consulting the natural course of things; diffusing and diversifying by gentle means the streams of commerce, but forcing nothing; establishing with powers so disposed, in order to give trade a stable course, to define the rights of our merchants, and to enable the government to support them, conventional rules of intercourse, the best that present circumstances and mutual opinion will permit, but temporary, and liable to be from time to time abandoned or varied as experience and circumstances shall dictate; constantly keeping in view, that it is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from another; that it must pay with a portion of its independence for whatever it may accept under that character; that by such acceptance, it may place itself in the condition of having given equivalents for nominal favors, and yet of being reproached with ingratitude for not giving more. There can be no greater error than to expect, or calculate upon real favors from nation to nation. It is an illusion which experience must cure, which a just pride ought to discard.

In offering to you, my countrymen, these counsels of an old and affectionate friend, I dare not hope they will make the strong and lasting impression I could wish; that they will control the usual current of the passions, or prevent our nation from running the course which has hitherto marked the destiny of nations, but if I may even flatter myself that they may be productive of some partial benefit, some occasional good; that they may now and then recur to moderate the fury of party spirit, to warn against the mischiefs of foreign intrigue, to guard against the impostures of pretended patriotism; this hope will be a full recompense for the solicitude for your welfare by which they have been dictated.

How far, in the discharge of my official duties, I have been guided by the principles which have been delineated, the public records and other evidences of my conduct must witness to you and to the world. To myself, the assurance of my own conscience is, that I have, at least, believed myself to be guided by them.

In relation to the still subsisting war in Europe, my proclamation of the 22d of April, 1793, is the index to my plan. Sanctioned by your approving voice, and by that of your representatives in both houses of congress, the spirit of that measure has continually governed me, uninfluenced by any attempts to deter or divert me from it.

After deliberate examination, with the aid of the best lights I could obtain, I was well satisfied that our country, under all the circumstances of the case, had a right to take, and was bound, in duty and interest, to take a neutral position. Having taken it, I determined, as far as should depend upon me, to maintain it with moderation, perseverance and firmness.

The considerations which respect the right to hold this conduct, it is not necessary on this occasion to detail. I will only observe that, according to my understanding of the matter, that right, so far from being denied by any of the belligerent powers, has been virtually admitted by all.

The duty of holding a neutral conduct may be inferred, without any thing more, from the obligation which justice and humanity impose on every nation, in cases in which it is free to act, to maintain inviolate the relations of peace and amity towards other nations.

The inducements of interest for observing that conduct will best be referred to your own reflections and experience. With me, a predominant motive has been to endeavor to gain time to our country to settle and mature its yet recent institutions, and to progress, without interruption, to that degree of strength, and consistency which is necessary to give it, humanly speaking, the command of its own fortunes.

Though in reviewing the incidents of may administration, I am unconscious of intentional error, I am nevertheless too sensible to my defects not to think it probable that I may have committed many errors. Whatever they may be, I fervently beseech the Almighty to avert or mitigate the evils to which they may tend. I shall also carry with me the hope that my country will never cease to view them with indulgence; and that, after forty-five years of my life dedicated to its service, with an upright zeal, the faults of incompetent abilities will be consigned to oblivion, as myself must soon be to the mansions of rest.

Relying on its kindness in this as in other things, and actuated by that fervent love towards it, which is so natural to a man who views in it the native soil of himself and his progenitors for several generations; I anticipate with pleasing expectation that retreat in which I promise myself to realize, without alloy, the sweet enjoyment of partaking, in the midst of my fellow citizens, the benign influence of good laws under a free government—the ever favorite object of my heart, and the happy reward, as I trust, of our mutual cares, labors and dangers.

GEO. WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES,
17th September, 1796.

RECESS UNTIL 2:15 P.M.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate stands in recess until the hour of 2:15 p.m.

Thereupon, at 12:55 p.m., the Senate recessed until 2:15 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer [Mr. LIEBERMAN].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Chair recognizes the Senate majority leader.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

SENATE AGENDA

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, for the information of Senators, I will now describe my plans for the Senate schedule for the next 3 weeks, including a description of the schedule for handling the nomination of Senator Tower and other nominations pending.

It is my intention to put the Senate over until 4 p.m. tomorrow following today's business and to be in on Friday for a pro forma session only. The Senate will then stand in recess until 2:15 p.m. on Tuesday, February 28.

It appears that none of the remaining nominations will be ready for floor actions this week. Therefore, I do not anticipate any rollcall votes this week. With no votes scheduled, it will permit committees to conduct business uninterrupted.

The Energy Committee will hold hearings today on the nomination of Adm. James D. Watkins to be Secretary of Energy. The committee expects to vote on the nomination next week.

The hearings and markup on the nomination of Louis W. Sullivan to be Secretary of Health and Human Services will take place on tomorrow. The Finance Committee would like to have the nomination scheduled for floor action on Tuesday, February 28. The Judiciary Committee, at the request of the White House and the nominee, has presently announced hearings on March 1 and 2 on the nomination of William J. Bennett to be Director of National Drug Control Policy.

In order to accommodate scheduling problems, the Veterans' Affairs Committee has postponed its consideration of the nomination of Edward J. Derwinski to be Secretary of Veterans' Affairs until the week of February 27.

The Armed Services Committee hopes to vote on the nomination of John Tower to be Secretary of Defense on this Thursday, February 23. If the nomination is reported to the Senate, it is my intention to call it up on next Wednesday, March 1, with a final vote occurring either on Wednesday or Thursday. The committee report will hopefully be available to Senators on next Monday.

The FBI reports will be available for Senators in S407 of the Capitol on next Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday.

With respect to the Legislative Calendar, the schedule for the whistleblower protection bill, S. 20, has been delayed, at the administration's request, until early next week.

The Rules Committee is expected to report out the omnibus committee funding resolution on Thursday of this week. It is my intention to seek prompt consideration for this resolution. If there are no amendments, then that resolution should be disposed of quickly and possibly without a rollcall vote. However, if there are amendments, rollcall votes are possible in connection with the resolution. If that is the case, it is my intention to then turn to the consideration of this resolution as the first order of business on next Tuesday.

It is also my intention to schedule the deliberations on Judge Hastings' motions to dismiss some of the articles of impeachment for Wednesday and Thursday, March 8 and 9. Senators should arrange their schedules so that they will be able to attend these important proceedings.

I understand the Labor Committee is expected to report the minimum wage bill on Wednesday, March 8. Should the bill be reported at that time, it is my intention to schedule minimum wage legislation the following week.

In summary, there will be no rollcall votes this week. Next week, on Tuesday, there may be a vote on the Sullivan nomination as well as a vote, or votes, on the committee funding resolution. On Wednesday or Thursday, there may be a vote on the Tower nomination.

On the following week, there will be debate and votes on the motion to dismiss some of the articles of impeachment against Judge Hastings, and on other nominations which may be ready for Senate action.

Finally, on the week after that, there may be debate and votes on the minimum wage bill.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, on February 2, 1989, the Senate agreed to Senate Resolution 39, which had been reported by the Committee on Rules and Administration, to provide for the filing and argument of motions by Judge Alcee L. Hastings to dismiss articles of impeachment against him. A second resolution reported by the Committee on Rules and Administration, Senate Resolution 38, would provide for the appointment of a committee pursuant to Senate Impeachment Rule XI to receive and report to the Senate evidence with respect to this impeachment. The Committee on Rules and Administration recommended that the Senate defer consideration of Senate Resolution 38, on the appointment of an evidentiary committee, until after the full Senate hears and acts on Judge Hastings' motions to dismiss.

In accordance with the schedule set forth in Senate Resolution 39, Judge Hastings has filed a motion to dismiss article I through XV of the Articles of Impeachment and a memorandum in support of that motion. Article I alleges that Judge Hastings engaged in 1981 in a corrupt conspiracy to obtain a bribe in a criminal case in which he was the trial judge. Articles II through XV allege that at his trial for bribery in 1983, Judge Hastings made various false statements. Judge Hastings has moved to dismiss articles I through XV on the grounds that his acquittal in 1983 bars an impeachment trial on those articles and that he has been prejudiced by the lapse of time between 1983 and the present.

Judge Hastings has also filed a motion to dismiss article XVII. That article alleges that because of the actions alleged in the preceding articles, Judge Hastings has undermined confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary. Judge Hastings did not move to dismiss article XVI, which alleges that he improperly disclosed confidential information that he learned in 1985 as the supervising judge of a wiretap.

The House of Representatives is scheduled to file an opposition to these motions by February 24, and Judge Hastings may file a reply to the House opposition by March 3.

Senate Resolution 39 provides that the majority leader, in consultation with the minority leader, shall designate a date for the Senate to resume its consideration of the articles of impeachment for the purpose of hearing argument on Judge Hastings' motions to dismiss. The unanimous consent agreement, which I will propound momentarily, provides for the Senate to meet on March 8, at 2:15 p.m., to hear argument. It further provides that the Senate will meet the following day,

March 9, at 2:15 p.m., to deliberate on the motions.

Because Judge Hastings has not moved to dismiss article XVI, the Senate will need, at the very least, to consider whether to appoint a committee to receive and report evidence on that article. Accordingly, after the Senate rules on Judge Hastings' motions to dismiss, the Senate should consider Senate Resolution 38 on the appointment of a committee to receive and report evidence in this impeachment. The full dimension of that comittee's task, if the Senate acts favorably on Senate Resolution 38, will depend, of course, on the Senate's actions on Judge Hastings' motions to dismiss.

One preliminary matter when the Senate meets to hear argument on March 8 will be the administration of the constitutionally required impeachment oath to newly elected members of the Senate. Senators who took the impeachment oath when this impeachment was before the Senate during the last Congress will not be required to retake the oath. The Senate has, by Senate Resolution 480 of the 100th Congress, continued these proceedings from the Congress to this one and all actions, including the administration of the oath taken during the last Congress, remain fully effective.

Mr. President, accordingly, I now propound the following unanimous-consent request:

Pursuant to Senate Resolution 39 of the 101st Congress, and after consultation with the minority leader, I ask unanimous consent that:

First, the Senate shall resume, on March 8, 1989, at 2:15 p.m. or following the establishment of a live quorum, its consideration of the Articles of Impeachment against Judge Alcee L. Hastings for the purpose of hearing arguments on motions by Judge Hastings to dismiss articles I through XV and article XVII of the Articles of Impeachment.

Second, the argument of the motions shall be preceded by a live quorum call that shall begin at 2 p.m.

Third, the Sergeant at Arms shall arrange the Senate Chamber for the presentation of the arguments on behalf of Judge Hastings and the House of Representatives.

Fourth, the two motions that Judge Hastings has filed to dismiss Articles of Impeachment shall be deemed, for the purpose of rule XXI of the Rules of Procedure and Practice in the Senate When Sitting on Impeachment Trials, to be a single motion that shall be argued for a time not exceeding 1 hour on each side. Counsel for Judge Hastings may reserve a portion of the hour allotted to him for a reply to the argument by the managers for the House of Representatives.

Fifth, after the conclusion of arguments on Judge Hastings' motions to dismiss, the Senate shall continue its consideration of the Articles of Impeachment on March 9, 1989, at 2:15 p.m., for the purpose of deliberating on, pursuant to rule XX of the Rules of Procedure and Practice in the Senate When Sitting on Impeachment Trials, the motions to dismiss.

Sixth, the deliberations of the Senate on the motions of Judge Hastings to dismiss the Articles of Impeachment shall be preceded by a live quorum call that shall begin at 2 p.m.

Seventh, promptly upon the disposition of the motions to dismiss, the Senate shall consider Senate Resolution 38 of the 101st Congress on the appointment of a Committee to receive and report evidence on article XVI of the Articles of Impeachment, which Judge Hastings has not moved to dismiss, and on any other article that has not then been dismissed by the Senate.

Eighth, the Secretary shall notify counsel for Judge Hastings and the House of Representatives of this unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the several requests of the Senate majority leader?

Mr. DOLE. No objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished Republican leader.

RECOGNITION OF THE REPUBLICAN LEADER

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

NOMINATIONS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, as the majority leader has indicated, we have made these various agreements. As to the summary on page 3, in the event the Watkins nomination has been reported, I assume we would also act on that next week.

But it is our hope that the Tower nomination can be affirmatively disposed of on next Wednesday. I think it is unprecedented that everyone will have access to the FBI reports, and I urge my colleagues before making any judgment—some may have done it without reading the report—to go up and take a look at it.

There have been a lot of stories on television and in newspapers and magazines covering all different facets of this particular nominee and his life. Now we have a rather exhaustive report from the Federal Bureau of Investigation which I think, by a fair reading by any Member of this body on either side of the aisle, will demonstrate that there is nothing in that report to disqualify former Senator John Tower from being Secretary of Defense.

I would add that—and it is of course a matter of importance to us—we have the final say in the U.S. Senate under the advise and consent process. It is extremely important to the Defense Department, the Pentagon, and extremely important to President Bush.

I hope that before anybody gets carried away by some poll they may have read about they would take the time to read the report. There has been a lot of garbage heaped upon this nominee for the last 30 days, and enough garbage heaped on anybody begins to have an impact after a while. That is what has happened in at least one of the polls I have seen taken of the American people. They have not heard anything but hearsay, rumor, and gossip. They have not heard any of the facts. They have not heard the truth. I think it is most unfortunate that we subject the nominee to this humiliation, in some respects. But the facts are there. We have had a thorough investigation by the Senate Armed Services Committee. It has been free of politics. It should remain and will remain free of politics.

Now, as the majority leader has announced, next week—hopefully Wednesday and Thursday—we will make the judgment in the Senate as a whole. But the FBI reports are available. I remember reading back on the availability of the FBI reports. It was not many years ago, as the distinguished former majority leader knows, I think it was the case involving a nominee of President Eisenhower, and at that time they did not pass out the FBI report to everyone in the Senate. Senator Robert Taft was the majority leader. He and Senator Sparkman went down to the FBI. They did not have the report delivered to them. They took a look at the FBI report. They came back and they announced to the Senate that there was next to nothing in it, and that was the end of it. They took the majority leader's word for it, and they took Senator Sparkman's word for it.

In this case I think we all can make our own judgment, but hopefully it will be based upon a reading of the information available. So we are looking forward to that nomination, dealing with the Sullivan nomination, and dealing with the Watkins nomination which I assume will be ready next week. That would leave only two.

I again commend the majority leader for his expeditious action on all nominees as soon as they were available to the Senate.

"THE HISTORY OF THE SENATE" RECEPTION

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I would also indicate, as I have and will to my colleagues, that there is another very important event tomorrow afternoon beginning at 5:30. Our friend and former distinguished majority leader, Senator ROBERT BYRD, will have a reception, but it is a very unique reception.

In this particular reception we are going to be celebrating the publication of "The History of the Senate, 1789 to 1989"—in other words, 200 years—addresses that Senator BYRD has made on this floor, every word on this floor, over the past several years on the history of the Senate. That reception will be from 5:30 to 8 o'clock. I urge my colleagues. It is in room 312, the reception room. I know we will all be there.

Mr. President, I look forward to working with the majority leader—and in effect what he has announced as I understand is a schedule to take us from today until the Easter recess. Is that correct?

Mr. MITCHELL. That is correct.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I reserve the balance of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the majority leader.

UNITED STATES ASSISTANCE TO SOVIET ARMENIA

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the immediate consideration of Senate Resolution 62, the resolution submitted earlier today by Senator SIMON and others on the subject of United States assistance to Armenia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 62) requesting the Secretary of State to submit a report regarding United States assistance to Soviet Armenia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I am very pleased to join with Senator SIMON and Senator PRESSLER in submitting this legislation regarding earthquake relief in Soviet Armenia, and I commend them for the initiative they have taken on this issue.

The earthquake that struck Soviet Armenia on December 7 left more than 25,000 dead and 100,000 injured. Thousands of houses, schools, and stores collapsed as the quake shook hundreds of cities, towns, and villages. More than half a million people lost their homes. Thousands of children became orphans.

This awful tragedy has devastated Soviet Armenia, but it has not crushed the spirit of the Armenian people. No foreigners to adversity, they have faced the calamity with the same courage and strength that has guided them through difficult times in the past. Their spirit has been buoyed by the knowledge that they were not forgotten in their hour of need. At a moment of great human despair, the international community responded with an outpouring of compassion and assistance. The response of the world community gives one hope that human kindness recognizes no boundaries.

The American people rallied to the support of the earthquake victims with urgency and generosity. Food, shoes, blankets, and clothes were flown into Soviet Armenia. Dog teams trained in the United States sniffed out survivors trapped beneath the rubble. Many Armenian children are now being treated for injuries in American hospitals. At last count, American private donations reached $12.5 million. In addition, the U.S. Government, through AID, has provided over $2 million for relief efforts and teams of disaster specialists.

The United States is not alone in its relief efforts. Altogether, 53 governments, seven international organizations, and 38 nongovernmental organizations have provided about $106 million in assistance.

This surge of international support helped meet the most urgent needs of the earthquake victims. Now that the immediate crisis has subsided, however, the long and expensive process of reconstruction must begin. The Armenian people are determined to rebuild their homes, their schools, and their stores. The challenge they face is enormous. It is estimated that reconstruction will cost about $13 billion.

The international community may be able to find ways to help rebuild the collapsed towns throughout Soviet Armenia. It is not clear what form such assistance might take or how it would be coordinated. This legislation asks the administration to prepare a report on the feasibility of organizing an international effort to assist in the long-term reconstruction of Soviet Armenia. The U.S. Government has a wealth of experts in housing, transportation, medicine, and other areas of knowledge that could facilitate reconstruction efforts. Such experts can, of course, be found throughout the private sector as well. Thus, this legislation also asks the administration to explore the idea of establishing a joint public-private task force to participate in an international relief effort.

I hope the international community, which responded with such compassion to the immediate earthquake crisis in Soviet Armenia, will not forget the Armenian people as the long road toward reconstruction begins.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, today my distinguished colleagues Senator LARRY PRESSLER, Senator CLAIBORNE PELL, and I are resubmitting a resolution requesting an administration report on whether it makes sense to continue U.S. assistance to Armenia. The situation in the earthquake-stricken republic is desperate, and it is our hope that the Senate will quickly pass this resolution so that this body can receive the report by April 1, 1989, and consider the Secretary of State's findings.

In my statement of February 2, 1989, I pointed out that we have already provided over $2 million in U.S. Government money, that the American people have donated $12.5 million and that the worldwide public and private contributions have totaled $106 million. The needs of the sick and the homeless are tremendous.

Just recently, on February 9, the 375th Aeromedical Airlift Wing sent a C-9 medical plane from Scott Air Force Base, IL, to Andrews Air Force Base in Maryland, to meet another U.S. cargo plane carrying 37 injured Armenian children. The children were transferred to the special medical aircraft, which then took them to Buffalo and Syracuse, NY. The remainder of the children will go to hospitals in Illinois, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Florida, and Ohio.

We can all be proud of the men and women of the Military Airlift Command who undertook this humanitarian mission. But we cannot lose sight of the stark reality in Armenia: 500,000 homeless, 25,000 people dead, 130,000 injured. It is our hope that the State Department will examine the situation, think through the proper U.S. Government role in the Armenian reconstruction now underway, and give us their expertise.

I urge my colleagues to support this effort.

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I am honored that the Senate has decided to agree to this resolution to require a report from the Secretary of State regarding relief and reconstruction in Soviet Armenia. Senator SIMON and I originally co-authored and submitted the resolution as Senate Resolution 37 on February 2, 1989. To expedite consideration of this measure, it has been resubmitted today. I thank all Senators who have consented to its consideration and adoption today.

The earthquake that struck Armenia without warning on December 7, 1988, killed more than 25,000 people, injured tens of thousands more, left 500,000 homeless, and destroyed vital infrastructure—such as schools, roads, power and communications lines, bridges, and public service and manufacturing facilities. It is estimated that the cost of building new homes and restoring or replacing other damaged property could reach more than $3 billion.

The reaction to the Armenian catastrophe by Americans and citizens of many other nations has been extremely sympathetic and generous. Not only have Americans contributed millions of dollars worth of money and materials to the relief effort, but their government also has assisted with extensive transportation and other logistical support, as well as significant amounts of tools, blankets, tents, medicines, and other supplies. This outpouring of charity by the American people is unique in the relationship between the United States and the Soviet Union in the cold war era.

Our resolution is intended to provide Congress with a comprehensive State Department evaluation of the relief provided since the earthquake and prospects for further assistance. It also calls for a report on available United States Government expertise that would be relevant to reconstruction efforts in Armenia, the feasibility of establishing a joint public and private task force to assist in long-term reconstruction efforts, and the foreign policy implications of United States public and private assistance to the survivors of the earthquake.

Mr. President, I urge our distinguished colleagues to consider and support this timely resolution. Its enactment would provide Congress the information it needs to assess properly the implications of past, current, and possible future Government and private assistance to that area of the world.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the resolution? If not, the question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 62) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, is as follows:

S. RES. 62

Whereas, on December 7, 1988, the worst earthquake in modern times devastated the Soviet Socialist Republic of Armenia in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics (hereafter in this resolution referred to as "Armenia"), leaving tens of thousands dead and seriously injured;

Whereas the earthquake completely destroyed housing, schools, and other buildings in more than one hundred cities, towns, and villages in Armenia;

Whereas the earthquake has literally wiped out the homes and families of hundreds of thousands of Armenians;

Whereas the United States has historically supported the Armenians' struggle to survive through immeasurable adversities during this century;

Whereas the American people have overwhelmingly reaffirmed this tradition of support by their generous assistance to the earthquake's survivors;

Whereas the Agency for International Development, the Department of State, the Department of Defense, the United States Geological Survey, the Department of Energy, and the National Guard have performed admirably in delivering the first phases of emergency relief to Armenia;

Whereas the United States Government should continue as a leader among the nations of the world who have offered assistance to Armenia as it did in response to the earthquakes in Italy in 1980 and Mexico in 1985;

Whereas the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics has allowed unprecedented foreign relief efforts into Armenia; and

Whereas the United States encourages the delivery of additional resources as a part of the continuing relief efforts: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that, not later than April 1, 1989, the Secretary of State or his designee should prepare and transmit to the Congress a report describing—

(1) all United States private and public assistance delivered to Armenia;

(2) the prospects for expeditious delivery of future United States private assistance to, and United States trade with, Armenia;

(3) the existence of United States Government experts in housing, transportation, management, medicine, geology, economic development, and other fields relevant to reconstruction efforts in Armenia;

(4) the feasibility of establishing a joint public-private task force to assist in the long-term reconstruction of Armenia;

(5) the feasibility and wisdom of undertaking a diplomatic initiative encouraging the international community to continue supporting Armenian relief and reconstruction efforts;

(6) any other humanitarian efforts which could facilitate the recovery and rehabilitation of the areas stricken; and

(7) the United States foreign policy implications, if any, of assisting Armenia.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Senate shall transmit a copy of this resolution to the Secretary of State.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I now ask that there be a period for morning business for not to exceed 30 minutes with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMERCIAL ACTIVITIES CONTRACTING ACT OF 1989

Mr. REID. Mr. President, we are all advocates of efficiency. But what can be done about improving efficiency is the real question.

One place I looked was Hawthorne, NV. This is where the Department of the Navy, at a military base more than 50 years old, decided to be more efficient.

The move toward efficiency was to contract out what the Navy themselves had done previously.

This move turned out to be neither efficient nor economical.

That is one reason why I am distressed at how some Federal agencies operate.

That is why I join my colleague, the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. PRYOR], in proposing the Commercial Activities Contracting Act of 1989.

Senator PRYOR and I have joined forces in the past. We worked together for over 2 years to make the taxpayers' bill of rights a reality.

We undertook what was, at times, an arduous process. But the outcome was well worth it.

We were able to effect positive change in a system that previously provided little recourse for taxpayers armed with grievances or faced with challenges from the IRS.

The Commercial Activities Contracting Act, like the taxpayers' bill of rights, is designed to help the American taxpayers—taxpayers who have been wronged.

When it comes to Government contracting out, we have all been wronged. We have all been deceived.

Private contracting is borne from competition, which is a good thing. But Federal agencies justify the use of contracting out with evidence of significant cost savings.

When contractors come in to do the job, all the personnel they displace are not cut from the payroll—they are merely transferred to other positions.

The purported cost savings is an illusion. We pay for the private contractor and many of the individuals whose jobs they are doing.

We ultimately pay more, not less.

The proposed legislation will eliminate the practice of retaining personnel for jobs that others are contracted to perform. There should be no double dipping in the Federal Treasury well.

Contracting out may result in cost savings. But where do those savings go?

The savings should go back to the Federal Treasury—not to the coffers of the Federal agency which set up the contracting out procedure.

I would be most surprised, Mr. President, if the Federal Treasury has seen so much as 1 penny of savings returned to them from Federal agencies.

We are playing with semantics when we talk about savings. And the American people are the big losers in this game. Consider what we are up against. The budget deficit overshadows all our efforts in the Congress. If something is not done, our country's economy and standard of living will buckle under the deficit's impact.

In this most precarious of times, when every penny counts Federal agencies are stashing their savings—for a slush fund with no controls and no budget—rather than giving that money back to the Treasury—to be used for deficit reduction.

According to the Office of Management and Budget, the Treasury would have recouped more than $4 billion in Federal agency savings between 1980 and 1986 if the bill proposed today had been law.

This bill will require Federal agencies to give back to the Federal Treasury any saved or unneeded dollars obtained as a result of contracting out.

The twin towers of debt loom larger everyday, Mr. President.

We are considering creative solutions to the trade deficit.

We realize that productivity and management techniques must be improved before we can reach our goal of exporting more and importing less.

Why can't we look beyond the obvious in reversing the budget deficit?

It's easy to cut programs here, and eliminate funding there. But that only penalizes programs and agencies. We need to look not only at how much money agencies receive, but how they spend that money.

How are resources utilized? What happens when cost savings are attained?

In many cases—nothing constructive. But with the savings these agencies generate, we could make a contribution to reducing our country's deficit.

I encourage my colleagues to join Mr. PRYOR and myself in cosponsoring and supporting the Commercial Activities Contracting Act.

Help us correct abuses in the system. Our Federal agencies should serve as exemplary models of efficiency and accountability. In many instances, they are not.

I yield the floor, Mr. President, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to proceed for 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE FIRST AMENDMENT, RIGHT TO FREEDOM OF SPEECH AND RELIGION, AND SALMAN RUSHDIE'S NOVEL, "THE SATANIC VERSES"

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, today, as we all know, is George Washington's actual birthday. Throughout all the ads we see for Washington Birthday sales and all the various hype that goes with it, we occasionally see something in the press that speaks of a serious thought that relates to the history involved in the commemoration of America's first President.

I thought of that earlier today because I gave a speech on Monday to an international gathering of development agencies that are trying to devise for international banks and others programs for development. And the former Foreign Minister of Peru spoke. He said that "You will honor George Washington this week." He said, "We, too, honor George Washington, because of his dedication to freedom and his dedication to the principles of freedom of expression and of democracy."

It was ironic that we have this man who came from another country praising us for what we have done in the United States. And I thought it only right that as an American, because we have seen in the past few days a very cherished freedom in this country threatened--the freedom of thought, the freedom to publish, the freedom to write—as a U.S. Senator, the least I could do is to raise some of those same issues of freedom that others who have come to our country have raised.

So I want to talk about freedom—the freedom to write and the freedom to read; the freedom to offend beliefs and the freedom to defend beliefs; the precious freedom to express ideas untrammeled by the threat of death.

In the past week, we have witnessed the controversy and now crisis around Salman Rushdie, the Indian-born, Moslem writer, now a British citizen, and his most recent novel, "The Satanic Verses."

I have read the printed excerpts of Salman Rushdie's book—I do not think you can find a copy of the book itself in Washington today. No doubt his words give deep offense to many Moslems. The author explains that his is a work of the imagination—and exploration of good and evil from a secular point of view. He incorporated many symbols sacred to Islam that seem to attack the religion of one-fifth of the world's believers and to question its basic tenets.

I understand that there is a religious and a political basis to the outrage that led—let me outline this for my colleagues: The Ayatollah Khomeini of Iran to call for Rushdie's execution as a blasphemer of Islam; India, Pakistan, South Africa, Egypt, and many other countries with large Moslem populations banned "The Satanic Verses." In fact, even Canada—even Canada, amazingly enough—temporarily halted imports of the book.

Mr. Rushdie has received death threats. So have the publishers of the novel, Viking-Penguin.

And now almost in an obscene fashion, there is a price on Rushdie's head: an Iranian cleric offered $1 million to any foreigner carrying out the Ayatollah's order to murder Rushdie and, in fact, $3 million to any Iranian who would carry out this order of murder.

Moslem protesters in Islamabad, Pakistan tried to storm the United States Information Service Building last week. They did that to protest the U.S. publication of the book. In protesting the printed word, six people were killed during the confrontation that took place when an angry mob was storming the U.S. Information Service.

Mr. President, this chain of events is difficult for Americans to fathom because the Government of the United States, unlike a single leader in Iran, cannot abridge the freedom of speech or inhibit the operation of the press. The first amendment of the Constitution says:

> Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

In America, we recognize the importance of the free flow of information and free discussion of all points of view. In fact, we recognize that it is precisely that pluralism, that diversity of opinion, that makes this country great and causes most of the world to yearn after these freedoms that we take for granted. Experience shows that forbidding the free flow of ideas and punishing people for speech does not discourage speech: It drives ideas underground and encourages conspiracy and hate.

Two of our most cherished rights are interwoven in the first amendment: the freedom of speech and the freedom of religion. By guaranteeing every American's right to choose his or her own religion—or to choose not to practice any religion at all—and by guaranteeing freedom of the press, the first amendment guarantees the diversity that makes democracy possible.

Mr. President, it could be argued that everything that we stand for as a democracy, everything that makes this country great, is contained in that first amendment. The basic freedoms of people to practice religion or not to practice religion, to speak or not to speak, are guaranteed by our Constitution. No Constitution of any country in the world has ever gone that far.

We are blessed by it. That is why we are the strongest democracy in the world.

We in the Congress and those in the Bush administration have a responsibility to remind the world that free speech is our ally, not our enemy. I am relieved that President Bush spoke out strongly yesterday and I urge him to make known at the United Nations our national abhorrence for the terrorism represented by Iran's putting a price on the head of an author. I wait to hear a chorus of outcry from educators, clerics, writers, librarians, politicians, and law enforcement officials.

It saddens me that some American booksellers removed Rushdie's book from their shelves, and that Rushdie's French and German publishers halted plans for translations. It saddens me that terrorism has actually worked in the United States, the most powerful nation in the world.

The work of publishers and booksellers is more than just a business. They are the stewards of the free flow of information throughout the world community. This responsibility means publishers and booksellers must fight attempts to censor books by pressure groups—regardless of whether the pressure comes from the leader of a nation or from a small group of individuals within their own country.

Edward Morrow, a bookseller in Manchester, VT, has described the book community as "having to deal with the feeling of terror that goes with the word terrorism."

He says that clerks in bookstores have to decide whether they want these books in the front window or merely available, on request, in the back room because some may be nervous to have them on display.

Let us keep the first amendment in mind, and speak out strongly against the suppression of freedom of speech internationally. As the novel of Salman Rushdie is burned in the streets of Britain, we in the United States must reaffirm our commitment to freedom of speech.

Let us not condone the terrorism of ideas, whether by silence or cool analysis of fear. All people, all cultures, all religions, will be strengthened by practicing tolerance. Just as we comprehend the threat of Salman Rushdie's works to Islam, so, too, we can preach understanding. Death sentences that threaten free thought will do more damage than one man's novel.

If publishers and booksellers in the United States and throughout the world bow to censorship because of this threat, next week, or next year, or in the year 2000, will we find ourselves banning books written by Roman Catholics, by American Jews, by Americans of Irish descent, or by professors with certain political stripes? The horrifying lessons of Nazism demonstrate the importance of speaking out against this censorship now, before we allow it to grow even further.

Lest we lull ourselves by thinking that all this is happening far away, and in a different culture, let me recall that when film artists in our country interpreted the life of Jesus Christ, they received anonymous death threats. In the artists' minds, "The Last Temptation of Christ," based on Nikos Kazantzakis' novel was a respectful interpretation—to some American Christians it, too, was blasphemy. But the reaction was chilling and disturbing. There are parallels here, and in the recent jailing of a Czech playwright. In the United States, we actually have a duty to protect the ideas and to protect the protest. Law enforcement must zealously protect those whose lives are threatened—whether they are writers, publishers, or the clerk in the local bookstore.

I commend Rushdie's publisher, Viking-Penguin. It resisted self-censorship in the face of mob violence. Moreover, when Iran placed a bounty on the publisher as well as the author of the book, Viking-Penguin refused to back down.

Some American Moslems are peacefully protesting the book at Viking-Penguin's offices in New York. The first amendment protects their right to do so. D.C. Moslems explained their dismay at the book to the press, but renounced violence. I commend those who choose peaceful demonstrations of their opinions. This is what the first amendment is all about: It protects "the right of the people peaceably to assemble."

For years, we have discussed the vulnerability of our open Democratic society to terrorist attacks.

I chaired committee discussions on how terrorism might be exported to our shores. Senators and expert witnesses have even discussed whether the first attempt at mass disruption of our society would be by a biological or nuclear triggered device. But I would never have dreamed that a mere threat would serve as a catalyst for the temporary suspension of the first amendment to the Constitution. I would never have believed that a threat could silence publishers and booksellers in this country, people who have stood up, with courage and conviction, to our Government time and time again.

I would never have believed that an 88-year-old cleric in Iran, by his threat, could make people in the most powerful nation in the world cower and retreat, retreat from a Constitution that we have held dear these 200 years, a Constitution that we have fought wars to protect; that we have given tens of thousands, hundreds of thousands of American lives to preserve. And now we cower and run from the protections of our own Constitution?

If we do that, then the terrorists win.

Many Moslems are offended by the contents of Mr. Rushdie's book. Believing as I do in freedom of religion, I do not want to offend anyone. But however offensive Mr. Rushdie's views may be, publication of his book does not warrant the death penalty.

The death sentence the Ayatollah Khomeini imposed on Salman Rushdie is an act of international terrorism against a citizen of Britain and an artist. It has terrorized the author, who with his family has gone into hiding in Britain with police protection. Now, and quite possibly for the rest of his days, Rushdie will fear for his life. It has terrorized the publishers and distributors of the book. The United States cannot tolerate acts of state-sponsored terrorism.

I commend the members of the European Economic Community, for withdrawing their senior diplomats from Iran, and I call on President Bush to lend his support and that of our great Nation to these sanctions.

On the great marble walls of the Jefferson Memorial are carved words worth repeating and crying out today. Jefferson said:

> I have sworn upon the altar of God, eternal hostility against every form of tyranny over the mind of man.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article by Tom Wicker and an article by William Safire, both of the New York Times, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RUSHDIE AND THE WEST

(By Tom Wicker)

Is the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, in demanding the execution of Salman Rushdie, really defending the faith of Islam, which he contends was blasphemed by certain passages in Mr. Rushdie's novel "The Satanic Verses"?

Or does his threat and offer to pay a reward to an executioner suggest that the Ayatollah is exploiting the faith of Islam to further his own political power?

That possibility was raised by Kayhan, an English-speaking newspaper in Teheran. Kayhan editorially denounced the death threat and the proffered reward as "exceptionally poor and ridiculous methods" that "speak more of domestic political opportunism than a real desire to defend the faith."

The Islamic revolution, centered in Iran, symbolized by Ayatollah Khomeini and embraced by millions of Muslims, was a fundamental reassertion of faith in traditional religious principles and a rejection of Western ideas and the threat they posed to Islam. Recently, however, Government leaders in Teheran seem to have been moving cautiously toward a more secular regime and to be seeking closer ties to the West. Many Iranians bitterly concede they lost the long war with Iraq.

The Ayatollah may have seized upon the publication of "The Satanic Verses" to reawaken the passions of the Islamic revolution and reassert his personal dominance. That Muslim protests began well before he issued his death threat suggests that he inflamed, rather than created, Islamic sentiment.

It was easy to do. Salman Rushdie is a British citizen living and working in the hated West, but born a Sunni Muslim; thus Shiite Muslims, the principal followers of the Ayatollah, had double reason to regard him as a renegade, even before his novel offended two revered tenets of the Muslim religion.

In Islam, the Word embodied in the Koran is considered to have been carried directly from Heaven; unlike the Christian Bible, the text never has been edited, added to or changed. Tampering with that language, as occurs in the novel, is tampering with the received Word of God, an extreme blasphemy for which there is no Christian parallel.

The suggestion, moreover, in "The Satanic Verses" that anyone or anything can or does share in the power of God raises the idea of an alternative Creator, or the Devil. This is a particularly loathsome offense to devout Muslims.

The Islamic reaction, nonetheless whether motivated by religion or politics or both, is offensive to Western sensibilities. More than that, it directly challenges some of the most valuable Western principles—freedom of expression and freedom of religion, and in its post-Khomeini phase the right of an individual not to be lynched by outraged mobs but to be tried fairly by a jury of peers considering legal charges.

In failing to stand up for these principles, the three leading chains of U.S. bookstores deserve criticism, rebuke, even what would hurt them most boycott—but not, under Western customs, death threats. Not only could they have made adequate security arrangements for employees, rather than suppressing sales of Mr. Rushdie's book; in failing even to try to do so, they turned their backs on what has enabled them to compile their wealth—the free circulation of ideas, however controversial.

Most European nations, showing a proper sense of outrage, have recalled their ambassadors from Iran; but little, so far, has been done by the Bush Administration to express their nation's revulsion. Relations with dominantly Muslim nations are important, or course; but so is the defense of ideas embodied more powerfully than anywhere else in the Constitution of the United States.

Those ideas distinguish and honor the West, but they are by no means universal. Indeed, in Islam, Western ideas are seen by many devout Muslims as threat to their system of values and to the religion that they regard as providing a true guide to belief and behavior. Nor can Western ideas be persuasive where the Western presence is contemptuous of tradition, destructive to cultural patterns and insensitive to religious belief.

The lesson of Salman Rushdie's ordeal, as of the Islamic revolution, is that the world of Islam is far different from that of the West, with its own traditions and convictions, to be understood if not accepted, and never to be taken lightly.

BOOKSELLERS IN CHAINS

(By William Safire)

WASHINGTON.—Couple of years ago, the publisher of a novel of mine had a good idea to promote sales. She took me up to Stamford, Conn., to meet the most powerful man in American letters today: Harry Hoffman, boss of Waldenbooks, the chain of 1,200 bookstores that has brought modern merchandising techniques to the archaic book business.

This was one impressive and likable guy. Harry listened carefully to our pitch, made some shrewd suggestions about publicity and arranged for me to speak to a gathering of his store managers, which would create some point-of-sale enthusiasm just before publication date.

I had seen the future of book-selling and it worked. No more of his hokey-pokey distribution through jobbers and slow mails to mom-and-pop bookstores, which usually reorder too late to meet demand. At last the marketing of books had entered the modern era, with computerized inventories and coop advertising and sexy display "dumps."

Such efficient marketing would not only boost the sales of my book, I reasoned, but would create a bigger pie for the whole range of literature in the U.S. Only one person in four who now shops at Waldenbooks buys a book (the three others are waiting for a spouse to try on shoes or whatnot elsewhere in the shopping mall), and if Mr. Hoffman and his chain-store competitors could raise that rate to one in two, all book sales in America would soar.

But I forgot one thing: The ability to distribute books on a vast basis includes control of the decision not to distribute. A system that centralizes creates the power to suppress.

Last week the Ayatollah Khomeini decided that a book written by a British subject, Salman Rushdie, was "satanic" as advertised, and ordered the murder of the author. The Government of Iran put a price on his head. Moslem-influenced nations, which apparently include Brian Mulroney's Canada, stopped the sale of the book. Britain objected to this censorship-by-terrorism, but Mrs. Thatcher had thrown away her moral standing with her recent suppression of a spy book.

It can't happen here, Americans thought. We regularly denounce books, plays and films that offend religious sensibilities, often with great self-righteous fervor, but suppression is not an option. The day of Savonarola's bonfire of the vanities in Renaissance Florence is four centuries past; the astronomer Galileo's abject recantation of reality before the Inquisition is remembered with shame; and our prudish barrier to James Joyce's "Ulysses" in this century is lumped in with that repressive past.

Then it happened here and now, led by—of all people—my erstwhile hero, Harry Hoffman. Panicked at the possibility of terrorism at a bookstore, Waldenbooks announced its refusal to sell "The Satanic Verses." Its competing chains, B. Dalton and Barnes & Noble, cravenly followed suit.

At a stroke, one-third of the bookstores in the United States went into the selective book-suppression business. Leaders of the nation's chain gangs said in effect: "Sorry, First Amendment, and sorry, potential buyers of controversial literature, but our first responsibility is the safety of our employees. This book has been declared dangerous; danger is bad for employee relations; if you want it, try some independent owner who will take his own chances."

Their position is not crazy. I went into a regional chain not participating in the suppression this weekend to buy the Rushdie book (which was sold out) and the young woman at the counter grumbled, "Our boss doesn't care what happens to us."

That sales clerk, whose fear a silent President Bush did nothing to assuage, belongs at some other checkout counter. The book business, like the entire industry of the mind, has responsibilities and protections that go beyond the selling of oat bran and face cream. Even for ever-merging Big Publishing, below the bottom line is another line marked "freedom."

What can book buyers and authors do to prevent these cave-ins to terrorist (or pressure group, or government) threats, short of organizing a consumer boycott of K Mart, corporate parent of Waldenbooks?

Patronize your local independent bookseller. It's like supporting your local sheriff; it may cost a little more than relying on the F.B.I., but you get protection in your own neighborhood.

In unity there may be distributive strength, but only in diversity can we find intellectual safety. To resist conformity, do all the browsing you like at the chain bookstores in the malls, but become a regular customer at your independent bookseller.

PELL CALLS FOR FAIR BREEZE FOR CENTRAL AMERICAN PEACE PLAN

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, last week the Presidents of the five Central American countries declared a new day in the region. They spoke as one in taking a bold step to press for democracy in Nicaragua and to end the Contra war, including the key step of recommending that Contra bases in Honduras should be dismantled.

In return, Nicaragua said it would hasten its compliance with the Esquipulas II accord by holding national elections by February 1990 with free access to the media and measures to assure the participation of opposition political parties. The Sandinistas also pledged to release over 3,000 political prisoners, including former Somoza National Guardsmen and Contra fighters.

I view these developments as encouraging, and for that reason am dismayed by the unenthusiastic reaction of the administration thus far. We should be providing a fair breeze behind this initiative to try to make it work.

One action we can take is to restructure the Contra humanitarian assistance program so it supports this accord. Our programs should facilitate the repatriation and relocation of the Contras and their families to Nicaragua or other countries. The United Nations and other international bodies will be involved in this, and we should give our full support.

There are risks involved. There are no guarantees that the Sandinistas will comply with the accord. They are Marxists who have not given up their Communist principles. But the economic realities they face provide significant pressure.

The United States should make known its support for the plan to give it the best possible chance of working. If it fails, we should not give cause for that failure to be laid at our door.

CONGRESS: TWO HUNDRED YEARS

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, as vice-chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library, I am pleased and proud to bring to the attention of my colleagues "Congress: Two Hundred Years," a series of special programs, symposia, exhibits, and publications sponsored by the Library of Congress during its year-long celebration of the congressional bicentennial.

For 200 years, we and our predecessors in this body and the other body have grappled with national issues; our actions, debates, legislation, and appropriations have shaped the Nation and determined the course of its history. During that long history, our library—and the Nation's library—has also developed as a vital national resource, providing the legislative branch with the knowledge necessary to ensure enlightened debate and policymaking. Drawing upon the unique treasures of the Library—its manuscripts, rare books, maps, drawings, photographs, films, sound recordings—"Congress: Two Hundred Years" at the Library of Congress will explore the origins, growth, and development of the legislative branch, and, in doing so, will encourage the cultural and political literacy of our citizens, the very foundation of democratic government.

The Library's bicentennial celebration was launched on February 8 in Madison Memorial Hall with the opening of an exhibit of congressional district maps titled "The Tides of Party Politics: Two Centuries of Congressional Elections, 1789-1989." I attended the opening with Representative LINDY BOGGS, chairwoman of the House Commission on the Bicentenary, and our distinguished colleague Senator ROBERT C. BYRD, a preeminent scholar of Senate history and Chairman of the U.S. Senate Commission on the Bicentennial.

Beginning in September, a major exhibition entitled "To Make All Laws" will document the institutional development of Congress over the past 200 years and outline its major legislative achievements during that time. This exhibit will be accompanied by a scholarly catalog. The exhibit will be reproduced in three copies, and under the sponsorship of the Library of Congress and the American Library Association, will circulate to over 30 libraries across the country. As chairman of the Subcommittee on Education, Arts, and Humanities, I am particularly pleased that educational materials for the use of teachers and libraries will be made available with the traveling exhibit.

Mr. President, I would like to print in the RECORD the Library of Congress' Calendar of Events for the Congressional Bicentennial Program, and urge my fellow Senators to take advantage of the rare opportunity to view these historic exhibitions and participate in these unique events. They will not only be enlightened and entertained in the process, but will demonstrate their support of the institution which has served us well for nearly 200 years.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS CALENDAR OF EVENTS

THE CONGRESS BICENTENNIAL PROGRAM

February 8: The tides of Party politics: Two Centuries of Congressional Elections, 1789-1989. A cartographic exhibition of the one hundred congressional elections from 1789-1989.

January 1990: Senate Bicentennial Film Festival. A festival drawing on the Library's national collections of motion pictures and televised productions.

Year-Long: Congress in the Year 2000. A special study and collection of commissioned papers, undertaken by the Library's Congressional Research Service.

LOU HOLTZ: NO. 1—AND GEORGE KOCH KNOWS WHY

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, all of us have some very special friends, and I had lunch the other day with one of mine—George W. Koch. George has countless friends in this city because he knows how to be a friend. He is genuine, he is sincere, and my experience with him has demonstrated time and time again that his word is his bond.

George is president and CEO of the prestigious Grocery Manufacturers of America, but there's nothing pretentious about him.

Mr. President, while visiting with George, we fell to talking about a mutual friend—another thoroughly decent guy named Lou Holtz. George Koch and I share the view that Lou Holtz is one of the most remarkable men we have ever known. We swapped stories about Lou, little vignettes that spell out the character of the head football coach at Notre Dame.

Everybody who has any interest in sports at all is aware that Coach Holtz, in his third year at Notre Dame, led his team to the 1988 national NCAA championship. Week after week, I followed the Fighting Irish as they won game after game. A lot of excitement along the way, but not one defeat for Notre Dame. Coach Holtz always gives the credit to others—his players, his coaching staff, the spirit of Notre Dame University which he loves.

That's fine, but George Koch and I know something about Lou Holtz. We know why he is the No. 1 college football coach in the country. We know how he inspires his players—and everybody else with whom he comes in contact.

I have known Lou Holtz since his days as head football coach at North Carolina State University in Raleigh. I followed his career then, and I followed it later as he moved to pro ball as coach of the New York Jets. Then to Arkansas, then Minnesota. And 3 years ago, he realized his lifetime ambition. He was offered the head coaching job at Notre Dame—and he hastened to accept. The rest is history.

Mr. President, Lou Holtz is a winner because he is a thoroughly decent, totally dedicated, amazingly talented man. He is a tough task-master, but every young man who has ever played under him has known that Lou Holtz sincerely loved him. That doesn't mean that Lou Holtz is a pushover. He requires discipline of his team, he teaches his players personal and professional morality. And he has never hesitated to give players their walking papers when they have violated the rules of discipline and personal morality.

So, Mr. President, George Koch and I are not unlike countless thousands of others who admire Lou Holtz, and who have personal stories to share about the greatness of the man. George has his; I have mine. Both of us are proud of Lou Holtz—and this much we know: With the character and dedication that Lou Holtz possesses, he would have been a success in any field he may have chosen.

He happened to choose football coaching and I suspect that Notre Dame University is delighted and grateful that he did.

He demonstrated how to become No. 1.

TESTIMONIAL TO ERNEST A. METTINET, JR., RETIRING VICE CHAIRMAN OF THE HERCULES AEROSPACE CO., AND FORMER PRESIDENT OF THE HERCULES AEROSPACE PRODUCTS GROUP

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I take the floor of the Senate today to honor one of America's distinguished aerospace leaders, Mr. Ernest A. Mettinet, Jr., who retires from his position as vice chairman of the Hercules Aerospace Co.

During his 40 years of service to Hercules, he pioneered technology breakthroughs in high-performance strategic missile motors, and large solid-propellant space motors. He also helped make Hercules the world leader in graphite materials and graphite composite structures.

Ernie's production experience was amply matched by his marketing and management skills. While he served as president of the Aerospace Products Group, sales grew rapidly to over $600 million. Major contract awards on the Delta II and Titan IV solid rocket motors occurred under his tutelage. As he moved toward the end of his long and most distinguished career, Ernie's responsibilities grew—when he retired on January 31, 1989, he turned over responsibility to his successor for more than 6,500 employees in plants in Cumberland, MD; Waco, TX; and the Hercules flagship facility at Bacchus, UT—one of the world's largest rocket motor facilities, representing an investment of over $150 million, currently expanding from an additional investment of $145 million.

Ernie is a long-time and very close friend of mine. I was therefore very pleased to see him lead the Hercules team effort in working with the Department of Defense and State, the National Security Council, the Arms Control and Disarmament Commission, and other official organizations responsible for negotiating and implementing the INF Treaty between the Soviet Union and our country.

For the first time in our diplomatic history, Mr. President, a private corporation, Hercules, was named in a treaty with a foreign state. As is well known, the Hercules plant at Magna, UT, is the only site of resident Soviet inspectors placed there under the terms of the INF Treaty.

I attended many of the meetings in which Ernie argued the Hercules case for assurances that the Bacchus plant, truly a national asset of tremendous value, would be fully protected—both from discrimination by DOD in the letting of future defense awards as well as from unauthorized surveillance and compromise.

In addition to working out the framework by which today's INF inspection regime now operates, Ernie laid the groundwork for future inspection arrangements under treaties which we can reasonably expect to see in the not-too-distant future.

Ernie's service began at the national level, and as we have seen, it ends there. For I do not want to overlook his distinguished record as an infantryman in World War II, where he earned the Silver Star, the Nation's third highest award for valor, along wtih numerous other decorations for gallantry, heroism, and distinction in combat, as well as the Purple Heart for his wounds from that conflict.

Ernie's sense of service is enduring. He has been a long promoter of junior achievement programs and a member of the Blue Cross Board of Trustees. In Utah he served on the State safety council's board and as a director of the great Salt Lake Area United Way. The Utah Manufacturers' Association named Ernie Businessman of the Year in 1984, and he became a member of the board of governors of the Salt Lake Area Chamber of Commerce the following year.

Ernie's commitment to his profession extended to assuring opportunities and training for those interested in science and engineering. He served as a member of the University of Utah College of Engineering State Advisory Board, and Utah State University's National Advisory Council Roundtable.

Nor has Ernie's own alma mater overlooked his accomplishments: In 1988, he was awarded the "Outstanding Graduate" award from the University of Delaware School of Engineering, from which he holds degrees in chemical and civil engineering.

Mr. President, I request that my remarks be printed in the RECORD of this Chamber so that the place of Ernest A. Mettinet, Jr., is given due historical tribute, acknowledging the contributions of this great American to 20th century progress.

NATIONAL PRAYER BREAKFAST SPEECH BY SENATOR ALAN SIMPSON

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise today to bring to the attention of my colleagues a particularly notable and worthy speech which was delivered by the distinguished Senator from Wyoming, Senator SIMPSON. The speech which Senator SIMPSON delivered at the National Prayer Breakfast on February 2, 1989, embodied three crucial and profoundly meaningful themes: the everlasting value of humor, a solid life philosophy, and a deep faith in God and religion.

Senator SIMPSON spoke eloquently on the endearing power of humor to heal and to soften the hardships sometimes encountered in life. He expatiated on his general life philosophy—the importance of a strong foundation of parental love for a child, the value of self-discipline—and the many changes through which this simple yet powerful philosophy has carried him. Finally, he cited a deep and enduring faith in God as the basis for all success, both public and private.

I found Senator SIMPSON's speech to be both inspirational and thought-provoking. For those present, his comments prompted personal reflection on our lives and the paths we have taken, and provided an opportunity to renew our relationships with the Lord. I believe we could all benefit from such moments.

Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the content of Senator SIMPSON's speech be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REMARKS BY SENATOR AL SIMPSON, NATIONAL PRAYER BREAKFAST, FEBRUARY 2, 1989

Thank you, Bob. Mr. President, Barbara Bush, Marilyn Quayle, Dr. Graham, fellow "seekers."

What a rare treat and honor. And Mr. President and our gracious First Lady, and the steady Marilyn, I was pleased to be one of the celebrants at that magnificent ceremony in the National Cathedral the Sunday after your impressive dual inauguration. The world sees you and the Quayles as people of faith and enthusiasm and strong belief and spirit who "live out" your religion—people who "walk the walk" instead of "talk the talk." To have two of the most visible and remarkable families in America and those marvelous children of yours—a strong bond of family and a loving support system—we are indeed blessed.

I am so pleased you learned a bit of our Senate prayer breakfast group from PAUL SIMON. Always a special time. My Father was a member when he was in the U.S. Senate. He is 91 years old. Someone asked him the other day if he had lived in Cody, WY, all his life and he said, "not yet!"

It is here in that weekly gathering that we share our personhood in God—a sharing of ourselves—actually it is more the sharing of our own vulnerabilities. Often provocative—sometimes moving—a continual learning and growing.

Here we are gathered from the world over—meeting in the foundation of faith, the spirit of Christ and the spirit of reconciliation. Not as Christians or Jews or Moslems or Buddhist or Hindu, but all under one common aegis—humans. All who believe in a higher being—whatever that may mean to them individually.

This day is not about formal religion. That was always pretty "heavy" for me as a child. I'm reminded of the one about the restless and active child at the church service—a jumpy rascal. He was "antsy" and always "up to things" and scratching and looking around. But his mother was at the ready. She took the Crayolas and the coloring books and the little pencils and pads with her and he sat there and asked, "what's that over there?" and she said, "well thats the alter." He said, "well what's that over there?" She said, "that's where they baptize people." He looked at a flag and said, "what flag is that?" "Well," she said, "that's our American Flag." And he said, "well, what's that up there on the wall?" "That's the cross of our church." And he said, "what's that over there?" "That's a plaque for the boys who died in the service." And the young kid looked at her with resignation and wistfully rolled his eyes heavenward and said, "which one, the 9 o'clock or the 11 o'clock?"

You like that stuff at this hour? Then how about the little boy sitting in a church service in London and he looked at his mother with a sad expression, and he said, "well, mummy God won't be able to bless us anymore will he?" She said, "why not, my son?" He said, "well, I just heard the minister say that Jesus was sitting on his right hand."

Let me share a few thoughts with you in my brief time this morning about a subject that I know more about than anyone else does. Me! A hazardous statement in Washington, DC, where there are lots of "experts" and "authorities."

Indeed, those who travel the high road of humility in Washington, DC, are not really troubled by heavy traffic.

Let me first tell you that my present faith in God was not what I had in mind at one time in my life!

I was raised by very dear and loving parents and I have so very much to be thankful for. Dad, as I say, 91 years of age, suffering from Parkinsons disease, arthritis, the loss of an eye years ago and sometimes the gentle fog of age rolls over him—but that is always penetrated when you say, "Hi Pop, how are ya?" And he says, "great!" My mother is 88, a woman of immense faith and huge courage and grace and power and strength. My dear and living brother and I often referred to her as "the velvet hammer."

Well, I was a rambunctious and very curious young guy. If it is true that "a spirited colt makes the best horse," then I should have been "Secretariat" or "Whirlaway!" Then I got fat and I had enough blemishes to be in one of those old comic book ads. Then I learned of humor, for I used it to cover pain. Many do. I also used it to cover shyness. Many do. A very valuable lesson for me.

In my formal religion I was baptized in the Episcopal Church. Served as an acolyte, confirmed, and married in that church to this classy lady. I've been living with Ann for 35 years—married all that time of course! You have to say that in politics these days.

Then in high school I was always into something. Then finally I got into "the big something." We destroyed mailboxes, blew them up, shot them up, it was a Federal offense. I was on Federal probation for 2 years. Not the best time of my life—and every time the probation officer came to see me I was shooting pool—in a pool hall mind you! Shades of River City. My parents had thought at birth that I might have had the strong and sensitive hands of a surgeon, but I could really stroke that cue! I'd come home with that green felt stain on the meaty part of my hand. My mother would say, "what have you been doing?" I'd say, "I've been mowing the grass." The old man never cracked a smile. But I was very loved. The single most important thing to give a child—love. I thought "why am I doing these things?" Am I doing that to hurt my parents, for obviously and visibly they were hurt enough—especially when the old man cried at the dinner table once and said, "where have we failed?" Oh yes, I'd get guilty about that but never to the point of limiting my activities.

And then off to college. I thought I was quite the big cheese, the "Bolshoi Shiska" as they say in Russian, the "Big pine cone." I smoked about three packs a day. Got to be a fine broth of a boy. I weighed 260 pounds, had hair and thought beer was food. Yes, that was me—the "me" of age 21. I also got in a couple of slugfests—spent a couple of nights in the clink. Even Ann's sorority sisters wouldn't raise the bail for me that night! I had been named to "who's who in American Colleges and Universities" and the president of the University called me in and said, "we're not going to give you that award." I smiled, laughed, made a joke, but there was a real hard lump down inside me. Kind of like cotton balls in my throat choking to come up.

Then off to law school. I married this magnificent lady in '54 and headed for Germany to serve in the Army. There was the test. It was the very first time in my life where other people were telling me what to do—and some real dire consequences out there if you didn't do it! The humor, the charm, the old stuff—the B.S. didn't work anymore. I was miserable. I couldn't do what I wanted to do. It tore me up. I had ulcers, gas, heartburn, a blood pressure of about 220, depression as if somebody had pulled "the great black sheet" over my head. That stuff happens in life—to almost everybody.

Then out of the Army and back to law school. Slowly I started to sort it out. Searching through it. I call it "creeping maturity." It is pretty slow sometimes. Isn't it an adventure? We search for peace, for stability, for love—to know where our own inner gyroscopes are. We're all seeking the "peace that passes all understanding." And think about that one for a minute. We might have it—or be close to it—and never even know it. For it is beyond our cognitive powers—after all "beyond understanding."

Then in my 30's I grappled with jealousy and possessiveness. Why not? A guy could feel that about a woman like that, couldn't he? And then I struggled with the distortion of love, when we get to a point where we come to love things and try to possess persons—it used to be that we loved persons and possessed things. We learn that we lose a person when we try to possess him or her. And if jealously is one of your little red wagons you'd like to leave back in the shed—go see Shakespeare's "Othello" once more.

Yes, it's sure been a slow process. When I have those pangs of self pity and guilt and compassion fatigue or have that feeling of despair or disquietude and longing that I think no one else has ever had—when I do that I reduce myself to a child again. And when I take "the child" of Al Simpson into a relationship or challenge that demands and calls for "the man," Al Simpson, I can get pretty gummed up!

I practiced law for 18 years and I did about 1,500 divorces over that time and I learned more about my own marriage than I did about others. All the time learning. As we used to say in the pool hall, "going to school on their shot." Finding people you admire, and trying to emulate them. Nothing wrong with that as long as you keep your own uniqueness and don't spend too much time comparing. The very act of comparing puts you in second place. Else why do it? Reading some good books. when somebody says that "bad" books and porno and thrash don't affect people, then how come it is that good and inspirational books do?

There are some very "sure things" that I have found marked on the trees along the trail as I hit 57 years of life with this remarkable lady at my side. There's lots of things I've come to know, but the very prince of a one I learned was where to turn when I didn't know where to turn. One place. Only God.

And I don't often enough match up too well with the continuing care and nurture of my fellow humans.

One that hit me right between the eyes recently was a sermon I heard about caring people going to an institution of people of lesser capacity. Some folks in there were doing pretty well and some were very down and some were just shuffling husks of human beings. This group was passing through them—some ordained and some laymen—lay ministry is just as vital as the clerical ministry in our church. Finally one of the bright very old women looked up as they all leaned down to her and all said to her, "God cares. Our Lord cares about you and God bless you." She stopped them all—held up a gnarled hand, fixed them with a clear and steady eye and she said, "I know God cares. I want to know whether you care?" Now that's where the rubber meets the road. It's too easy to say "God cares for you" and then just go about our lives. We have to be involved. We are the only instruments of His love and care that God has placed here. There are no others.

I often take periodic stock—try to assess as to "how am I doing" with the things that God gave me and entrusted to me here on the Earth? We all hold those things in trust as stewards for God during our lives—and He will gather them back from us—one unknown day. As stewards we must properly care for the things that He has given us. Our Earth, our countries, our homes, our parents, our spouses, our children. We must do that actively and enthusiastically and with faith and good humor—not in monkish and silent ways that close us off and cloister us away from others. And live it. And humor—may I commend that to you? My dear mother living her beautiful life at the age of 88 said to me as a child "humor is the irreplaceable solvent against the abrasive elements of life." So it is.

Our physical bodies will go back to the Earth—to dust—and others will come after us to manage what God has given, and will we really be able to account, will we really have left a better place, a better government in our own lands? A better people? A better world?

What an opportunity! How do we be about it? My wise and earthy dad always said, "to do a thing, be at it." It wasn't original, but he loved it. He also said, and I never forget this, "any damn fool can be unhappy." He also said, "son, I can't tell you how to succeed. But I can sure as hell tell you how to fail—and that's to try to please everybody." For Heaven's sake, take a risk, make a choice! Take a tough stand, don't be one of the "dead unkilled." I see a lot of those kind of people in this community. They sold themselves out somewhere far back down the line. Stay in the present, for living in the present is the truest act of faith. Hear that. And fretfulness and worry are just the opposite of that.

There is a powerful story about the lady who was anguishing through life and stumbling and lashing out. She was filled with hostility and spewing it out to her pastoral counselor, "you tell me you can help to comfort me and give me peace of mind and how in this terrible hell of a world am I going to do that?" That wise man said, "well I'll tell you if you'd like." She said sarcastically—"sure. You mean you're actually going to tell me how to do that? How to get rid of the pain and the pity and the hate and the anxiety and the conflict down inside and you are the person—the smart aleck who is going to tell me all that?" The fellow said patiently, "yes, yes I will." She said, then almost exhaustedly and beseechingly, "okay how do I do that?" The fellow said, "listen very carefully. Hear it. It is one word. It comes up in the east with the Sun. One word. Only one. "Start." This is the only yard marker on the playing field of life. Today. Right now. This instant. This flash of time: February 2, 1989, 9:15, on a bright Thursday morning. "Start." Not too profound is it? But yet it sure is.

Then let me close and share with you "Simpson's Laundry List of Life." It is short:

All of us are worth something.

Love is not enough—but it sure helps.

All of the important decisions of life will be made on the basis of insufficient data.

We are responsible for everything we do.

You can run but you can't hide.

It is most important to run out of scapegoats.

All of the significant battles are waged within the self.

You are free to do whatever you like. You need only face the consequences.

And what d'ya know for sure, anyway?

So I have so very much to be thankful for. Why then am I often limited in word and act and deed? I have found the toughest thing in my life is to learn to forgive myself and yet I have that ability—learned through a belief in a higher power—that openness, forgiveness, and God's wholeness are not separate entities—they are very much the same. Ah, that issue of forgiveness in our lives! I couldn't forgive others until I learned how to forgive myself. I couldn't love others until I learned to love myself. Teachers could forgive me. Principals in school would forgive me. My buddies would forgive. Other parents would forgive me as I often led their sons astray, but boy! It was so tough to do that for myself. To be able to look in that mirror and say: "Al, I forgive you." That is when things began to fall together for me—with God's help. That is when pain passes, when old wounds heal, when new light comes to dark places. The most wretched and sadest thing I ever observed in my life with my fellow humans is the person 45 or 50 or 60 years old still limited and constricted—and almost choking like having that cotton ball in the throat—in their present life—limited and in fear and loathing today—by "something" they did or had done to them that was "bad" or even unforgiveable, at least to them. Way back when they were 6 or 10 or 20 or 40 years old and they just keep bringing it back. Hauling it back in those old red wagons—through the back channels of their mind and laying it on so very hard and heavy on themselves. Well, God never intended that for us. That was not the promise on the cross. The promise was that we would have life and have it abundantly—through forgiveness of our sins and not just the latest ones—all of them.

When I learned God's grace of forgiveness then the boy became a man. I sure wouldn't want to go back. For life is meaningful and savored and joyful and I am excited about life. Excited about these people, excited about this fine President and Barbara and about our fine Vice President and Marilyn, excited about this Government, about this land and about our world. Those are things I wanted to share with you this day. Thank you and God bless you.

TRIBUTE TO CARLEY SULLIVAN

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to Carley Sullivan, a woman who has dedicated her life to bettering the community in which she has resided since 1955, Elko County, NV.

The board of county commissioners in Elko proclaimed Friday, September 2, 1988, as "Carley Sullivan Day" to express their thanks and appreciation for Mrs. Sullivan's continuous public service.

Mrs. Sullivan, a longtime Democratic Party worker, has served as secretary and treasurer for the Elko County Democratic Central Committee. Her commitment to public service, however, extends far beyond any political barriers. She is active in the Business and Professional Women's Club on both the local and national level. She is a member of the Elko Hospital Auxiliary and serves on the Elko County Rural Mental Health Advisory Board.

For 20 years, Mrs. Sullivan has lobbied the Nevada State Legislature in the areas of health, education, juvenile concerns, drug abuse, and safety issues and is the cochair of the First Rural Nevada Women's Conference. She is a board member and past president of the Nevada Parent Teacher Association and has served for 10 years as coordinator of the Governor Youth Traffic Safety Conference. Mrs. Sullivan has done invaluable work on various advisory boards to Nevada Governors Sawyer, Laxalt, O'Callaghan and Bryan and was the Nevada delegate to a White House Conference on Children and Youth.

I could spend an entire day listing the numerous honors and awards which Mrs. Sullivan has received throughout her many years of public service, but a listing of her achievements would hardly begin to illustrate the innumerable contributions which she has made on the local, State and national level. Her dedication to issues which affect our young people, including her active pursuit of educational excellence, is perhaps her most inspiring cause.

We have a shining star by the name of Carley Sullivan in Nevada. The effects of her selfless energy on behalf of her community radiate throughout our State.

In the words of Robert Kennedy:

Let no one be discouraged by the belief there is nothing one man or woman can do against the enormous array of the world's ills—against misery and ignorance, injustice and violence. Few will have the greatness to bend history itself; but each of us can work to change a small portion of events, and in the total of all those acts will be written the history of this generation.

Carley Sullivan is one of those rare individuals whose tireless efforts have brought about a truly changed and better world for us all.

RULES OF THE COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, paragraph 2 of Senate rule XXVI requires that, not later than March 1 of each year, the rules of each committee be published in the RECORD and, that, not more than 30 days after a committee amends its rules, the amendment be published in the RECORD.

In compliance with both of these provisions, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the rules of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs as amended on February 3, 1989, by unanimous vote of the committee, be printed in the RECORD at this point, along with copies of the amendments and of an explanation thereof.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMENDMENTS TO THE RULES OF THE COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS, FEBRUARY 3, 1989

AMENDMENT NO. 1: NOTICE OF ITEMS OF BUSINESS AND AMENDMENTS

At the end of Rule I, insert the following new paragraphs:

"(f) Written notice of a Committee meeting, accompanied by an agenda enumerating the items of business to be considered, shall be sent to all Committee members at least 72 hours (not counting Saturdays, Sundays, and federal holidays) in advance of each meeting. In the event that the giving of such 72-hour notice is prevented by unforeseen requirements or Committee business, the Committee staff shall communicate notice by the quickest appropriate means to members or appropriate staff assistants of members and an agenda shall be furnished prior to the meeting.

"(g) Subject to the second sentence of this paragraph, it shall not be in order for the Committee to consider any amendment in the first degree proposed to any measure under consideration by the Committee unless a written copy of such amendment has been delivered to each member of the Committee at least 24 hours before the meeting at which the amendment is to be proposed. This paragraph may be waived by a majority vote of the members and shall apply only when 72-hour written notice has been provided in accordance with paragraph (f).".

AMENDMENT NO. 2. OATHS

Further amend Rule I by inserting after the paragraphs added by Amendment #1 the following new paragraph:

"(h) Witnesses at hearings will be required to give testimony under oath whenever the Chairman or Ranking Minority Member deems such to be advisable. At any hearing to confirm a Presidential nomination, the testimony of the nominee and, at the request of any member, any other witness shall be under oath.".

AMENDMENT NO. 3. SUBPOENAS

Amend Rule V by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(e) The Chairman, with the concurrence of the Ranking Minority Member of the Committee, is authorized to subpoena the attendance of witnesses and the production of memoranda, documents, records, and any other materials. If the Chairman or a Committee staff member designated by the Chairman has not received from the Ranking Minority Member or a Committees staff member designated by the Ranking Minority Member notice of the Ranking Minority Member's nonconcurrence in the subpoena within 48 hours (excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and federal holidays) of being notified of the Chairman's intention to subpoena attendance or production, the Chairman is authorized following the end of the 48-hour period involved to subpoena the same without the Ranking Minority Member's concurrence. Regardless of whether a subpoena has been concurred in by the Ranking Minority Member, such subpoena may be authorized by vote of the members of the Committee. When the Committee or Chairman authorizes a subpoena, the subpoena may be issued upon the signature of the Chairman or of any other member of the Committee designated by the Chairman.".

AMENDMENT NO. 4. MEDIA COVERAGE

After Rule V insert the following new rule and renumber the succeeding rules accordingly:

"VI. MEDIA COVERAGE

"Any Committee or Subcommittee meeting or hearing which is open to the public may be covered by television, radio, and print media. Photographers, reporters, and crew members using mechanical recording, filming, or broadasting devices shall position and use their equipment so as not to interfere with the seating, vision, or hearing of the Committee members or staff or with the orderly conduct of the meeting or hearing. The presiding member of the meeting or hearing may for good cause terminate, in whole or in part, the use of such mechanical devices or take such other action as the circumstances and the orderly conduct of the meeting or hearing may warrant.".

AMENDMENT NO. 5. TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

In paragraph (b) of rule III, strike out "'yea' and 'nay'" and insert in lieu thereof "roll-call".

Rule IX (as renumbered by Amendment No. 4) is amended—

(1) in the heading, by striking out "VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION" and inserting in lieu thereof "DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS";

(2) in the matter preceding clause (A), by striking out "Veterans' Administration" and inserting in lieu thereof, "Department of Veterans Affairs"; and

(3) in clause (A)(3), by striking out "or" the first place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "a Secretary of Veterans Affairs,".

EXPLANATION OF AMENDMENTS TO THE RULES OF THE COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS, FEBRUARY 3, 1989

Amendment No. 1 (Advance Notice of Agenda Items and Amendments): Requires that, at least 72 hours (not counting Saturdays, Sundays, and federal holidays) in advance of any meeting, the members be provided with written advance notice of the meeting and an agenda enumerating the items of business. Where compliance with that requirement is not possible, notice by the quickest appropriate means would be required. If the 72-hour notice has been furnished, the rule requires that, for a first-degree amendment to be considered, a copy of it must be provided to each member at least 24 hours before the meeting. This 24-hour notice requirement is waivable by majority vote.

Amendment No. 2 (Oaths): Provides for either the Chairman or Ranking Minority Member to insist that testimony be given under oath and requires that at a confirmation hearing the nominee and, at the request of any member, any other witness be under oath.

Amendment No. 3 (Supoenas): Authorizes the Chairman, with the Ranking Minority Member's concurrence (or failure to object within 48 hours) or based on the vote of the members, to subpoena witnesses and the production of materials.

Amendment No. 4 (Media Coverage): Sets ground rules for media coverage and authorizes the presiding member to take action necessary for the orderly conduct of a meeting or hearing.

Amendment No. 5 (Technical Amendments): Provides a better description of a roll-call vote (in Rule III(b)) and provides updated references to the Department of Veterans Affairs and to the Secretary of Veterans Affairs in the rule regarding the naming of facilities.

RULES OF THE COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS

I. MEETINGS

(a) Unless otherwise ordered, the Committee shall meet on the first Wednesday of each month. The Chairman may, upon proper notice, call such additional meetings as he deems necessary.

(b) Except as provided in subparagraphs (b) and (d) of paragraph 5 of rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, meetings of the Committee or a Subcommittee shall be open to the public.

(c) The Chairman of the Committee or of a Subcommittee, or the Vice Chairman in the absence of the Chairman, or the Ranking Majority Member present in the absence of the Vice Chairman, shall preside at all meetings.

(d) No meeting of the Committee or any Subcommittee shall be scheduled except by majority vote of the Committee or by authorization of the Chairman of the Committee.

(e) The Committee shall notify the office designated by the Committee on Rules and Administration of the time, place, and purpose of each meeting. In the event such meeting is canceled, the Committee shall immediately notify such designated office.

(f) Written notice of a Committee meeting, accompanied by an agenda enumerating the items of business to be considered, shall be sent to all Committee members at least 72 hours (not counting Saturdays, Sundays, and federal holidays) in advance of each meeting. In the event that the giving of such 72-hour notice is prevented by unforeseen requirements or Committee business, the Committee staff shall communicate notice by the quickest appropriate means to members or appropriate staff assistants of members and an agenda shall be furnished prior to the meeting.

(g) Subject to the second sentence of this paragraph, it shall not be in order for the Committee to consider any amendment in the first degree proposed to any measure under consideration by the Committee unless a written copy of such amendment has been delivered to each member of the Committee at least 24 hours before the meeting at which the amendment is to be proposed. This paragraph may be waived by a majority vote of the members and shall apply only when 72-hour written notice has been provided in accordance with paragraph (f).

(h) Witnesses at hearings will be required to give testimony under oath whenever the Chairman or Ranking Minority Member deems such to be advisable. At any hearing to confirm a Presidential nomination, the testimony of the nominee and, at the request of any member, any other witness shall be under oath.

II. QUORUMS

(a) Subject to the provisions of paragraph (b), six member of the Committee and four members of a Subcommittee shall constitute a quorum for the reporting or approving of any measure or matter or recommendation. Four members of the Committee or Subcommittee shall constitute a quorum for purposes of transacting any other business.

(b) In order to transact any business at a Committee or Subcommittee meeting, at least one member of the minority shall be present. If, at any meeting, business cannot be transacted because of the absence of such a member, the matter shall lay over for a calendar day. If the presence of a minority member is not then obtained, business may be transacted by the appropriate quorum.

(c) One member shall constitute a quorum for the purpose of receiving testimony.

III. VOTING

(a) Vote may be cast by proxy. A proxy may be written or oral, and may be conditioned by personal instructions. A proxy shall be valid only for the day given except that a written proxy may be valid for the period specified therein.

(b) There shall be a complete record kept of all Committee action. Such record shall contain the vote cast by each member of the Committee on any question on which a roll-call vote is requested.

IV. SUBCOMMITTEES

(a) No member of the Committee may serve on more than two Subcommittees. No member of the Committee shall receive assignment to a second Subcommittee until all members of the Committee, in order of seniority, have chosen assignments to one Subcommittee.

(b) The Committee Chairman and the Ranking Minority Member shall be ex officio nonvoting members of each Subcommittee of the Committee.

(c) Subcommittees shall be considered de novo whenever there is a change in Committee Chairmanship and, in such event, Subcommittee seniority shall not necessarily apply.

(d) Should a Subcommittee fail to report back to the Committee on any measure within a reasonable time, the Chairman may withdraw the measure from such Subcommittee and so notify the Committee for its disposition.

V. HEARINGS AND HEARING PROCEDURES

(a) Except as specifically otherwise provided, the rules governing meetings shall govern hearings.

(b) At least 1 week in advance of the date of any hearing, the Committee or a Subcommittee shall undertake, consistent with the provisions of paragraph 4 of rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, to make public announcement of the date, place, time, and subject matter of such hearing.

(c) The Committee or a Subcommittee shall require each witness who is scheduled to testify at any hearing to file 40 copies of such witness' testimony with the Committee not later than 48 hours prior to the witness' scheduled appearance unless the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member determine there is good cause for failure to do so.

(d) The presiding officer at any hearing is authorized to limit the time allotted to each witness appearing before the Committee or Subcommittee.

(e) The Chairman, with the concurrence of the Ranking Minority Member of the Committee, is authorized to subpoena the attendance of witnesses and the production of memoranda, documents, records, and any other materials. If the Chairman or a Committee staff member designated by the Chairman has not received from the Ranking Minority Member or a Committee staff member designated by the Ranking Minority Member notice of the Ranking Minority Member's nonconcurrence in the subpoena within 48 hours (excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and federal holidays) of being notified of the Chairman's intention to subpoena attendance or production, the Chairman is authorized following the end of the 48-hour period involved to subpoena the same without the Ranking Minority Member's concurrence. Regardless of whether a subpoena has been concurred in by the Ranking Minority Member, such subpoena may be authorized by vote of the members of the Committee. When the Committee or Chairman authorizes a subpoena, the subpoena may be issued upon the signature of the Chairman or of any other member of the Committee designated by the Chairman.

VI. MEDIA COVERAGE

Any Committee or Subcommittee meeting or hearing which is open to the public may be covered by television, radio, and print media. Photographers, reporters, and crew members using mechanical recording, filming, or broadcasting devices shall position and use their equipment so as not to interfere with the seating, vision, or hearing of the Committee members or staff or with the orderly conduct of the meeting or hearing. The presiding member of the meeting or hearing may for good cause terminate, in whole or in part, the use of such mechanical devices or take such other action as the circumstances and the orderly conduct of the meeting or hearing may warrant.

VII. GENERAL

All applicable requirements of the Standing Rules of the Senate shall govern the Committee and its Subcommittee.

VIII. PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATIONS

Each Presidential nominee whose nomination is subject to Senate confirmation and referred to this Committee shall submit a statement of his or her background and financial interests, including the financial interests of his or her spouse and of children living in the nominee's household, on a form approved by the Committee which shall be sworn to as to its completeness and accuracy. The Committee form shall be in two parts—

(A) information concerning employment, education, and background of the nominee which generally relates to the position to which the individual is nominated, and which is to be made public; and

(B) information concerning the financial and other background of the nominee, to be made public when the Committee determines that such information bears directly on the nominee's qualifications to hold the position to which the individual is nominated.

Committee action on a nomination, including hearings or a meeting to consider a motion to recommend confirmation, shall not be initiated until at least five days after the nominee submits the form required by this rule unless the Chairman, with the concurrence of the Ranking Minority Member, waives this waiting period.

IX. NAMING OF DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS FACILITIES

It is the policy of the Committee that no Department of Veterans Affairs facility shall be named after any individual unless—

(A) such individual is deceased and was—

(1) a veteran who was instrumental in the construction or the operation of the facility to be named;

(2) a member of the United States House of Representatives or Senate who had a direct association with such facility; or

(3) an Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, a Secretary of Veterans Affairs, a Secretary of Defense or of a service branch, or a military or other Federal civilian official of comparable or higher rank;

(B) each member of the Congressional delegation representing the State in which the designated facility is located has indicated in writing such member's support of the proposal to name such facility after such individual; and

(C) the pertinent State department or chapter of each Congressionally chartered veterans' organization having a national membership of at least 500,000 has indicated in writing its support of such proposal.

X. AMENDMENTS TO THE RULES

The rules of the Committee may be changed, modified, amended, or suspended at any time, provided, however, that no less than a majority of the entire membership so determine at a regular meeting with due notice, or at a meeting specifically called for that purpose. The rules governing quorums for reporting legislative matters shall govern rules changes, modification, amendments, or suspension.

UKRAINIAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, on January 22, 1989, the Ukraine celebrated the 71st anniversary of its declaration of independence. Many of our colleagues in both the House and the Senate rose to commemorate this day, which holds tremendous significance for the Ukrainian community in the United States. In recognition of the importance of this milestone, I am today calling attention to the proud spirit of the Ukraine.

The Ukraine has an independent tradition that dates back to the days of the ninth century. Now the Ukraine ranks second in population and in industrial development of all of the republics in the Soviet Union, and it still carries a strong, independent spirit. We in the United States have been enriched by sharing the cultural heritage of the Ukraine with those of Ukrainian descent who have made their home throughout the United States, including my own State of Rhode Island. The Ukrainian-American community is an important segment of the many diverse cultures that exist in the United States, and Ukrainian Americans have contributed significantly to American history and American life.

Mr. President, it is a tribute to Ukrainian nationalism that the Ukraine has maintained such a strong, separate identity to this day. I am proud to join my colleagues and others who celebrated Ukrainian Independence Day.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KERRY). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

IRAN, KHOMEINI AND RUSHDIE

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, although it has been available in the United States for several weeks now, today marks the formal American publication date of a book entitled "The Satanic Verses." The author, Salman Rushdie, a British subject born in Bombay, India, first published his work in Britain in September 1988. I have read several reviews of Mr. Rushdie's novel, as a result of which I have no interest at all in purchasing or reading his work. That, however, is not the point of these remarks.

Last week, on February 14, the Ayatollah Khomeini, the de facto ruler of Iran, sentenced Salman Rushdie to death for blasphemy against Islam. While mixed signals came out of Iran during the course of the next few days, the Ayatollah and his supporters have now made it clear that the sentence of death stands. Rewards of up to $6 million have been offered to anyone who will carry out the sentence.

Additionally, Reuters reported, the Ayatollah's death sentence extends to all involved in the publication of "The Satanic Verses." If this is to be believed, untold numbers of westerners now live under the Iranian leader's cloud of blood, apparently without hope of appeal or commutation.

This event shows the continuing barbarism of the Iranian regime, but subsequent events show decay in our own civilization.

In prompt response to the Ayatollah Khomeini's pronouncement, Harry Hoffman, president of Walden Books, this country's largest chain of book stores, has ordered the removal of the chain's remaining inventory of the book citing his "first allegiance to the safety of employees and patrons." Several other booksellers followed suit.

Yesterday, the Seattle Post-Intelligencer published a cartoon from the Arizona Republic by a cartoonist named Benson equating the Ayatollah's threats with the reaction of a wide range of conservative Christians to the movie "The Last Temptation of Christ."

Our Western European allies, led by the United Kingdom and by West Germany, have recalled their ambassadors to Iran and, in some cases, all of their diplomats. They are saying they may call off most or all of their newly reestablished diplomatic and economic relationships with Iran. Yet, notably, even these countries are halting publication, and, to my knowledge, not one drop of the oil the sale of which is so critical to the Ayatollah's regime, has ceased its flow to the West.

Meanwhile our Canadian neighbors delayed entry of the novel, and, here at home, Secretary Baker called Iran's action "regrettable." More than a week later President Bush upped that to "deeply offensive."

Having issued our toothless yelps of distress, Western civilization seems to have crawled into its bunker and apparently resigned to prepare for increased threats of aircraft bombings, commissioned murders, and random terrorism.

On these subjects, I should like to share some thoughts with my countrymen and my colleagues.

For its root is the question "Do we know what we stand for?" If one of our cultural and political cornerstones is freedom to exchange ideas, then why is the Ayatollah's repulsive act met by mere statements of "regret" and "offense." We did go on to imply some response if actions based on Khomeini's threats hurt Americans, but this action has already had its affect as evidenced by our cowardly response to his unilateral attack on our foundation of constitutional liberties.

Since when did the leaders of the political and corporate Western World need to dilly-dally about, weighing the costs and benefits of defending so vital a principle?

I was in east Asia while this crisis brewed, attending to increasing prospects for trade for my State. Imagine my surprise to return to such a wretchedly tepid defense and, in essence, a retreat from an intentional bully.

I speak here not just of the administration, whose goals and leaders I admire, but of our civilized world as a whole—the cartoonist who fails to see reality, the corporate leader too gutless to play his part in preserving free speech, the entire community of free nations backing away.

Mr. Benson, of the Arizona Republic, reflects all too much of what now seems to pass for thinking within a wide range of the liberal community. Mr. Benson trivializes the real threat of the deeply and profoundly barbarian Iranian Government. For Mr. Benson, it amounts to no more and no less than the loud and vociferous objections to "The Last Temptation of Christ." But those who objected to, and called for a boycott of, that movie did so without the slightest hint of the use of force, much less murder, in response to what they considered to be a blasphemous attack on Orthodox Christianity.

The equals in this saga are the book and the movie, both deeply offensive to many. But the difference in the reaction, which the cartoonist wrongly parallels, is the difference between the exercise of free speech—including the right of some to persuade others not to read or see something—versus the abuse of free speech to incite others to murder those with which they disagree.

It is the difference between progress in a free nation by useful debate, and yet another attempt by Iran's leader to take civilization, muffled protests notwithstanding, backward into darkness.

Mr. Benson, no doubt, will defend his actions as "humor" and as "his free speech." Well he should. And well he should hope that the Free World will be more forceful in the defenses of his freedoms, should some tryant single him out for injury.

Mr. Hoffman of Waldenbooks, and his corporate brethern who followed suit, deserve equal contempt. He says, in the New York Times, that Waldenbooks "have throughout our corporate history decried and fought censorship wherever we have found it." Sad that he chose to end that noble tradition, if it indeed existed. He leaves the defense against terrorism to those of us he charges with that duty, himself not included.

The Ayatollah Khomeini has passed a law, in his own preemptory fashion, denying to all of the people of the world the rights of freedom of speech—and Waldenbooks cravenly submits to this decree. That book seller has set a wonderful example for the future. It will defend the freedom of speech only so long as it costs nothing to do so, but the more serious and more threatening the limitation, the more likey it is that Walden books will submit.

For anyone for whom the first amendment amounts to anything more than a license to make money, the proper response to the cowardice of that book seller is to purchase all of his or her books elsewhere.

Our Western European allies have, I believe, responded to Khomeini's threats appropriately and courageously, or at least they will have if they now follow through and actually cut off oil shipments and the rest.

In the final analysis, of course, it is impossible to have diplomatic relations with a nation which threatens mindless violence to the citizens of other nations for the mere exercise of their God-given rights to speak or to publish—or for that matter, for simply being the citizens of a nation which protects such rights.

We, in the civilized world, must make it clear that any violence, any terrorism, any act ordered or encouraged by the Ayatollah outside the borders of Iran will not be tolerated. We should make it crystal clear that any such action will trigger a response which is swift, certain and which will cost Iran far more than it can possibly gain from any attempt to carry bluff and rhetoric to murder and terrorism.

It is not merely a responsibility shared by the President and the bookseller, but by all of us, to be concerned enough to act in defiance of these threats. For when the threat to our freedoms is as vast as this one—when an author must be hidden from avengers for the exercise of his rights—we are all submitting to the degree we are not repulsed and defiant.

No one, save the Ayatollah, seeks bloodshed. But we must remember that the success of Western civilization is based, in a way measured by the white markers in a cemetery not far from here, on the willingness of all of us to risk harm to defend its central premises.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT RECEIVED DURING RECESS

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of January 3, 1989, the Secretary of the Senate, on February 21, 1989, during the recess of the Senate, received a message from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations; which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received on February 21, 1989, are printed in today's RECORD at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

ANNUAL REPORTS OF THE DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT RECEIVED DURING RECESS—PM 17

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of January 3, 1989, the Secretary of the Senate, on February 21, 1989, during the recess of the Senate, received the following message from the President of the United States, together with accompanying reports; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with Section 308 of Public Law 97-449 (49 U.S.C. 308(a)), I hereby transmit the 19th, 20th, and 21st Annual Reports of the Department of Transportation, which cover Fiscal Years 1985, 1986, and 1987, respectively.

GEORGE BUSH.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 21, 1989.

SUPPLEMENTARY SOCIAL SECURITY AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND SWITZERLAND—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT RECEIVED DURING RECESS—PM 18

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of January 3, 1989, the Secretary of the Senate, on February 21, 1989, during the recess of the Senate, received the following message from the President of the United States, together with accompanying papers; which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

To the Congress of the United States:

Pursuant to Section 233(e)(1) of the Social Security Act, as amended by the Social Security Amendments of 1977 (P.L. 95-216, 42 U.S.C. 433(e)(1)), I transmit herewith the Supplementary Agreement Amending the Agreement between the United States of America and the Swiss Confederation on Social Security ("Supplementary Agreement"), which consists of two separate instruments—a principal agreement and an administrative agreement. The Supplementary Agreement was signed at Bern on June 1, 1988.

The U.S.-Switzerland agreement is similar in objective to the social security agreements in force in Belgium, Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Norway, Spain, Sweden, and the United Kingdom. Such bilateral agreements provide for limited coordination between the United States and foreign social security systems to overcome the problems of gaps in protection and of dual coverage and taxation for workers who move from one country to the other. The present Supplementary Agreement would amend the original agreement with Switzerland to update and simplify several of its provisions in view of changes in U.S. and Swiss law and to simplify the method of computing U.S. benefit amounts.

I also transmit for the information of the Congress a comprehensive report prepared by the Department of Health and Human Services, which explains the provisions of the Supplementary Agreement and the effect on social security financing as required by the same provision of the Social Security Act. I note that the Department of State and the Department of Health and Human Services have recommended the Supplementary Agreement and related documents to me.

I commend the U.S.-Switzerland Supplementary Social Security Agreement and related documents.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS REFORM, RECOVERY AND ENFORCEMENT ACT

● Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, upon request of the administration I am pleased to introduce today, together with Senator GARN, the ranking Republican on the committee, the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989. This proposal is designed to reform, recapitalize, and consolidate the Federal deposit insurance system, to enhance the regulatory and enforcement powers of Federal financial institutions regulatory agencies and to permanently resolve the problems facing the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance System. Senators GRAMM and SHELBY have asked that they be listed as original cosponsors of this legislation.

This morning in the Banking Committee Treasury Secretary Brady formally presented this administration proposal. He and President Bush are to be commended for directly facing the problem and developing a comprehensive proposal quickly.

During the next 5 days the Banking Committee will give the administration and the bank regulators an opportunity to explain all aspects of their proposal. We look forward to hearing from Federal Reserve Board Chairman Greenspan tomorrow. He will be followed in subsequent days by FDIC Chairman Seidman, Comptroller of the Currency Clarke, Federal Home Loan Bank Board Chairman Wall, and OMB Director Darman. The committee will then hear from a variety of other interested parties.

I intend to complete these hearings on March 17. From March 20 to April 2—the Easter recess—the committee and its staff will be at work, together with the administration, on the final legislative package. I believe that package will earn the strong support of the committee and the Senate.

President Bush has said directly that he expects some adjustments and modifications to this plan—and we will work with the administration to make whatever adjustments are needed.

The thrift industry's problems are extremely serious. They have generated enormous public and press attention and for good reason. But one point is not in question, and that is the absolute safety of federally insured deposits. As Senator GARN and I have repeatedly made clear, the full faith and credit of the U.S. Government stands behind every dollar of deposits at federally insured savings and loan institutions, up to $100,000 for each depositor. People's deposits are safe—they need not worry—that is an iron guarantee. President Bush has also made this absolutely clear.

There is much to be said for this proposal. The administration wisely suggests separating the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation from the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, and breaking up the historically close relationship between the thrift industry and its regulators.

Capital and accounting standards must be strengthened. The Government must crack down and put in jail the white-collar criminals who have abused their positions of trust and recover as much money as possible. I support these and many other aspects of the President's proposal. But other very important issues remain to be more adequately addressed.

Is the financing mechanism proposed by the administration sound, does it provide enough money, and is it the least expensive alternative from the taxpayer's point of view?

What activities, if any, should be prohibited for a State-chartered institution which enjoys Federal deposit insurance, and what should be the criteria for making such a decision? I believe Federal deposit insurance should only cover federally authorized activities. This has been a root cause of the financial disaster now facing the S&L industry.

Do we need a separate thrift industry devoted to housing finance in the future and, if so, what exactly should a thrift operating charter look like?

If we are going to give special advantage to a specialized institution, we should clearly and precisely define the activities those institutions may engage in. The Treasury proposal in large part does not answer that question. It is a major omission.

These are a few of the issues we will have to work on together to resolve. I believe that we will be able to do so and I look forward to working with all members of the Banking Committee and the Senate as well as with my counterparts in the House of Representatives to move legislation promptly.●

● Mr. GARN. Mr. President, today I join Senator RIEGLE in introducing, at the request of the administration, the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989. This is the administration's proposal to resolve the problems in the thrift industry.

I applaud the administration for stepping right up to the plate with a bold, comprehensive plan to address what we all know is an ugly problem. The plan proposes fundamental reforms; it turns to the taxpayer only as a last resort; and the administration has already started taking steps before the legislation is enacted. All three steps are absolutely critical.

I recognize that critics have already begun lining up to take shots at different aspects of the plan. That is inevitable, and I, myself, am not happy with every detail I've seen. Congress will no doubt make some changes as the legislative process moves forward.

But I believe that these are disputes at the margin. The administration's plan credibly addresses the most important issues, and I believe that that has been recognized. It is more than a first step in the process—it is the basic model that Congress will use to solve this crisis.

That is why I will do everything I can to meet the President's request for legislation in 45 days, at least from the Banking Committee. It's a tall order, but I believe that it can be done for three reasons.

First, as I've already said, the administration has put a credible plan on the table that we can work with. We won't have to waste a lot of time trying to come up with a plan of our own.

Second, I believe there is a truly bipartisan consensus that can be reached using the administration plan as foundation. There will be rigorous debate, as there should be, but I have every reason to think that we can avoid partisan bickering.

Finally, and most importantly, we simply cannot afford to wait. The problem will continue to hemorrhage every day that we delay infusing cash into the insurance funds. The public is anxious; the healthy part of the industry needs relief; and congress has already caused enough problems through delay. We need to move as quickly as we possibly can, and I urge my colleagues to join me in doing so.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TITLE I—PURPOSE

SEC. 101. PURPOSE.—The purposes of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989 are: to promote a safe and stable system of affordable housing finance through regulatory reform; to improve supervision by strengthening capital, accounting, and other supervisory standards; to establish a relationship of general oversight by the Treasury Department over the Federal Home Loan Bank System similar to that of the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency; to establish an independent insurance agency to provide deposit insurance for savers; to put the federal deposit insurance system on a sound financial basis for the future; to create a new corporation to contain, manage and resolve failed thrift institutions; to provide the necessary private and public financing to resolve failed institutions in an expeditious manner; to provide for improved supervision and enhanced enforcement powers; to increase criminal and civil money penalties for crimes of fraud against financial institutions and depositors; and for other purposes.

TITLE II—FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION AUTHORITIES AND RESPONSIBILITIES

SEC. 201. FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS.—Except as otherwise hereinafter provided, the terms "insured bank", "insured banks", and "insured bank's" in the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, as amended (12 U.S.C. 1811 et seq.), are hereby deleted and the terms "insured financial institution", "insured financial institutions", and "insured financial institution's", respectively, are inserted in lieu thereof, provided however that where the term "insured bank" is preceded by the word "member" or by the work "nonmember" such substitution of the term shall not be made; and the term "Federal Home Loan Bank Board" is deleted and the term "Federal Home Loan Bank System" is inserted in lieu thereof.

SEC. 202. DUTIES OF FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION.—Section 1 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1811) is hereby amended by adding "and savings associations" after "banks".

SEC. 203. FDIC BOARD MEMBERS.—Section 2 of the Federal Deposit Insuance Act (12 U.S.C. 1812) is hereby amended as follows:

(1) In the first sentence, by deleting "three" and inserting in lieu thereof "five", by adding after the second comma the phrase "one of whom shall be the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank System", and by deleting "two" and inserting in lieu thereof "three";

(2) In the second sentence by deleting everything up to and including the word "members" the second time it appears therein, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "One of the appointive members shall be designated by the President to serve from time to time as Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Corporation, and one shall be designated by the President to serve from time to time as Vice Chairman of the Board, and not more than two of the appointive members";

(3) The fifth sentence shall be amended to read as follows: "In the event of a vacancy in the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, or the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank System, and pending the appointment of a successor, or during the absence or disability of any such member, the Acting Comptroller of the Currency, or the Acting Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank System, shall be a member of the Board of Directors in the place and stead of the Comptroller of the Currency or the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank System, respectively.";

(4) In the sixth sentence, by deleting "Comptroller of the Currency" and inserting in lieu thereof "Vice Chairman of the Board";

(5) In the last sentence, by adding "or Federal Home Loan bank" after "Federal Reserve bank", and by adding "or financial institution holding company" before the semi-colon; and

(6) By adding the following new paragraph at the end thereof: "The members of the Board of Directors on the date of enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989 shall continue to serve in office until the fulfillment of their existing terms; the Chairman of the Board of Directors shall continue to serve until a successor has been appointed and qualified."

SEC. 204. DEFINITIONS.—Section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813) is hereby amended as follows:

(1) Notwithstanding Section 201 of this Act, subsection (h) shall not be amended to delete the term "insured bank" and insert the term "insured financial institution".

(2) Subsection (j) is amended by adding "conserving assets or" before "winding up", and by adding before the period therein the following phrase, ", or of a savings association";

(3) Subsection (1) is amended as follows:

(a) by adding the phrase "or savings association" after the phrases "a bank", "the bank", "receiving bank", or "such bank" each time such phrases appear in the subsection; and by adding the phrase "or savings association's" after the word "bank's" each time it appears in the subsection; and

(b) by striking out the word "and" at the end of subparagraph (5)(B) with "; or"; and

(c) by adding a new subparagraph (5)(C) reading as follows:

"(C) any money denominated in any currency other than that of the United States, and any obligation otherwise equivalent to money but which is not expressed in terms of the currency of the United States."

(d) in paragraph (5), by adding ", Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank System" after "Comptroller of the Currency";

(4) Subsection (m) is amended by adding at the end thereof the end thereof the following:

"(3) In the case of a savings association that becomes an insured financial institution as a result of the operation of section 4(a), the term "insured deposit" shall include any liability of that financial institution which constituted an "insured account" within the meaning of section 401(c) of the National Housing Act immediately prior to enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989 (hereinafter referred to as "FIRREA"); Provided, that in the case of any such liability that would not otherwise be eligible for insurance provided by the Corporation:

"(A) if the liability has one or more fixed maturity dates, the liability shall cease to be included within the term "insured deposit" upon the earliest maturity date occurring after the expiration of six months from the date of enactment of FIRREA;

"(B) if the liability has a minimum required notice period, the required notice period shall be deemed to be initiated on the date of enactment of FIRREA and the liability shall cease to be included within the term "insured deposit" upon expiration of the required notice period or upon the expiration of six months after the date of enactment of FIRREA, whichever is later; or

"(C) if the liability has no fixed maturity date or required notice period, the liability shall cease to be included within the term "insured deposit" upon the expiration of six months from the date of enactment of FIRREA.".

(5) Subsection (q) is amended to read as follows:

"(q) The term "appropriate Federal banking agency" shall mean—

"(1) the Comptroller of the Currency in the case of a national banking association, a District bank, or a federal branch or agency of a foreign bank;

"(2) The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System—

"(A) in the case of a State member insured bank (except a District bank),

"(B) in the case of any branch or agency of a foreign bank with respect to any provision of the Federal Reserve Act which is made applicable under the International Banking Act of 1978: Provided, that for the purposes of subsections (b) through (n) of section 8 of this Act, the term "insured financial institution" includes an uninsured branch or agency of a foreign bank or a commercial lending company owned or controlled by a foreign bank,

"(C) in the case of any foreign bank which does not operate an insured branch,

"(D) in the case of any agency or commercial lending company other than a Federal agency, and

"(E) in the case of supervisory or regulatory proceedings arising from the authority given to the Board of Governors under section 7(c)(1) of the International Banking Act of 1978, including such proceedings under the Financial Institutions Supervisory Act;

"(3) the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation in the case of a State nonmember insured bank (except a District bank) or a foreign bank having an insured branch; and

"(4) the Federal Home Loan Bank System in the case of a savings association or of a savings and loan holding company.

"Under the rule set forth in this subsection, more than one agency may be an appropriate Federal banking agency with respect to any given institution."

(6) Be deleting the provisions of subsection (t) and reserving such subsection.

(7) By adding new subsections at the end thereof to read as follows:

"(u) The term 'savings association' means any institution that was supervised by the Federal Savings and Loan Association Corporation immediately prior to the enactment of the FIRREA, a Federal savings and loan association or Federal savings bank, or a building and loan, savings and loan, homestead association, or cooperative bank organized and operating according to the laws of the State (as defined in the text of subsection (a) hereof) in which it is chartered or organized, or a corporation that the Board of Directors determines to be operating substantially in the same manner as a savings and loan association;

"(v) The term 'bank' means all banks as defined in subsections (a) through (g) hereof;

"(w)(1) The term 'financial institution' means a bank or savings association.

"(2) The term 'insured financial institution' means a bank or savings association insured pursuant to the Federal Deposit Insurance Act.

"(x)(1) The term 'default' with respect to an insured financial institution means an adjudication or other official determination of a court of competent jurisdiction, the appropriate Federal banking agency, or other public authority pursuant to which a conservator, receiver, or other legal custodian is appointed for an insured financial institution or, in the case of a foreign bank having an insured branch, for such branch.

"(2) The term 'in danger of default' with respect to an insured financial institution means that the appropriate Federal banking agency or State chartering authority has advised the Corporation with respect to such institution (or in the case of a foreign bank having an insured branch, with respect to such insured branch) that, in its opinion—

"(i)(I) the financial institution or insured branch is not likely to be able to meet the demands of its depositors or pay its obligations in the normal course of business, and

"(II) there is no reasonable prospect that the financial institution or insured branch will be able to meet such demands or pay such obligations without Federal assistance; or

"(ii)(I) the financial institution or insured branch has incurred or is likely to incur losses that will deplete all or substantially all of its capital, and

"(II) there is no reasonable prospect for the replenishment of the capital of the financial institution or insured branch without Federal assistance.

"(y)(1) The term 'financial institution holding company' means a bank holding company or a savings-and-loan holding company.

(2) The term 'bank holding company' has the meaning prescribed in section 2 of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1841 et seq.).

(3) The term 'savings and loan holding company' has the meaning prescribed in section (10)(a)(1)(D) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 (12 U.S.C.).

SEC. 205. INSURED SAVINGS ASSOCIATIONS.—Section 4 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1814) is hereby amended as follows:

(1) Subsection (a) is amended by adding the following new sentence at the end thereof:

"Every savings association, the deposits of which were insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation on the date immediately preceding the date of enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989, shall be, without application or approval, an insured financial institution as of the date of enactment of that Act, and shall be subject to the provisions of this Act."

(2) Subsection (b) is amended by adding the following phrase prior to the first period therein:

"; provided, however, that any application or notice for membership or to commence or resume business must be promptly provided by the appropriate Federal banking agency to the Corporation and the Corporation shall have a reasonable period to provide comments with respect thereto which must be considered by the appropriate Federal banking agency in making its findings thereon and with respect to the statutory factors in section 6 of this Act."

(3) By deleting the last two sentences of subsection (b) and all of subsection (c) and inserting the following new subsections in lieu thereof:

"(c) Except as provided in subsection 5(d), a State financial institution resulting from the conversion of an insured Federal financial institution shall continue as an insured financial institution.

"(d) Except as provide in subsection 5(d), a State financial institution resulting from the merger or consolidation of insured financial institutions, or from the merger or consolidation of a noninsured financial institution with an insured financial institution, shall continue as an insured financial institution."

SEC. 206. APPLICATION PROCESS; INSURANCE FEES.—Section 5 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1815) is hereby amended as follows:

(1) by adding the following new paragraphs at the end of subsection (a) thereof:

"Subject to the provisions of this Act, any Federal savings association that is authorized by the Federal Home Loan Bank System to engage in the business of receiving deposits, other than trust funds as herein defined, upon application by the association to the Federal Home Loan Bank System, may become an insured financial institution following submission of such application to the Corporation together with a certificate issued to the Corporation by the Federal Home Bank System, unless insurance is denied by the Board of Directors; provided, however, that with respect to any interim Federal savings association chartered by the Federal Home Loan Bank System, and which will not open for business, such insurance shall be automatically granted upon issuance of such association's charter by the Federal Home Loan Bank System. Such certificate shall state that the savings association is authorized to transact business as a savings association and that consideration has been given to the factors enumerated in section 6 of this Act. Upon Corporation review of such certificate and application, and any appropriate examination by the Corporation, the Board of Directors shall give consideration to factors (1), (2), (3), (4), and (5) of section 6 of this Act in determining whether to deny insurance. If the Board of Directors, after giving due deference to the determination of the Federal Home Loan Bank System with respect to such factors, does not concur with the determination thereof, the Board of Directors shall promptly notify the Federal Home Loan Bank System that insurance has been denied, giving specific reasons in writing for the Corporation's determination with reference to factors (1), (2), (3), (4) and (5) of section 6 of this Act and no charter or insurance shall be granted. Determination by the Board of Directors to deny insurance under this subsection may not be delegated."

(2) The first sentence of subsection (a) is amended, by deleting the comma following "State nonmember bank" and adding thereafter "and State savings association,"; and

(4) Subsection (b) is amended by redesignating paragraphs (5), (6), and (7) as paragraphs (6), (7), and (8) respectively; and by inserting a new paragraph (5) to read as follows:

"(5) The risk presented to the Deposit Insurance Fund, the Bank Insurance Fund and the Savings Association Insurance Fund."

(5) New subsections (d) and (e) are added at the end thereof to read as follows:

"(d) INSURANCE FEES.—

"(1) UNINSURED INSTITUTIONS.—

"(A) Every noninsured financial institution that becomes insured by the Corporation, and every noninsured branch that becomes insured by the Corporation, shall pay the Corporation any such fees as the Corporation may by regulation prescribe: Provided, that a financial institution that becomes an insured financial institution as a result of the operation of section 4(a) of this Act shall not pay any fee.

"(B) The fee paid by the financial institution shall be credited to the Bank Insurance Fund if the financial institution becomes a Bank Insurance Fund member, and to the Savings Association Insurance Fund if the financial institution becomes a Savings Association Insurance Fund member.

"(2) CONVERSIONS.—

"(A) No insured financial institution may participate in a conversion transaction without the prior consent of the Corporation. Except as provided in paragraph (C), the Corporation shall not provide its consent to any conversion transaction occurring before the expiration of five years from the date of enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989.

"(B) A 'conversion transaction' means—

"(i) The change of status of an insured financial institution, whether as a result of a charter conversion or otherwise, from a Bank Insurance Fund member to a Savings Association Insurance Fund member or from a Savings Association Insurance Fund member to a Bank Insurance Fund member;

"(ii) The merger or consolidation of a Bank Insurance Fund member with a Savings Association Insurance Fund member;

"(iii)(I) The assumption on the part of a Bank Insurance Fund member of liability to pay any deposits in a Savings Association Insurance Fund member, or

"(II) The assumption on the part of a Savings Association Insurance Fund member of liability to pay any deposits in a Bank Insurance Fund member; or

"(iv)(I) The transfer on the part of a Bank Insurance Fund member of assets to any Savings Association Insurance Fund member in consideration of the assumption of liabilities for any portion of the deposits in such Bank Insurance Fund member, or

"(II) The transfer on the part of a Savings Association Insurance fund member of assets to any Bank Insurance Fund member in consideration of the assumption of liabilities for any portion of the deposits in such Savings Association Insurance Fund member.

"(C) The Corporation may provide its consent at any time to a conversion transaction if:

"(i) The conversion transaction affects an insubstantial portion, as determined by the Corporation, of the insured liabilities of each financial institution participating in the conversion transaction; or

"(ii) The Corporation and, during the existence of the Resolution Trust Corporation, the Resolution Trust Corporation Oversight Board determine that the conversion transaction is in the best interests of the Bank Insurance Fund and the Savings Association Insurance Fund.

"(D) Every financial institution participating in a conversion transaction shall pay:

"(i) In the case of a conversion transaction in which the resulting or acquiring financial institution is a Bank Insurance Fund member, an exit fee to be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, which fee shall be paid to the Resolution Trust Corporation or to such agency as the Secretary of the Treasury may specify; and

"(ii) An entrance fee to be determined by the Corporation, provided:

"(I) That in the case of a conversion transaction in which the resulting or acquiring financial institution is a Bank Insurance Fund member, the fee shall be in an amount necessary to prevent dilution of the Bank Insurance Fund, and shall be paid to the Bank Insurance Fund; and

"(II) That in the case of a conversion transaction in which the resulting or acquiring financial institution is a Savings Association Insurance Fund member, the fee shall be in an amount necessary to prevent dilution of the Savings Association Insurance Fund, and shall be paid to the Savings Association Insurance Fund.

"(e) LIABILITY OF COMMONLY-CONTROLLED FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS.—

"(1) REQUIRED.—Notwithstanding any provision of law, State or Federal, or the constitution of any State, or of any contract or other instrument or security, on and after the date of enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989, whenever the Corporation incurs a loss in connection with the default of an insured financial institution, or in connection with providing assistance to an insured financial institution in danger of default, any other commonly-controlled insured financial institution shall be liable to the Corporation following notice to the institution as provided below and on request shall reimburse the Corporation for any such loss. No such liability shall arise under this subsection if the Corporation fails to provide notice within two years of the date the Corporation incurs such loss.

"(2) AMOUNT OF COMPENSATION; PROCEDURES.—

"(A) USE OF ESTIMATES.—When an insured financial institution is in default or requires assistance to prevent default, the Corporation shall in good faith estimate its prospective losses resulting from such default or assistance, shall advise any commonly-controlled financial institution of the amount of its liability in connection with such losses, and if there is more than one such commonly-controlled financial institution, determine such commonly-controlled financial institution's share of such liability.

"(B) PROCEDURES; IMMEDIATE PAYMENT.—The Corporation, after consultation with the appropriate Federal banking agency, may specify the procedures and schedule by which each such commonly-controlled financial institution must reimburse the Corporation for its liability under this subsection on a case-by-case basis. The Corporation may compel any or all commonly-controlled institutions to make immediate payment of any compensation required under paragraph (1).

"(C) PRIORITY.—The liability established pursuant to the provisions of this subsection shall be:

"(i) superior to the following obligations and liabilities of the financial institution:

"(I) any obligation subordinated to depositors or other general creditors;

"(II) any obligation to shareholders arising as a result of their status as shareholders (including a bank holding company or savings and loan holding company or any shareholder or creditor of such company);

"(III) any obligation or liability owed to any other commonly-controlled company or commonly-controlled insured financial institution; or

"(IV) any liability which is a contingent liability on the date the liability of the financial institutions to the Corporation is determined; and

"(ii) subordinate in right or payment to the following obligations and liabilities of the financial institution:

"(I) deposit liabilities other than those to commonly-controlled financial institutions;

"(II) secured obligations; and

"(III) other general liabilities, except to the extent specified in (i) above; and

"(iii) pari passu with other liabilities and obligations of the financial institution.

"(D) ADJUSTMENT OF ESTIMATED PAYMENT.—

"(i) OVERPAYMENT.—If the amount of compensation estimated by and paid to the Corporation by one or more such commonly-controlled financial institutions is greater than the actual loss incurred by the Corporation, the Corporation shall reimburse each such commonly-controlled financial institution its pro-rata share of any overpayment.

"(ii) UNDERPAYMENT.—If the amount of compensation estimated by and paid to the Corporation by one or more such commonly-controlled financial institutions is less than the actual loss incurred by the Corporation, the Corporation shall redetermine in its discretion the liability of each such commonly-controlled financial institution to the Corporation and shall require each such commonly-controlled institution to make payment of any additional liability to the Corporation.

"(3) REVIEW.—

"(A) ADMINISTRATIVE REVIEW.—The Corporation shall by regulation establish an administrative procedure for review of the amount of losses, the liability of individual commonly-controlled financial institutions, and the schedule of payments to be made by such commonly-controlled financial institutions. The regulations shall provide for a hearing on the part of any such commonly-controlled financial institution.

"(B) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—Determination made by the Corporation of the amount of losses, the liability of commonly-controlled financial institutions, or the procedures or scheduling of the payments required, shall be reviewable by the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit or the Court of Appeals for the circuit where the financial institution in default or is located, and shall be upheld unless found to be arbitrary or capricious.

"(4) LIMITATION ON RIGHTS OF PRIVATE PARTIES.—No court shall give effect to any rights or powers conferred on any person, whether such rights or powers are conferred by State constitution or statute or by Federal statute or by the articles or by-laws of a financial institution, a financial institution holding company or any subsidiary thereof or by any debt or equity security of any such financial institution, financial institution holding company or subsidiary thereof or by any other contact or other instrument or otherwise, and any provision of any such statute or security or article or by-law or contract or instrument shall be void, insofar as giving effect to any such rights or powers would impair the ability of the financial institution to perform its obligations under this subsection.

"(5) LIMITATION.—For a period of five years from the date of enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989, no Savings Association Insurance Fund member shall have any liability to the Corporation under this subsection arising out of assistance provided to or loss incurred as a result of the default of a Bank Insurance Fund member, and no Bank Insurance Fund member shall have such liability with respect to assistance provided to or loss incurred as a result of the default of a Savings Association Insurance Fund member.

"(6) DEFINITIONS.—For the purpose of this section:

"(A) COMMONLY-CONTROLLED INSTITUTIONS.—Financial institutions are "commonly-controlled" whenever:

"(i) one financial institution is controlled by or under common control with any company that controls or is under common control with another financial institution, or

"(ii) one financial institution controls or is controlled by another financial institution.

"(B) DEFINITIONS.—The terms "company" and "control" have the meanings specified in the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, as amended (12 U.S.C. 1841 et seq.)."

SEC. 207. INSURABILITY FACTORS.—Section 6 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1816) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Except as otherwise provided, the factors to be considered and enumerated in the certificate required under section 4 hereof and to be considered by the Board of Directors under section 5 shall be the following:

"(1) The financial history and condition of the financial institution;

"(2) The adequacy of its capital structure;

"(3) Its future earnings prospects;

"(4) The general character and fitness of its management;

"(5) The risk presented to the Deposit Insurance Fund, the Bank Insurance Fund and the Savings Association Insurance Fund;

"(6) The convenience and needs of the community to be served; and

"(7) Whether or not its corporate powers are consistent with the purposes of this Act."

SEC. 208. ASSESSMENTS.—Section 7 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1817) is amended as follows:

(1) Paragraph (2) of subsection (a) thereof is amended as follows:

(a) the words "or the Federal Home Loan Bank System or any Federal Home Loan Bank" are added after "Comptroller of the Currency" each time they appear;

(b) the word "either" is deleted and "any" is inserted in lieu thereof;

(c) the words "State nonmember bank (except a District bank)" are deleted and the words "financial institution" are inserted in lieu thereof; and

(d) subparagraph (B) is deleted and in lieu thereof the following shall be inserted:

"(B) The Board of Directors may from time to time require any or all insured financial institutions to file such additional reports as the Corporation, after agreement with the Comptroller of the Currency, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and the Federal Home Loan Bank System, as appropriate, may deem advisable for insurance purposes.".

(2) Paragraph (3) of subsection (a) thereof is amended by:

(a) deleting everything prior to the words "four reports" and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Each insurance financial institution shall make to the appropriate Federal banking agency";

(b) adding after the word "bank" each time it appears in the second, fifth, and sixth sentences, the words "or savings association"; and

(c) by adding after the words "member bank" in the seventh sentence the words "and each insured savings association"; and

(d) paragraphs (4) and (7) are amended by adding after the words "bank", "bank's", or "'banks" the words "or savings association", "or savings association's", or, "or savings associations", respectively, except that no words shall be added after the words "insured bank" or "insured financial institution" or "foreign banks".

(3) By replacing "bank" with "financial institution" and "bank's" with "financial institution's" respectively everywhere those words appear in paragraphs (3) through (8) of subsection (b), except that the phrases "foreign bank" and "foreign bank's" shall not be amended; and by deleting paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (b) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(1) ASSESSMENT RATES.—

"(A) ANNUAL ASSESSMENT RATES PRESCRIBED.—The Corporation shall set assessment rates for insured financial institutions annually. The Corporation shall fix the annual assessment rate for Bank Insurance Fund members independently from the annual assessment rate for Savings Association Insurance Fund members.

"(B) ASSESSMENT RATE FOR BANK INSURANCE FUND MEMBERS.—

"The annual assessment rate for Bank Insurance Fund members shall be:

"(i) Until December 31, 1989, one-twelfth of one per centum;

"(ii) From January 1, 1990, through December 31, 1990, 12 one-hundredths of one per centum; and

"(iii) On and after January 1, 1991, 15 one-hundredths of one per centum.

"(C) ASSESSMENT RATES FOR SAVINGS ASSOCIATION INSURANCE FUND MEMBERS.—

"The annual assessment rate for Savings Association Insurance Fund members shall be:

"(i) Until December 31, 1990, 20.8 one-hundredths of one per centum;

"(ii) From January 1, 1991, through December 31, 1993, 23 one-hundredths of one per centum; and

"(iii) From January 1, 1994, and thereafter, 18 one-hundredths of one per centum.

"(D) FACTORS TO BE CONSIDERED IN ADJUSTING RATE.—The Corporation shall have authority and discretion to fix the annual assessment rates for insured financial institutions above the levels described in paragraphs (B) and (C) provided the Corporation makes the findings herein prescribed; Provided, that except as otherwise expressly provided herein the Corporation shall not fix any such annual assessment rates that exceed the maximum levels specified in paragraph (E); and Provided further, That before increasing the annual assessment rates, the Corporation determines that one or more of the following conditions exist:

"(i) BANK INSURANCE FUND.—In the case of Bank Insurance Fund members, the factors shall be the following:

"(I) That the Bank Insurance Fund has experienced a net loss during any one of the prior three years;

"(II) That the Bank Insurance Fund reserve ratio or the Deposit Insurance Fund reserve ratio is less than 1.20 per centum; or

"(III) That, in the opinion of the Board of Directors, extraordinary circumstances exist that raise a reasonable risk of serious future losses to the Bank Insurance Fund or to the Deposit Insurance Fund as a whole.

"(ii) SAVINGS ASSOCIATION INSURANCE FUND.—In the case of Savings Association Insurance members, the factors shall be the following:

"(I) That the Savings Association Insurance Fund has experienced a net loss during any one of the prior three years;

"(II) That the Savings Association Insurance Fund reserve ratio or the Deposit Insurance Fund ratio is less than 1.20 per centum; or

"(III) That, in the opinion of the Board of Directors, extraordinary circumstances exist that raise a reasonable risk of serious future losses to the Savings Association Insurance Fund or to the Deposit Insurance Fund as a whole.

"(iii) MAXIMUM ANNUAL INCREASE.—The maximum annual increase in the annual assessment rate with respect to each fund shall not exceed a 50 percent annual increase over the annual assessment rate of the prior year.

"(E) Notwithstanding subparagraphs (B), (C) and (D) of this paragraph (1), the Corporation may in its discretion set a lower minimum annual assessment rate for the Bank Insurance Fund or the Savings Association Insurance Fund if the respective fund has a reserve ratio greater than 1.25 per centum and it is likely that such reserve ratio will not decrease over the following five year period; (ii) each insured financial institution shall pay a minimum annual assessment of $500, or such higher amount as may be calculated by the Corporation to cover direct expenses incurred by the Corporation related to such institutions, or a lower amount if the conditions provided in (i) of this subparagraph (E) exist; and (iii) the annual assessment rate shall not exceed 35 one-hundredths of one per centum, except as provided in (ii) of this subparagraph (E).

"(F) FINANCING CORPORATION AND FUNDING CORPORATION ASSESSMENTS.—Notwithstanding any authority provided herein, with respect to Savings Association Insurance Fund members, amounts assessed by the Financing Corporation and the Funding Corporation under sections 21 and 21b, respectively, of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended, shall be substracted from the amounts authorized to be assessed by the Corporation hereunder.

"(2) ASSESSMENT PROCEDURES.—

"(A) SEMIANNUAL ASSESSMENTS.—Except as provided in subsection (c)(2) of this section,

"(i) the semiannual assessment due from any Bank Insurance Fund member for any semiannual period shall be equal to one-half the annual categorical assessment rate applicable to such Bank Insurance Fund member multiplied by such Bank Insurance Fund member's average assessment base for the immediately preceding semiannual period; and

"(ii) the semiannual assessment due from any Savings Association Insurance Fund member for any semiannual period shall be equal to one-half the annual categorical assessment rate applicable to such Savings Association Insurance Fund member multiplied by such Savings Association Insurance Fund member's average assessment base for the immediately preceding semiannual period.

"(B) For the purpose of this section the term "semiannual period" means a period beginning on January 1 of any calendar year and ending on June 30 of the same year, or a period beginning on July 1 of any calendar year and ending on December 31 of the same year."

(4) By amending subsection (d) to read as follows:

"(d) ASSESSMENT CREDITS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—As of December 31, 1990, and as of December 31 of each calendar year thereafter, the Corporation shall compute the aggregate amount to be credited to insured financial institutions.

"(2) AMOUNT OF ASSESSMENT CREDIT.—

"(A) CREDIT BARRED.—Whenever the Board of Directors determines that the Bank Insurance Fund reserve ratio is equal to or less than 1.25 per centum, the Board of Directors shall not credit any amount to Bank Insurance Fund members.

"(B) CREDIT AUTHORIZED.—

"(i) AGGREGATE CREDIT.—Whenever the Board of Directors determines that the Bank Insurance Fund reserve ratio exceeds 1.25 per centum, or such higher level as the Board of Directors in its discretion may determine, the Board of Directors may in its discretion credit the smaller of the following amounts to Bank Insurance Fund members:

"(I) The amount necessary to reduce the Bank Insurance Fund reserve ratio to 1.25 per centum or such higher level as the Board of Directors may determine; or

"(II) 60.00 per centum of the net assessment income received from Bank Insurance Fund members the prior year.

"(ii) The Corporation shall deduct any outstanding obligations owed to the Corporation by an individual insured financial institution from any assessment credit to be credited to such financial institution.

"(C) CREDIT BARRED.—Whenever the Board of Directors determines that the Savings Association Insurance Fund reserve ratio is equal to or less than 1.25 per centum, the Board of Directors shall not credit any amount to Savings Association Insurance Fund members: Provided that no credit shall be made as long as the Financing Corporation is authorized to assess on Savings Association Insurance Fund members an assessment to cover Financing Corporation interest obligations pursuant to Section 21 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act.

"(D) CREDIT AUTHORIZED.—

"(i) AGGREGATE CREDIT.—Whenever the Board of Directors determines that the Savings Association Insurance Fund reserve ratio exceeds 1.25 per centum of such higher level as the Board of Directors in its discretion may determine, the Board of Directors may in its discretion credit the smaller of the following amounts to Savings Association Insurance Fund members:

"(I) The amount necessary to reduce the Savings Association Insurance Fund reserve ration to 1.25 per centum, or such higher level as the Board of Directors may determine; or

"(II) 60.00 per centum of the net assessment income received from Savings Association Insurance Fund members the prior year.

"(ii) The Corporation shall deduct any outstanding obligations owed to the Corporation by an individual insured financial institution from any assessment credit to be credited to such financial institution.

"(3) APPLICATION OF ASSESSMENT CREDIT.—Each year any such credit shall be applied by the Corporation toward the payment of the total assessment becoming due for the semiannual assessment period beginning the next ensuing July 1 and any excess credit shall be applied upon the assessments next becoming due.

"(4) NET ASSESSMENT INCOME DEFINED.—The term 'net assessment income' as used herein means the total assessments which become due during the calendar year less:

"(A) the operating costs and expenses of the Corporation for the calendar year;

"(B) additions to reserve to provide for insurance losses during the calendar year, except that any adjustments to reserve which result in a reduction of such reserve shall be added;

"(C) the insurance losses sustained in said calendar year plus losses from any preceding years in excess of such reserves; and

"(D) any lending costs for the calendar year, which costs shall be equal to the amount by which the amount of interest earned, if any, from each loan made by the Corporation under section 13 of this Act after January 1, 1982, is less than the amount which the Corporation would have earned in interest for the calendar year if interest had been paid on such loan during such calendar year at a rate equal to the average current value of funds to the United States Treasury for such calendar year.

"If the above deductions exceed in amount the total assessments which become due during the calendar year, the amount of such excess shall be restored by deduction fom total assessments becoming due in subsequent years."

(6) By replacing "bank" wherever it appears in subsections (e), (f), (g) and (i) with "financial institution."

(7) By amending subsection (j) as follows:

(a) The last sentence in paragraph (1) is amended by inserting before the words "any bank holding company" the numeral "(1)" and by inserting before the period the following:

"; (2) any "savings and loan holding company" which has control of any insured financial institution, and the appropriate Federal banking agency in the case of savings and loan holding companies shall be the Federal Home Loan Bank system; and (3) any other company that controls an insured financial institution that is not a bank holding company or a savings and loan holding company."

(b) In subparagraph (2)(A), the word "failure" is deleted and "default" is inserted in lieu thereof; and the word "bank" is deleted and the word "financial institution" is inserted in lieu thereof."

(c) In subparagrph (2)(D), the words "unless it finds that an emergency exists," are added after the comma following the word "shall";

(d) In paragraph (7), the word "or" at the end of subparagraph (D) and the period at the end of subparagraph (E) are deleted and the word "; or" is added at the end of subparagraph (E), and a new subparagraph (F) is added to read as follows:

"(F) the appropriate Federal banking agency determines that the proposed transaction would result in an adverse effect on the Bank Insurance Fund, the Savings Association Insurance Fund, or the Deposit Insurance Fund.";

(e) Deleting paragraph (17) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(17) This subsection shall not apply to a transaction subject to section 3 of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1842) or section 18 of this Act (12 U.S.C. 1828) or section 10 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended.";

(f) Inserting the following new subsection (1) to read as follows:

"(1) For purposes of this section—

"(1) The "Deposit Insurance Fund reserve ratio" is the ratio of the net worth of the Deposit Insurance Fund to the value of the aggregate insured deposits held in all insured financial institutions.

"(2) The "Bank Insurance Fund reserve ratio" is the ratio of the net worth the Bank Insurance Fund of the Deposit Insurance Fund to the value of the aggregate insured deposits held in all Bank Insurance Fund members.

"(3) The "Savings Association Insurance Fund reserve ratio" is the ratio of the value of the net worth of the Savings Association Insurance Fund of the Deposit Insurance Fund to the value of the aggregate insured deposits held in all Savings Association Insurance Fund members.

"(4) "Bank Insurance Fund member" means any insured financial institution other than a Savings Association Insurance fund member.

"(5) 'Savings Association Insurance Fund member' means any financial institution that was insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation immediately prior to the enactment of FIRREA, and any insured savings association other than a Federal savings bank chartered pursuant to section 5(o) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933.

"(6) The 'Deposit Insurance Fund' is comprised of the Bank Insurance Fund and Savings Insurance Fund.".

SEC. 209. FDIC CORPORATE POWERS.—Section 9 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1819) is hereby amended:

(1) by striking out the words "bank" and "banks" wherever they appear and inserting "financial institution" or "financial institutions", respectively, in lieu thereof;

(2) by inserting "other than as received under the provisions of section 11(e)(2) or 11(e)(3)" immediately before the words "and which involves" in paragraph Fourth; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"Eleventh. To define any terms used in the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, as amended, that are not specifically defined in such Act, and to interpret the definitions of any terms that are not so defined; Provided, That no such definition shall be binding on any other Federal banking agency as it may implement or enforce the provisions of this Act."

SEC. 210. ADMINISTRATION OF CORPORATION.—Subsection 10(b) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1820) is hereby amended as follows:

(a) In the first sentence, by adding after "or other institution," a comma and the phrase "including a State savings association".

(b) In the second sentence, by deleting "insured Federal savings bank" and by inserting in lieu thereof "insured savings association".

SEC. 211. INSURANCE FUNDS; CORPORATION POWERS AS RECEIVER.—Section 11 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1821) is hereby amended as follows:

(1) Subsection (a) is amended as follows:

(a) Paragraph (1) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) On and after the effective date of the "Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989" the Corporation shall insure the deposits of all insured financial institutions as provided in this Act. Except as provided in paragraph 2, maximum amount of the insured deposit of any depositor shall be $100,000."

(b) In subparagraph (2)(B), the words "time and savings" are deleted.

(c) By adding a new paragraph (4) to read as follows:

"(4) There are hereby established two insurance funds both to be operated and administered by the Corporation and to be separately maintained and not commingled, which shall be used by the Corporation for the purposes of carrying out the insurance purposes of this chapter in the manner set forth below.

"(A) As of the effective date of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989, there is hereby established a fund to be designated the Bank Insurance Fund. On that date, the Permanent Insurance Fund shall be dissolved and all the assets, debts, obligations, contracts, and other liabilities of the Permanent Insurance Fund, matured or unmatured, accrued, absolute, contingent, or otherwise shall hereby be transferred in their entirety to the Bank Insurance Fund. Money in the Bank Insurance Fund shall be available to the Corporation for the uses and purposes herein provided with respect to the Bank Insurance Fund members. All amounts assessed Bank Insurance Fund members by the Corporation shall be deposited into the Bank Insurance Fund.

"(B)(i) As of the effective date of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989, there is hereby established a fund to be designated the Savings Association Insurance Fund. All amounts assessed Savings Association Insurance Fund members from the date of enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989, and not required for the Financing Corporation or for the Resolution Funding Corporation pursuant to section 21 and 21b, respectively, of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, or for the FSLIC Resolution Fund pursuant to section 11A of this Act, shall be covered into the Savings Association Insurance Fund; provided, however that beginning in 1992, no amounts assessed Savings Association Insurance Fund members shall be provided to the FSLIC Resolution Fund.

"(ii) Beginning in fiscal year 1991, in order to provide funding to the Savings Association Insurance Fund, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, subject to the availability of appropriations, pay to the Fund the amounts per fiscal year, less the assessment paid by the savings associations to the Fund for such fiscal year, as set forth in the table below; provided, however, that at such time as the Savings Association Insurance Fund reserve ratio is equal to 1.25 per centum no further amounts shall be paid to the Fund by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Fiscal year beginning October 1:	Billions
1993	4.6
1994	3.0
1995	4.0
1996	4.0

"Provided further that the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to the Savings Association Insurance Fund such additional funds as necessary, if any, to ensure that such Fund has the minimum net worth, as determined by the Corporation and the Secretary of the Treasury, set forth in the table below in each respective fiscal year as specified therein (subject to the above proviso that at such time the Savings Association Insurance Fund reserve ratio is equal to 1.25 per centum no further amounts shall be paid to the Fund by the Secretary of the Treasury).

Fiscal year beginning October 1:	Billions
1992	1.0
1994	3.2
1995	4.3

"(iii) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of the Treasury, without fiscal year limitation, such sums as may be necessary for payments to individual funds as authorized by this Act.

"(iv) The Corporation is hereby authorized to borrow from the Federal Home Loan Banks, with the concurrence of the Chairman of the System, such funds as the Corporation deems necessary for the use of the Savings Association Insurance Fund, which borrowings shall be a direct liability of such Fund and shall be subject to the limitations in paragraph (b) of Section 15 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1825(b)).

"(v) Money in the Savings Association Insurance Fund shall be available to the Corporation for the uses and purposes herein provided with respect to Savings Association Insurance Fund members. All amounts assessed Savings Association Insurance Fund members by the Corporation which do not include those required for the Financing Corporation or the Resolution Funding Corporation pursuant to the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, or for the FSLIC Resolution Fund pursuant to section 11A of this Act, shall be deposited into the Savings Association Insurance Fund."

(2) Subsection (c) is amended to read as follows:

"(c) CORPORATION AS RECEIVER OR CONSERVATOR.—

"(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, State or Federal, or the constitution of any State, the Corporation is authorized to accept appointment and act as receiver or conservator for financial institutions in default upon appointment as set out in subsection (d) or (e) hereof.

"(2) As such receiver or conservator, the Corporation shall have the following authorities and duties:

"(A) the Corporation is authorized:

"(i) to take over the assets of and operate the financial institution with all the powers of the member or shareholders, the directors, and the officers of the financial institution and shall be authorized to conduct all business, including taking deposits, and perform all functions of the financial institution in its own name,

"(ii) to take such action as may be necessary to put the financial institution in a sound and solvent condition,

"(iii) to merge the financial institution with another insured financial institution,

"(iv) to organize, with respect to savings associations, by application to the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank System a new Federal Savings Association to take over such assets and/or such liabilities as the Corporation may deem appropriate, or with respect to any insured financial institution, to organize a bridge bank under subsection (i) hereof or a new national bank under subsection (h) hereof.

"(v) to transfer any assets or liabilities of the financial institution in default (including assets and liabilities associated with any trust business), such transfer to be effective without any further approval, assignment or consent with respect thereto, provided that when the transfer is another financial institution, the transfer must be approved by the appropriate Federal banking agency for the acquiring institution,

"(vi) to place the financial institution in liquidation and to proceed to realize upon the assets of the financial institution, having due regard to the condition of credit in the locality,

"(vii) to determine claims under the provisions set forth under subsection (1),

"(viii) to exercise all powers and authorities specifically granted by the provisions of this Act and such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry out the powers so granted, and to take any actions authorized by this Act, or

"(ix) to exercise any combination of the powers enumerated in clauses (2)(A)(i) through (2)(A)(viii),

"whichever shall appear to be in the best interests of the financial institution in default, of its depositors, or the Corporation;

"(B) the Corporation shall pay all valid credit obligations of the financial institution in accordance with the prescriptions and limitations set forth in this Act;

"(C) in cases of liquidation, or other closing or winding up of the affairs of a closed financial institution, the Corporation:

"(i) shall promptly publish a notice to the financial institution's creditors to present their claims, with proof thereof, to the receiver by a date specified in the notice (at least 90 days after first publication). The notice shall be published again approximately 1 month and 2 months respectively after first publication. Claims filed after the specified date shall be disallowed. The receiver shall mail a similar notice at the time of first publication to any creditor shown on the financial institution's books at the creditor's last address appearing thereon or upon discovery of the name and address of a claimant not appearing on the financial institution's books within 30 days of discovery;

"(ii) shall allow any claim seasonably received and proved to its satisfaction. The receiver may wholly or partly disallow any creditor claim or claim of security, preference, or priority not so proved, and shall notify the claimant of the disallowance and the reason therefore. Mailing notice of the disallowance to the claimant's last address appearing on the financial institution's books or on the proof of claim shall be sufficient notice. Unless, within 30 days after notice is mailed, the claimant files a written objection to the disallowance, disallowance shall be final. Those claims to which an objection is properly and timely filed shall be decided in accordance with the provisions of subsection (1).

"(iii) may pay creditor claims which are allowed by the receiver or approved by a final determination by the receiver in accordance with subsection (1), from time to time, in the receiver's discretion, to the extent funds are available, in such manner and amounts as are authorized under this act;

"(D) the Corporation shall pay to itself for its own account such portion of the amounts realized from any liquidation as it shall be entitled to receive on account of its subrogation to the claims of depositors, and it shall pay to depositors and other creditors the net amounts available for distribution to them;

"(E) the Corporation may, in its discretion, pay dividends on proved claims at any time, and no liability shall attach to the Corporation itself or as such receiver by reason of any such payment for failure to pay dividends to a claimant whose claim is not proved at the time of any such payment;

"(F) the Corporation may request a stay for a period of up to 90 days after the appointment of the receiver as to any legal action or proceeding to which the receiver or the financial institution in default is or may become a party. Upon petition, the court shall grant such stay as to all parties:

"(G) the Corporation is authorized to disaffirm or repudiate any contract or lease the performance of which the Corporation in its discretion considers to be burdensome, or in its discretion considers the disaffirmance or repudiation of which will promote the orderly administration of the financial institution's affairs. So long as the Corporation disaffirms or repudiates the contract within 90 days from the date the Corporation is appointed conservator or receiver or discovers the existence of the contract or lease subject to disaffirmance or repudiation, neither the Corporation nor the estate of the financial institution will incur any liability with respect to such contract or lease, except that lessors shall be entitled to the contractual rent for the period from the appointment of the receiver to the date the notice of disaffirmance or repudiation is mailed or effective: Provided, That nothing herein is intended in any way to limit the authority of the Corporation as receiver to disaffirm or repudiate such contract or lease after the 90-day period set out above;

"(H) the Corporation may enforce any contract entered into by the financial institution to the same extent as the financial institution in default, notwithstanding any provision of the contract to the contrary, which it deems in its discretion to be necessary for the orderly execution of its duties;

"(I) the Corporation shall keep a full accounting of each receivership estate and conservatorship estate or other disposition of institutions in default and make such accounting available to the shareholders of the financial institution, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Comptroller General;

"(J) in any case in which funds remain after all depositors, creditors, other claimants, and administrative expenses are paid, the Corporation shall distribute such funds to the financial institution's shareholders or members along with the accounting specified in paragraph (I); and

"(K) the Corporation may, any time five years after its appointment as receiver of a Federal financial institution, destroy any records of such institution which the Corporation in its discretion deems to be unnecessary."

(3) Subsection (d) is amended to read as follows:

"(d) CORPORATION AS RECEIVER OR CONSERVATOR OF FEDERAL FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS.—

"(1) Except as provided in section 21a of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act notwithstanding any other provison of law, State or Federal, or the constitution of any State, whenever a receiver or conservator is appointed for an insured Federal or District financial institution by the authority having supervision of such financial institution for the purpose of liquidation or winding up its affairs, the Corporation shall be appointed, and shall accept appointment, as such receiver or conservator. The Corporation may, at the discretion of the supervisory authority, be appointed conservator not for the purpose of liquidation or winding up the financial institution's affairs, and the Corporation may accept such appointment.

"(2) As such receiver or conservator, the Corporation shall have all powers and duties set forth in this Act, and such other powers and duties possessed by receivers and conservators for Federal financial institutions under any other provisions of of law, in addition to and not in derogation of the powers conferred in this Act;

"(3) As such receiver or conservator, the Corporation shall not be subject to the direction or supervision of any other agency or Department in the exercise of its rights, powers, and privileges as receiver or conservator, Provided that, in cases in which the financial institution continues to operate in conservatorship the institution shall remain subject to the supervision of its primary regulator."

(4) Subsection (e) is amended to read as follows:

"(e) CORPORATION AS RECEIVER OR CONSERVATOR OF STATE FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS.—

"(1)(A) Whenever the authority having supervision of any insured State financial institution (except a District financial institution) appoints a receiver or conservator for such State financial institution and tenders appointment to the Corporation, the Corporation may accept appointment as receiver or conservator.

"(B) The Corporation as such receiver or conservator shall possess all the rights, powers, and privileges granted by State law to a receiver or conservator of a State financial institution of any kind, in addition to and not in derogation of the powers conferred upon the Corporation under subsection (c).

"(C) As such receiver or conservator, the Corporation shall not be subject to the direction or supervision of any other agency or Department, State or Federal, in the exercise of its rights, powers, and privileges.

"(2) Whenever the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank System appoints a conservator or receiver under the provisions of section 5(d)(2)(C) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended (12 U.S.C. (d)(2)(C), the Corporation shall be appointed.

"(3) The Corporation shall have power and jurisdiction to appoint itself as sole conservator or receiver of an insured State financial institution in the event the Corporation determines—

"(A) that—

"(i) a conservator, receiver, or other legal custodian has been or is hereafter appointed for an insured State financial institution other than by the Federal Home Loan Bank System or by the Comptroller of the Currency and that the appointment of such conservator, receiver, or custodian, or any combination thereof, has been outstanding for a period of at least 15 consecutive days, and that one or more of the depositors in such institution is unable to obtain a withdrawal of this deposit, in whole or in part; or

"(ii) an insured State financial institution has been closed by or under the laws of any State; and

"(B) that one or more of the grounds specified in paragraph (2)(A) of Section 5(d) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended (12 U.S.C. 1464(d)) existed with respect to such financial institution at the time a conservator, receiver, or other legal custodian was appointed, or at the time such financial institution was closed, or exists thereafter during the appointment of the conservator, receiver, or other legal custodian or while the institution is closed.

"(4) In any case where the Corporation is appointed conservator or receiver of an insured State financial institution—

"(A) the provisions of this Act shall be applicable in the same manner and to the same extent as if such institution were a Federal financial institution with respect to which the Corporation had been appointed conservator or receiver; and

"(B) the Corporation shall have authority to liquidate such financial institution in an orderly manner or to make such other disposition of the matter as it deems to be in the best interests of the institution, its savers, and the Corporation.

"(5) The authority conferred by paragraphs (2) and (3) shall be in addition to, and not a limitation upon, appointment under paragraph (1)."

(5) Subsection (f) is amended to read as follows:

"(f) PAYMENT OF INSURED DEPOSITS.—

"(1) In cases of the liquidation, or other closing or winding up of the affairs of a closed insured financial institution or insured branch of a foreign bank, payment of the insured deposits in such financial institution or branch shall be made by the Corporation as soon as possible, subject to the provisions of subsection (g) of this section either by cash or by making available to each depositor a transferred desposit in a new financial institution in the same community or in another insured financial institution in an amount equal to the insured deposit of such depositor: Provided, however, that all payments made pursuant to this section on account of a closed bank or insured branch of a foreign bank shall be made only from the Bank Insurance Fund, and all payments made pursuant to this section on account of a closed savings association shall be made only from the Savings Association Insurance Fund.

"(2) The Corporation, in its discretion, may require proof of claims to be filed and may approve or reject such claims. In the case of a disputed claim, the Corporation shall have the power to adjudicate such dispute according to rules and regulations established for that purpose. Final determination made by the Corporation shall be reviewable by the Court of appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit or the Court of Appeals for the circuit where the financial institution is located and shall be upheld unless found to be arbitrary or capricious. In the absence of rules and regulations, the Corporation may require the final determination of a court of competent jurisdiction before paying such claim."

(6) Subsection (g) is amended to read as follows:

"(g) SUBROGATION.—

"Notwithstanding any other provision of law, State or Federal, or the constitution of any State, the Corporation, upon the payment to any depositor as provided in subsection (f) of this section, or the assumption of any deposit pursuant to Section 13, shall be subrogated to all rights of the depositor against the financial institution or branch to the extent of such payment. Such subrogation shall include the right on the part of the Corporation to receive the same dividends from the proceeds of the assets of such financial institution or branch and recoveries on account of stockholders' liability as would have been payable to the depositor on a claim for the insured deposit, but such depositor shall retain such claim for any uninsured or unassumed portion of the deposit: Provided, That, with respect to any bank which closes after May 25, 1938, the Corporation shall waive, in favor only of any person against whom stockholders' individual liability may be asserted, any claim on account of such liability in excess of the liability, if any, to the bank or its creditors, for the amount unpaid upon his stock in such bank; but any such waiver shall be effected in such manner and on such terms and conditions as will not increase recoveries or dividends on account of claims to which the Corporation is not subrogated: Provided further, That if the Corporation determines not to invoke the authority conferred in subsection (e)(3), the rights of depositors and other creditors of any State financial institution shall be determined in accordance with the applicable provisions of State law."

(7) Subsection (h) is amended as follows:

(a) The term "closed bank" is deleted, and the term "financial institution in default" is inserted in lieu thereof wherever it appears;

(b) In paragraph (1), the words "closing of an insured bank" are deleted and the words "default of an insured financial institution" are inserted in lieu thereof;

(c) In paragraph (2), the words, "State or Federal, or the constitution of any State," are added after "Nothwithstanding any other provision of law" in the last sentence; and

(d) In paragraph (4), the words "closed insured bank" are deleted, and the words "financial institution in default" are inserted in lieu thereof.

(8) Subsection (i) is amended to read as follows:

"(i) BRIDGE BANKS.—

"(1) ORGANIZATION.—

"(A) PURPOSE.—When one or more insured financial institutions are in default or in anticipation of its or their becoming in default, the Corporation may, in its discretion, organize a bridge bank or banks with respect thereto and upon the granting of a charter to such bridge bank, the bridge bank may—

"(i) assume such deposits of such insured financial institution or institutions that is or are in default or in danger of default as the Corporation may, in its discretion, determine to be appropriate;

"(ii) assume such other liabilities (including liabilities associated with any trust business) of such insured financial institution or institutions that is or are in default or in danger of default as the Corporation may, in its discretion, determine to be appropriate;

"(iii) purchase such assets (including assets associated with any trust business) of such insured financial institution or institutions that is or are in default or in danger of default as the Corporation may, in its discretion, determine to be appropriate; and

"(iv) perform any other temporary function which the Corporation may, in its discretion, prescribe in accordance with this Act.

"(B) ARTICLES OF ASSOCIATION.—The articles of association and organization certificate of a bridge bank as approved by the Corporation shall be executed by three representatives designated by the Corporation.

"(C) NATIONAL BANK.—A bridge bank shall be organized as a national bank.

"(D) Interim directors.—A bridge bank shall have an interim board of directors consisting of not fewer than five nor more than ten members appointed by the Corporation.;

"(2) CHARTERING.—

"(A) CONDITIONS.—A bridge bank shall be chartered by the Comptroller of the Currency as a national bank only if the Board of Directors determines that—

"(i) the amount which is reasonably necessary to operate such bridge bank will not exceed the amount which is reasonably necessary to save the cost of liquidating, including paying the insured accounts of, one or more insured financial institutions in default with respect to which the bridge bank is chartered;

"(ii) the continued operation of such insured financial institution or financial institutions in default with respect to which the bridge bank is chartered is essential to provide adequate banking services in the community where each such fiancial institution in default is located; or

"(iii) the continued operation of such insured financial institution or institutions in default with respect to which the bridge bank is chartered is in the best interest of the depositors of such financial institution or institutions in default or the public.

"(B) INSURED NATIONAL BANK.—A bridge bank shall be an insured bank from the time it is chartered as a national bank.

"(C) BRIDGE BANK TREATED AS BEING IN DEFAULT FOR CERTAIN PURPOSES.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, State or Federal, or the constitution of any State, any bridge bank shall be treated as a financial institution in default at such times and for such purposes as the Corporation may, in its discretion, determine.

"(D) MANAGEMENT.—A bridge bank, upon the granting of its charter, shall be under the management of a board of directors consisting of not fewer than five nor more than ten members appointed by the Corporation.

"(E) BYLAWS.—The board of directors of a bridge bank shall adopt such bylaws as may be approved by the Corporation.

"(3) TRANSFER OF ASSETS AND LIABILITIES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Upon the granting of a charter to a bridge bank pursuant to this subsection, the Corporation, as receiver, or any other receiver appointed with respect to any insured financial institution in default with respect to which the bridge bank is chartered may, transfer any assets and liabilities of such financial institution in default to the bridge bank in accordance with paragraph (1) of this subsection. Thereafter, the Corporation, as receiver, or any other receiver appointed with respect to an insured financial institution in default may transfer any assets and liabilities of such insured financial institution in default as the Corporation may, in its discretion, determine to be appropriate in accordance with paragraph (1) of this subsection. For purposes of this paragraph of this subsection, the trust business, including fiduciary appointments, of any insured financial institution in default, is included among its assets and liabilities. The transfer of any assets or liabilities associated with any trust business of an insured financial institution in default transferred to a bridge bank shall be effective without any further approval, assignment or consent with respect thereto, notwithstanding any other provision of law, State or Federal, or the constitution of any State.

"(B) INTENT OF CONGRESS REGARDING CONTINUING OPERATIONS.—It is the intent of the Congress that, in order to prevent unnecessary hardship or losses to the customers of any insured financial institution in default with respect to which a bridge bank is chartered, especially creditworthy farmers, small businesses, and households, the Corporation should—

"(i) continue to honor commitments made by the financial institution in default to creditworthy customers, and

"(ii) not interrupt or terminate adequately secured loans which are transferred under subparagraph (A) and are being repaid by the debtor in accordance with the terms of the loan instrument.

"(4) POWERS OF BRIDGE BANKS.—Each bridge bank chartered under this subsection shall have all corporate powers of, and be subject to the same provisions of law as, a national bank, except as otherwise provided in this subsection and except that—

"(A) the Corporation may—

"(i) remove the interim directors and directors of a bridge bank;

"(ii) fix the compensation of members of the interim board of directors and the board of directors and senior management, as determined by the Corporation in its discretion, of a bridge bank; and

"(iii) waive any requirement established under section 5145, 5146, 5147, 5148, or 5149 of the Revised Statutes (relating to directors of national banks) or section 31 of the Banking Act of 1933 which would otherwise be applicable with respect to directors of a bridge bank by operation of paragraph (2)(B);

"(B) the Corporation may idemnify the representatives for purposes of subparagraph (1)(B) and the interim directors, directors, officers, employees and agents of a bridge bank on such terms as the Corporation determines to be appropriate;

"(C) no requirement under section 5138 of the Revised Statutes or any other provision of law relating to the capital of a national bank shall apply with respect to a bridge bank;

"(D) the Comptroller of the Currency may establish a limitation on the extent to which any person may become indebted to a bridge bank without regard to the amount of the bridge bank's capital or surplus;

"(E)(i) the board of directors of a bridge bank shall elect a chairperson who may also serve in the position of chief executive officer: Provided, That such person shall not serve either as chairperson or as chief executive officer without the prior approval of the Corporation;

"(ii) the board of directors of a bridge bank may appoint a chief executive officer who is not also the chairperson: Provided, That such person shall not serve as chief executive officer without the prior approval of the Corporation;

"(F) a bridge bank shall not be required to purchase stock of any Federal Reserve bank;

"(G) the Comptroller of the Currency shall waive any requirement for a fidelity bond with respect to a bridge bank at the request of the Corporation;

"(H) any action to which a bridge bank becomes a party by virtue of its acquisition of any assets or assumption of any liabilities of a financial institution in default shall be stayed from further proceedings for a period of up to 90 days at the request of the bridge bank;

"(I) no agreement which tends to diminish or defeat the right, title or interest of a bridge bank in any asset of an insured financial institution in default acquired by it shall be valid against the bridge bank unless such agreement:

"(i) shall be in writing,

"(ii) shall have been executed by such insured financial institution in default and the person or persons claiming an adverse interest thereunder, including the obligor, contemporaneously with the acquisition of the asset by such insured financial institution in default,

"(iii) shall have been approved by the board of directors of such insured financial institution in default or its loan committee, which approval shall be reflected in the minutes of said board or committee, and

"(iv) shall have been, continuously from the time of its execution, an official record of such insured financial institution in default; and

"(J) except with the prior approval of the Corporation, a bridge bank may not, in any transaction or series of transactions, issue capital stock or be a party to any merger, consolidation, disposition of assets or liabilities, sale or exchange of capital stock, or similar transaction, or change its charter.

"(5) CAPITAL.—

"(A) NO CAPITAL REQUIRED.—The Corporation shall not be required to—

"(i) issue any capital stock on behalf of a bridge bank chartered under this subsection; or

"(ii) purchase any capital stock of a bridge bank: Provided, That notwithstanding any other provision of law, State or Federal, or the constitution of any State, the Corporation may purchase and retain capital stock of a bridge bank in such amounts and on such terms as the Corporation, in its discretion, determines to be appropriate.

"(B) OPERATING FUNDS IN LIEU OF CAPITAL.—Upon the organization of a bridge bank, and thereafter, as the Board of Directors may, in its discretion, determine to be necessary or advisable, the Corporation may make available to the bridge bank, upon such terms and conditions and in such form and amounts as the Corporation may in its discretion determine, funds for the operation of the bridge bank.

"(C) AUTHORITY TO ISSUE CAPITAL STOCK.—Whenever the Board of Directors determines it is advisable to do so, the Corporation shall cause capital stock of a bridge bank to be issued and offered for sale in such amounts and on such terms and conditions as the Corporation may, in its discretion, determine.

"(6) NO FEDERAL STATUS.—

"(A) AGENCY STATUS.—A bridge bank is not an agency, establishment, or instrumentality of the United States.

"(B) EMPLOYEE STATUS.—Representatives for purposes of subparagraph (1)(B), interim directors, directors, officers, employees, or agents of a bridge bank are not, solely by virtue of service in any such capacity, officers or employees of the United States for purposes of Title 5, United States Code, or any other provision of law. Any employee of the Corporation or of any Federal instrumentality who serves at the request of the Corporation as a representative for purposes of subpargraph (1)(B), interim director, director, officer, employee or agent of a bridge bank shall not

"(i) solely by virtue of service in any such capacity lose any existing status as an officer or employee of the United States for purposes of Title 5, United States Code, or any other provision of law, or

"(ii) receive any salary or benefits for service in any such capacity with respect to a bridge bank in addition to such salary or benefits as are obtained through employment with the Corporation or such Federal instrumentality.

"(7) ASSISTANCE AUTHORIZED.—The Corporation may, in its discretion, provide assistance under section 13(c) to facilitate any transaction contemplated in subparagraph (10)(A) (i), (ii) or (iii) with respect to a bridge bank in the same manner and to the same extent as such assistance may be provided under such section with respect to an insured financial institution in default, or to facilitate a bridge bank's acquisition of any assets or the assumption of any liabilities of an insured financial institution in default.

"(8) ACQUISITION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Any transaction with respect to the merger or sale of a bridge bank requiring approval under section 18(c), unless immediate action is necessary to prevent the probable failure of an insured financial institution, shall be deemed to be an emergency requiring expeditious action. The responsible agency shall notify the Attorney General thereof and if a report on competitive factors is requested within ten days, such transaction may not be consummated before the fifth calendar day after the date of approval by the responsible agency with respect thereto.

"(B) BY OUT-OF-STATE HOLDING COMPANY.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, State or Federal, or the constitution of any State, any financial institution, including an out-of-State financial institution, or any out-of-State financial institution holding company may acquire and retain the capital stock or assets of, or otherwise acquire and retain a bridge bank; Provided, That the bridge bank at any time had assets aggregating $500,000,000 or more, as determined by the Corporation on the basis of the bridge bank's reports of condition or on the basis of the last available reports of condition or thrift financial reports of any insured financial institution in default, which institution has been acquired, or whose assets have been acquired, by the bridge bank; and Provided further, That the acquiring entity may acquire the bridge bank only in the same manner and to the same extent as such entity may acquire an insured bank in default under section 13(f)(2).

"(9) CORPORATE EXISTENCE OF BRIDGE BANK.—Subject to paragraphs (10) and (11) of this subsection, the corporate existence of a bridge bank shall not exceed the period of two years from the date it is granted a charter: Provided, That the Board of directors may, in its discretion, extend the corporate existence of the bridge bank for additional three one-year periods.

"(10) TERMINATION OF BRIDGE BANK STATUS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—A bridge bank shall terminate its status as such upon the earliest to occur of the following:

"(i) The merger or consolidation of the bridge bank with a financial institution that is not a bridge bank: Provided, that in connection with such a transaction, the bridge bank may request conversion of its charter to that of a financial institution that is not a bridge bank;

"(ii) The sale of all or substantially all of the capital stock of the bridge bank to an entity other than the Corporation and other than another bridge bank.

"(iii) The assumption of all or substantially all of the deposits and other liabilities of the bridge bank by a financial institution holding company or a financial institution that is not a bridge bank, or the acquisition of all or substantially all of the assets of the bridge bank by a financial institution holding company, a financial institution that is not a bridge bank, or other entity as permitted under applicable law.

"(iv) The dissolution of the bridge bank by the Corporation in accordance with paragraph (11) of this subsection prior to the initial two-year period of corporate existence of the bridge bank and any extension thereof in accordance with paragraph (9) of this subsection.

"(v) The expiration of the initial two-year period of corporate existence of the bridge bank and any extension thereof in accordance with paragraph (9) of this subsection.

"(11) DISSOLUTION OF BRIDGE BANK.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, State or Federal, or the constitution of any State—

"(i) the Board of Directors may, in its discretion, dissolve a bridge bank in accordance with this paragraph (11) at any time during the corporate existence of a bridge bank if the Board of Directors determines that the amount which is reasonably necessary to dissolve the bridge bank will not exceed the amount which is reasonably necessary to either continue operation of the bridge bank or effect a transaction with respect to the bridge bank as contemplated in subparagraph (10)(A)(i), (ii) or (iii) of this subsection;

"(ii) the Board of Directors may, in its discretion, commence such dissolution proceedings in accordance with this paragraph (11) with respect to a bridge bank as the Board of Directors determines to be necessary following the consummation of a transaction contemplated in subparagraph (10)(A)(ii), or (iii); and

"(iii) the Board of Directors shall commence dissolution proceedings in accordance with this paragraph (11) upon the expiration of the period of corporate existence of a bridge bank as provided in paragraph (9) of this subsection.

"(B) PROCEDURES.—The Comptroller of the Currency shall appoint the Corporation receiver for a bridge bank upon certification by the Board of Directors to the Comptroller of the Currency of its determination to dissolve the bridge bank. The Corporation as such receiver shall wind up the affairs of the bridge bank in conformity with the provisions of law relating to the liquidation of closed national banks. With respect to any such bridge bank, the Corporation as such receiver shall have all the rights, powers and privileges now possessed or hereafter granted by law to a receiver of a national bank or a District bank and notwithstanding any other provision of law in the exercise of such rights, powers, and privileges the Corporation shall not be subject to the direction or supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury or the Comptroller of the Currency.

"(12)(A) Each bridge bank established under this subsection may operate branches in only one state.

"(B) The Corporation may, in the Corporation's discretion, organize two or more bridge banks under this subsection to assume any deposits of, assume any other liabilities of, and purchase any assets of a single financial institution in default."

(9) Subsection (j) is amended by deleting the term "closed bank" and inserting "financial institution in default" in lieu thereof.

(10) By adding new subsections (k), (l) and (m) at the end thereof to read as follows:

"(k) VALUATION OF CLAIMS AGAINST FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS IN DEFAULT.—Notwithstanding any other law, State or Federal, or the constitution of any State, and regardless of the method which the Corporation determines to utilize with respect to an insured financial institution in default or in danger of default, including but not limited to transactions authorized under subsection (i) and under section 13(c)(2)(A), the following provisions shall govern the rights of the creditors (other than insured depositors) of such financial institution:

"(1) MAXIMUM LIABILITY.—The maximum liability of the Corporation to any person having a claim against the estate of an insured financial institution in default shall be equal to the amount such claimant would have received from the estate of the financial institution if the Corporation had liquidated such estate. In the case of an insured financial institution which the Corporation elects to operate, the point in time for determining what such claimant will receive from the estate of the financial institution had the Corporation liquidated such estate shall be the date the receiver ceases operating the financial institution, and begins to wind up the affairs of the financial institution, and the Corporation shall not be liable to any such claimant should the estate of the financial institution be diminished from the time the Corporation begins operating the financial institution to the time the Corporation ceases operating the financial institution and begins to wind up the affairs of the financial institution, absent a finding of bad faith on the part of the Corporation; and

"(2) ADDITIONAL PAYMENTS AUTHORIZED.—The Corporation may, in its discretion, use its own resources to make additional payments or credit additional amounts to or with respect to or for the account of any claimant or category of claimants: Provided, That the Corporation shall not be obligated, as a result of having made any such payment or credited any such amount to or respect to or for the account of any claimant or category of claimants, to make payments to any other claimant or category or claimants; and Provided further;

"(A) That if the financial institution in default is a Bank Insurance Fund member, the Corporation may only make such payments out of fund held in the Bank Insurance Fund of the Deposit Insurance Fund; and

"(B) That if the financial institution in default is a Saving Association Insurance Fund member, the Corporation may only make such payments out of funds held in the Savings Association Insurance Fund of the Deposit Insurance Fund.

"(3) The Corporation may make the payments or credit the amounts specified in paragraph (2) directly to the claimants or may make such payments or credit such amounts to an open insured financial institution to induce the open insured financial institution to accept liability for such claims.

"(l) RULE-MAKING AND CLAIMS DETERMINATION AUTHORIZED.—

"(1) The Corporation shall have power to make rules and regulations for the conduct of conservatorships and of receiverships and the Corporation may, by regulation or order, provide for the exercise of functions by members or stockholders, directors, or officers of a financial institution during conservatorship or receivership. The Corporation shall also have the power to determine claims in accordance with rules and regulations it shall prescribe and subject to judicial review as herein provided.

"(2) The authority to determine claims shall only be exercised after the Corporation has established rules or regulations governing the processing of claims, the accounting of estates funds, and the distributing of residual funds to shareholders. Final determinations made by the Corporation with respect to claims asserted against the estate of a financial institution shall be reviewable by the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit or the Court of Appeals for the circuit where the financial institution is located and shall be upheld unless found to be arbitrary or capricious.

"(3) In the absence of rules and regulations established by the Corporation for the resolution of claims against the estate of the financial institution, any action or proceeding against a financial institution for which the Corporation has been appointed receiver, or against the Corporation as receiver of such financial institution, shall be brought in the district or territorial court of the United States held within the district in which that financial institution's principal place of business is located, or, in the event any State, county, or municipal court has jurisdiction over such an action or proceeding, in such court in the county or city in which the financial institution's principal place of business is located.

"(m) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—Except as provided in this section, no court may take any action, except at the request of the Board of Directors by regulation or order, to restrain or affect the exercise of powers functions of the Corporation as a conservator or receiver."

SEC. 212. FSLIC RESOLUTION FUND.—There is hereby added after Section 11 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act a new section 11A (12 U.S.C. 1821A) to read as follows:

"SEC. 11A. FSLIC RESOLUTION FUND.—(a) ESTABLISHED.—There is hereby established a separate fund to be designated as the FSLIC Resolution Fund which shall be managed by the Corporation and separately maintained and not commingled. On the date of the dissolution of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation in accordance with section 401 of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989, all reserves and all other assets of any kind, and debts, obligations, contracts and other liabilities of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, matured or unmatured, accrued, absolute, contingent, or otherwise shall hereby be transferred in their entirety to the FSLIC Resolution Fund; provided however that such liabilities transferred to the FSLIC Resolution Fund shall not include liabilities specifically transferred pursuant to section 21a of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act. Such reserves assets, debts, obligations, contracts, or other liabilities as are so transferred shall be exclusive assets and liabilities of the FSLIC Resolution Fund and not of the Coroporation and shall not be consolidated with the assets and liabilities of the Deposit Insurance Fund or the Corporation for accounting or reporting or any other purpose.

"(b) SOURCE OF FUNDS.—The FSLIC Resolution Fund shall be funded from the following sources in the listed priority to the extent funds are needed: (i) miscellaneous income from assets of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation that were transferred to the FSLIC Resolution Fund on the date of enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989; (ii) the proceeds of the resolution of insolvent thrift institutions which became insolvent prior to December 31, 1988, to the extent such funds are not required by the Resolution Funding Corporation pursuant to section 21b of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act; (iii) proceeds from borrowings by the Financing Corporation pursuant to section 21 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act; (iv) all amounts assessed Savings Association Insurance Fund members by the Corporation pursuant to section 7 from the date of enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989, and not required by the Financing Corporation pursuant to section 21 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, or for the Resolution Trust Corporation pursuant to section 21a of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, which shall be covered into the FSLIC Resolution Fund until December 31, 1991.

"(c) TREASURY BACKUP.—In the event that all the above funds are insufficient for the purposes of the FSLIC Resolution Fund, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, subject to the availability of appropriations, provide such excess funds determined by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the Secretary to be necessary for FLSIC Resolution Fund purposes. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of the Treasury, without fiscal year limitation, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this paragraph.

"(d) LEGAL PROCEEDINGS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any judgment resulting from civil action, suit, or proceeding to which the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation was a party prior to its dissolution hereunder, or which is initiated against the Corporation or its assets thereafter, shall be limited to the assets of the FSLIC Resolution Fund.

"(e) DISSOLUTION.—The FSLIC Resolution Fund shall be dissolved upon satisfaction of all debts and liabilities of sale of all assets acquired in case resolutions and otherwise. Upon dissolution any remaining funds shall be covered into the Treasury, provided that any tangible assets, including offices and office supplies, shall be transferred to the Corporation for use by and to be held as asset of the Savings Association Insurance Fund."

SEC. 213. AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 12.—Section 12 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1822) is hereby amended as follows:

(1) The words "closed bank" are deleted wherever they occur, and the words "financial institution in default" are inserted in lieu thereof;

(2) Subsection (a) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) BOND NOT REQUIRED; AGENTS; FEE.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, State or Federal, or the constitution of any State, the Corporation as receiver of an insured financial institution or branch of a foreign bank shall not be required to furnish bond and shall have the right to appoint an agent or agents to assist it in its duties as such receiver, and all fees, compensation, and expenses of liquidation and administration thereof shall be fixed by the Corporation, and may be paid by it out of funds coming into its possession as such receiver."

(3) In subsection (d), the words "as a stockholder or the closed bank, or of any liability of such depositor" are deleted; and the words "such bank" are deleted and "such financial institution" are inserted in lieu thereof.

SEC. 214. AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 13.—Section 13 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1823) is amended as follows:

(1) Subsection (a) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) INVESTMENT OF CORPORATION FUNDS.—

"(1) AUTHORITY.—Funds belonging to the Corporation and held in either the Bank Insurance Fund or the Savings Association Insurance Fund that are not otherwise employed shall be invested in obligations of the United States or in obligations guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States: Provided, That funds held in the Bank Insurance Fund and the Savings Association Insurance Fund shall be invested separately and not commingled.

"(2) LIMITATION.—The Corporation shall not sell or purchase any such obligations for its own account and in its own right and interest, at any one time aggregating in excess of $100,000, without the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury may waive the requirement of his approval with respect to any transaction or classes of transactions subject to the provisions of this subsection for such period of time and under such conditions as he may determine."

(2) Subsection (b) is amended as follows:

(a) by deleting the words "banking and checking" wherever they occur, and inserting the word "depository" in lieu thereof;

(b) by deleting the word "bank" wherever it occurs, and inserting the words "financial institution" in lieu thereof, except that the phrase "Federal Reserve bank" shall remain unchanged.

(c) In subparagraph (2)(A), the words "insured institution" are deleted wherever they occur and the words "another insured financial institution" are inserted in subparagraph (2)(A) in lieu thereof, and the words "such other insured financial institution" are inserted in subparagraph (2)(A) (ii) and (iii) in lieu thereof;

(d) In paragraph (2), a new subparagraph (2)(C) is added to read as follows:

"(C) Any action to which the Corporation is or becomes a party by virtue of its acquisition of any asset or exercise of any other authority set forth in this section shall be stayed for a period of ninety days at the request of the Corporation.";

(e) In paragraph (3) the words "section 13(f) of this Act" are deleted, and the words "subsections (f) and (g) hereof" are inserted in lieu thereof;

(f) In paragraph (4), the word "banking" is deleted and the word "financial" is inserted in lieu therof, and the following new sentences are inserted immediately after the period at the end of paragraph (A):

"In determining the cost of assistance, the Corporation shall consider the immediate and long-term obligations of the Corporation with respect to such assistance, including contingent liabilities. The Corporation shall also consider the Federal tax revenues foregone by the government, to the extent reasonably ascertainable, as a result of the provisions of the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 providing specific tax benefits to acquirers of financial institutions in default or in danger of default or to such institutions as a result of assistance provided by the Corporation, or any similar statutory provision."; and

(g) By redesignating existing paragraph (6) and (7) as paragraphs (7) and (8); and by deleting existing paragraph (8); and by inserting a new paragraph (6) to read as follows:

"(6) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, State or Federal, or the constitution of any State, the transfer of any assets or liabilities associated with any trust business of an insured financial institution in default under subparagraph (2)(A) shall be effective without any further approval, assignment, or consent with respect thereto."

(4) Subsections (d) and (e) are amended to read as follows:

"(d) SALE OF ASSETS TO CORPORATION.—Conservators, receivers, or liquidators of insured financial institutions in default shall be entitled to offer the assets of such financial institutions for sale to the Corporation or as security for loans from the Corporation. The proceeds of every such sale or loan shall be utilized for the same purposes and in the same manner as other funds realized from the liquidation of the assets of such financial institutions. The Corporation, in its discretion, may make loans on the security of or may purchase and liquidate or sell any part of the assets of an insured financial institution which is now or may hereafter be in default.

"(e) AGREEMENT AGAINST INTERESTS OF CORPORATION.—No agreement which tends to diminish or defeat the right, title or interest of the Corporation in any asset acquired by it under this section or section 11, either as security for a loan or by purchase or as receiver of any insured financial institution, shall be valid against the Corporation unless such agreement (1) shall be in writing, (2) shall have been executed by the financial institution and the person or persons claiming an adverse interest thereunder, including the obligor, contemporaneously with the acquisition of the asset by the financial institution, (3) shall have been approved by the board of directors of the financial institution or its loan committee, which approval shall be reflected in the minutes of said board or committee, and (4) shall have been, continuously, from the time of its execution, an official record of the financial institution."

SEC. 216. LIMITATION ON BORROWINGS.—Section 15 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1825) is hereby amended as follows:

(1) by redesignating the existing paragraph as subsection (a) and by adding at the end thereof the following: "and such State, territorial, county, municipal or local taxation shall be the only type of State, territorial, county, municipal, or local tax to which the Corporation for itself or as receiver of an insured financial institution shall be subjected. Further, the failure of an insured financial institution to pay or remit any State, territorial, county, municipal, or other local tax shall not subject the Corporation as receiver or conservator of that financial institution to any penalty, forfeiture, or limitation with respect to the enforceability of any right, title, or interest the Corporation as receiver or conservator may have and such failure to pay the tax shall only result in a claim for such tax against the estate of the financial institution."; and

(2) by adding a new subparagraph (b) to read as follows:

"All notes, debentures, bonds, or other similar obligations including estimated losses for guarantees or other liabilities, of the Bank Insurance Fund or the Savings Association Insurance Fund (other than obligations to the Treasury) outstanding at any one time, may not exceed 50 per centum of the adjusted net worth of the Bank Insurance Fund or the Savings Association Insurance Fund, respectively, as calculated based on the most recent audit by the General Accounting Office, or $10,000,000,000 to each fund, whichever is less.

SEC. 217. REPORTS.—Section 17 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1827) is hereby amended:

(1) By striking out subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(a) The Corporation shall annually submit a full report of its operations, activities, budget, receipts and expenditures for the preceding 12-month period. Such report shall be submitted to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, who shall cause the same to be printed for the information of Congress, and the President as soon as practicable after the first day of January each year."

(2) By redesignating subsections (b), (c) and (d) as (c), (d) and (e) respectively, and by adding a new subsection (b) to read as follows:

"(b) As soon as practicable, prior to the beginning of each fiscal quarter, the Corporation shall submit a report to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Director of the Office of Management and Budget with respect to the Corporation's financial operating plans and forecasts (including estimates of actual and future spending, and estimates of actual and future non-cash obligations) taking into acccount the Corporation's financial commitments, guarantees and other contingent liabilities. Nothing herein implies in and of itself any obligation on the part of the Corporation to obtain the consent or approval of the Secretary or the Director of the plans and forecasts provided pursuant hereto."

SEC. 218. REGULATIONS GOVERNING INSURED FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS.—Section 18 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1828) is hereby amended as follows:

(1) Subsection (a) is amended by adding before the period in the first sentence the following: "; Provided further that such signs displayed by financial institutions will further represent whether the financial institution is a Bank Insurance Fund member or a Savings Association Insurance Fund member."

(2) Subsection (c) is amended—

(a) in paragraph (2), by deleting subparagraph (C) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(C) the Corporation if the acquiring, assuming, or resulting bank is to be a State nonmember insured bank (except a District bank or a savings bank supervised by the Federal Home Loan Bank System); and

"(D) the Federal Home Loan Bank System if the acquiring, assuming, or resulting institution is to be a savings association.";

(b) by deleting subparagraph (12);

(c) in subparagraphs (3), (4), (6), (7) and (9), by adding after the word "bank" or "banks" each time it appears, the words "or savings association" or "or savings associations", respectively.

(d) in subparagraph (3), the word "failure" is deleted, and the word "default" is added in lieu thereof.

(3) Subsection (d) is amended by adding after "(except a District bank)" each time they appear, the words "or savings bank supervised by the Federal Home Loan Bank System.

(4) Subsection (i) is amended—

(a) in paragraph (1) by deleting the words "nonmember bank (except a District bank)" and replacing in lieu thereof the words "financial institution (except a member bank or a District bank)";

(b) in paragraph (2):

(i) by adding before the period the following:

"; (D) the Federal Home Loan Bank System if the resulting institution is to be a State savings association or a savings bank to be supervised by the Federal Home Loan Bank System; and

(ii) in subsection (C), by adding after the words "resulting bank" the words "or savings association", and by adding after the words "(except a District bank)" the words "a savings bank to be supervised by the Federal Home Loan Bank System)."

(5) By inserting the following new subsections after subsection (1) therein:

"(m) ACTIVITIES OF SAVINGS ASSOCIATIONS SUBSIDIARIES.—

"(1) PROCEDURES.—Whenever an insured savings association establishes or acquires control of a company or whenever an insured savings association elects to conduct any new activity through a company that the insured savings association controls, the insured savings association:

"(A) shall notify the Corporation and the Federal Home Loan Bank System not less than 30 days prior to the establishment, or acquisition, of any such new company, and not less than 30 days prior to the commencement of any such activity, and in either case shall provide at that time such information as each such agency may, by regulation, require;

"(B) except as provided in subsection 5(t)(1) of the Home Owners' Loan Act, as amended, shall deduct its entire investment in and loans and other financial accommodations to the company from its own capital for the purposes of determining capital adequacy if the company is engaged in activities not permissible for a national bank; and

"(C) shall conduct the activities of the company in accordance with such rules, regulations and orders as may be established by the Federal Home Loan Bank System.

"(2) ENFORCEMENT POWERS.—With respect to any company controlled by an insured savings association:

"(A) the Corporation and the Federal Home Loan Bank System shall each have, with respect to such company, the respective powers and authorities that each may possess with respect to the insured savings association pursuant to this section or to section 8; and

"(B) the Federal Home Loan Bank System shall have authority to determine, after notice and opportunity for hearing, that the continuation by the insured savings association of its ownership or control of, or its relationship to, the company constitutes a serious risk to the financial safety, soundness or stability of the insured savings association is inconsistent with sound banking principles or with the purposes of this act, and upon making any such determination the agency shall have authority to order the insured savings association to divest itself of control of the company; the Federal Home Loan Bank System shall also have the authority to take any other corrective measures with respect to the company, including the authority to have the company terminate the activities or operations posing such risks, as the agency may deem appropriate.

"(3) ACTIVITIES INCOMPATIBLE WITH DEPOSIT INSURANCE.—

"(A) The Corporation shall have authority to determine by regulation of general applicability to all State-chartered Savings Association Insurance Fund members that any specific activity after determination by the Board of Directors poses a serious threat to the Savings Association Insurance Fund: Provided, that prior to adopting any such regulation, the Corporation shall consult with the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank System and shall provide appropriate State supervisors the opportunity to review such regulation and comment thereon, and the Corporation shall specifically take such comments into consideration. Upon issuing such a regulation with respect to an activity, the Corporation may order that no Savings Association Insurance Fund member may engage in any activity directly that is not permissible for a federal savings and loan association under the Home Owners' Loan Act. In addition, no Savings Association Insurance Fund member shall be or become liable for the liabilities or obligations arising out of any such activity conducted indirectly, except to the extent such liability or obligation (i) is in writing, (ii) shall have been executed by the member and person or entity to whom the liability or obligation is owed either contemporaneously with the creation of the liability or obligation, or if the liability or obligation was created prior to the effective date of the FIRREA, within 120 days of the effective date of the FIRREA, (iii) has been approved by the Board of Directors or an official committee of the member, and (iv) shall have been, continuously, from the time of its creation, an offical record of the bank.

"(B) Nothing in this section shall limit the authority of the Federal Home Loan Bank System to issue regulations to promote safety and soundness or to enforce compliance with other applicable laws.

"(4) "COMPANY" DEFINED.—As used in this subsection (m), the term "company" shall not include an insured financial institution.

"(5) Nothing contained in subsection (m) shall derogate from the rights and authorities of the Corporation under other provisions of law."

SEC. 219. NONDISCRIMINATION.—Section 22 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1830) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"It is not the purpose of this chapter to discriminate in any manner against State nonmember banks or State savings associations and in favor of national or member banks or Federal savings associations, respectively; but the purpose is to provide all banks and savings associations with the same opportunity to obtain and enjoy the benefits of this chapter."

TITLE III—SAVINGS ASSOCIATION SUPERVISION IMPROVEMENTS.

SEC. 301. DEFINITIONS.—Section 2 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 (12 U.S.C. 1462) is hereby amended as follows:

(1) by amending subsection (a) to read as follows:

"(a) The term "Chairman" means the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank System.";

SEC. 302. SUPERVISION OF SAVINGS ASSOCIATIONS.—(a) The Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended, is hereby further amended by inserting a new Section 3 as follows:

"Section 3.—SUPERVISION OF SAVINGS ASSOCIATIONS.—(a) The Chairman is authorized to provide for the examination, safe and sound operation, and regulation of savings associations. The Chairman may issue rules and regulations, including regulations defining the terms used in this chapter, to carry out the responsibilities of the Chairman, or the System. The authorities conferred by this section are intended to encourage savings associations to maintain their role of providing credit for housing in a manner consitent with principles of safe and sound operation.

"(b) The Chairman shall by regulation prescribe uniform accounting and disclosure standards for all savings associations to be used in determining their compliance with all applicable rules and regulations. These uniform accounting standards shall incorporate generally accepted accounting principles to the same degree that generally accepted accounting principles are used to determine compliance with rules and regulations issued by the Federal banking agencies, shall require full compliance therewith no later than the schedule provided in 12 C.F.R. Section 563, and shall be coordinated with the capital standards established by the Chairman pursuant to section 5(t)(1) of this Act, provided that there will be no deviation from full compliance with the uniform accounting standards after December 31, 1993.

"(c) The rules, regulations and policies of the Chairman governing the safe and sound operation of savings associations, including policies governing asset classification and appraisals, shall be no less stringent than those of the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency.

"(d) No savings association shall make loans beyond one hundred miles from its principal office except (1) loans in the area beyond such one hundred mile limit in which it was operating prior to June 27, 1934, and (2) loans which are made pursuant to regulations of the Federal Home Loan Bank System: Provided, That any loan made beyond fifty miles from the savings association's principal office (and outside the territory in which it was operating on such date also shall be subject to such regulations.".

(b) Section 409 of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1730b) relating to investment of certain funds in accounts of savings associations is hereby transferred to and shall become a part of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 as new Section 3(e) hereof and is further amended by replacing the words "institutions insured by the Corporation," with "Savings associations, to the extent they are insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation".

(c) Section 410 of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1730c) relating to participation by savings associations in lotteries and related activities is hereby transferred to and shall become part of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, amended, at Section 3(f), and is further amended by deleting the term "insured institution" and "institution" each time they appear and inserting in lieu thereof the term "savings association".

(d) Section 413 of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1730f) relating to disclosures with respect to certain federally related mortgage loans is hereby transferred to and shall become a part of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 as new Section 3(g) thereof and is further amended by replacing the words "insured institution" and "institution," wherever they appear in that section with the words "savings associations".

(e) Section 414 of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1730g) relating to state usury override for certain loans is hereby transferred to and shall become a part of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 as new Section 3(h) hereof and is further amended by:

(1) replacing the terms "insured institution" and "institution," wherever they appear in that section, with the term "savings association"; and

(2) deleting the words "(which, for the purpose of this section, shall include a Federal association the deposits of which are insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation)".

(f) Section 403 of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1726(b)) relating to the form and maturity of securities is hereby transferred to and shall become a part of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 as a new section 3(i) hereof to provide as follows:

"(i) No savings association shall issue securities which guarantee a definite maturity except with the specific approval of the System, or issue any securities the form of which has not been approved by the System.".

SEC. 303. APPLICABILITY.—The Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended, is further amended by adding new section 4 as follows:

"SEC. 4. APPLICABILITY.—(a) The following sections of this Act apply to all savings associations: sections 3, 5(d), 5(f), 5(i), 5(o), 5(p), 5(q), 5(s), 5(t), 5(u), 5(v), 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, and 12.

"(C) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, State or Federal, or the constitution of any State, or of this section, the System shall have power and jurisdiction to appoint the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation as sole conservator or receiver of an insured State savings association, in the event that the System determines that any of the following grounds for the appointment of a conservator or receiver exist with respect to such financial institution:

"(i) insolvency in that the assets of the financial institution are less than its obligations to its creditors and others,

"(ii) substantial dissipation of assets or earnings due to any violation or violations of law, rules, or regulations, or to any unsafe or unsound practice or practices, or

"(iii) an unsafe or unsound condition to transact business.

"(B) In such cases the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall have powers and duties specified in subsection (c) and in subsection (1) of section 11 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act.

"(C)(i) The authority conferred by this paragraph (2) shall not be exercised without the written approval of the State official having jurisdiction over the insured State financial institution that the grounds specified for such exercise exist.

"(ii) If such approval has not been received within 30 days of receipt of notice to the State that the System has determined such grounds exist, and the System has responded in writing to the State's written reasons, if any, for withholding approval, then the System may proceed without State approval."

(3) by deleting the words "Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation" from redesignated subparagraph (E) thereof and substituting the words "Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation"; and

(4) by deleting the last sentence of redesignated subparagraph (E) thereof.

SEC. 309. TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—Section 5(d)(11) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is redesignated as Section 5(d)(3).

SEC. 310. TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—Section 5(d)(12) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is redesignated as (5)(d)(4) and is further amended by redesignating existing paragraph (A) and (B) as (B) and (C) respectively.

SEC. 311. AMENDMENT TO SECTION.—Section 5(d)(14) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is redesignated as Section 5(d)(5) and is amended to read as follows:

"(3)(A) As used in this subsection, the term "savings association" includes any former savings association that retains deposits insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation notwithstanding termination of its status as an institution insured by such corporation and any Federal savings bank whose deposits are insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and any former Federal savings bank that retains deposits insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation notwithstanding termination of its status as an insured bank.

"(B) References in this subsection to savings account holders and to members of savings associations shall be deemed to be references to holders of withdrawable accounts in savings institutions over which the System has any statutory power of examination or supervision as provided in this paragraph, and references therein to boards of directors of savings associations shall be deemed to be references to boards of directors or other governing boards of such associations. The System shall have power by regulation to define, for the purpose of this paragraph, terms used or referred to in the preceding sentence and other terms used in this subsection.".

SEC. 312. TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—Section 5(d)(16) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 (12 U.S.C. 1464(d)(16) is redesignated as section 5(d)(6) (12 U.S.C. 1464(d)(6)).

SEC. 313. CONVERSIONS.—Section 5(i) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 (12 U.S.C. 1464(i)) is hereby amended by deleting paragraph (2) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(2)(A) No savings association may convert from the mutual to the stock form, or from the stock form to the mutual form, except in accordance with the rules and regulations of the System.

"(B) Any aggrieved person may obtain review of a final action of the Federal Home Loan Bank System which approves, with or without conditions, or disapproves a plan of conversion pursuant to this subsection only by complying with the provisions of subsection (d) of section 10 of this Act within the time limit and in the manner therein prescribed, which provisions shall apply in all respects as if such final action were an order the review of which is therein provided for, except that such time limit shall commence upon publication of notice of such final action in the FEDERAL REGISTER or upon the giving of such general notice of such final action as is required by or approved under regulations of the System, whichever is later.

"(C) Any Federal savings association may change its designation from a Federal savings and loan association to a Federal savings bank, or the reverse.".

SEC. 314. CAPITAL STANDARDS.—Section 5 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 as amended (12 U.S.C. 1464) is hereby further amended by adding the following new subsection (t) at the end thereof to read as follows:

"(t)(1) Not later than 90 days after enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989, the Chairman shall by regulation establish uniformly applicable capital standards for savings associations. Such standards shall be not less stringent than the capital standards applicable to national banks, provided that any deviation from such standards shall not result in materially lower capital standards than are applicable to national banks; Provided that the standard may include, as a component of capital, goodwill (limited to goodwill existing on the date of the enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989) to be amortized on a straight-line basis over a ten-year period or over such shorter period as may be determined by the Chairman with the concurrence of the Secretary of Treasury. For purposes of determining such capital adequacy, the savings association's entire investment in, and loans to, any subsidiary engaged in activities not permissible for a national bank shall be deducted from the capital of the savings association. In any event, any investments in, and loan to, a subsidiary engaged solely in mortgage banking activities shall not be deducted from the capital of the associations. The standards established under the subsection shall include all relevant substantive definitions established by the appropriate Federal banking agency for national banks. The Chairman shall prescribe a timetable for the implementation of these capital standards that requires their full implementation by no later than June 1, 1991.

"(2) Until June 1, 1991, the Chairman may restrict the asset growth of any savings association not in compliance with capital standards established pursuant to this subsection. After June 1, 1991, the Chairman shall prohibit the asset growth of any savings association or class of savings associations not in compliance with capital standards established pursuant to this subsection. The Chairman may restrict the asset growth of any savings association that the Chairman determines is taking excessive risks or is paying excessive rates for deposits."

"(3) For purposes of this subsection, the term "national bank" shall have the same meaning as it has in section 3(d) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813(d))."

SEC. 315. TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—Section 8 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 (12 U.S.C. 1466a), is hereby amended by replacing all references to "association" with "savings association", except with respect to references to "Federal savings and loan association", which shall be replaced with "Federal savings association."

SEC. 316. REPEAL.—Section 9 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 as amended (12 U.S.C. 1467) is repealed.

SEC. 317. Recovery Regulations Repealed.—(a) Section 10 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 (12 U.S.C. 1467a) is hereby repealed effective on the date of enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989, provided that associations that had entered into a plan approved by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board shall be grandfathered hereunder as long as the association adheres to the plan and continues to submit to the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank System regular and complete reports on the association's progress in meeting the association's goals under the plan.

(b) Section 416 of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1730i) is hereby repealed effective on the date of enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989, provided that insured institutions which had entered into a plan approved by the Federal Savings and Loan Corporation shall be grandfathered hereunder as long as the insured institution adheres to the plan and continues to submit to the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank System regular and complete reports on the insured institutions progress in meeting the insured institutions goals under the plan. For the purpose of this section, the term 'insured institution' shall have the same meaning as in 12 U.S.C. 1730a(a)(1)(A).

SEC. 318. COST OF EXAMINATION AND REPORTS.—A new Section 9 is added to the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 as amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 9. EXPENSES OF EXAMINATIONS OF SAVINGS ASSOCIATIONS OR AFFILIATES.—(a) The expense of examination of savings associations provided for by section 5 of this chapter shall be assessed by the Chairman upon savings associations in proportion to their assets or resources.

"(b) The expense of examinations of an affiliate of a savings association provided for by this Act may be assessed by the Chairman upon the affiliates examined in proportion to assets or resources held by the affiliates on the dates of such examination.

"(c) If any affiliate shall refuse to pay such expense, or other expense imposed pursuant to this section, or shall fail to do so within sixty days after the date of such assessment, then such expenses may be assessed against the affiliated savings association and when so assessed, shall be paid by such association; Provided however, That, if the affiliation is with two or more savings associations or affiliates, such expenses may be assessed against, and collected from, any or all of such savings associations in such proportions as the Chairman prescribe.

"(d) If any affiliate of a savings association shall refuse to permit an examiner to make an examination of the affiliate or shall refuse to give any information required in the course of any examination, the savings association with which it is affiliated shall be subject to a penalty of not more than $25,000 for each day that any such refusal shall continue. Notwithstanding the foregoing, for violations made with reckless disregard for the safety and soundness of the financial institution, the Corporation may, in its discretion, assess a penalty of not more than $1,000,000 per day for each day during which such violation continues. Such penalty may be assessed by the Chairman, and collected for the use of the System and deposited in the same manner as expenses of examinations.

"(e) The Funds derived from such assessments may be deposited by the Chairman as provided in sections 1439 and 1439a, as amended, of this title, or upon the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, in any Federal Reserve Bank or other Government depository under the same provisions as apply in section 192 of this title to the Comptroller of the Currency. The funds derived from such assessments shall not be construed to be Government or public funds or appropriated monies.

"(f) The Chairman, is authorized and empowered to prescribe regulations governing the computation and assessment of the expenses of examinations herein provided for and the collection of such assessments from the savings associations of affiliates examined.

"(g) In addition to the expense of examination to be assessed by the Chairman, as provided in this section, all savings associations exercising fiduciary powers and all savings associations or similar institutions in the District of Columbia exercising fiduciary powers, shall be assessed by the Chairman for the examination of their fiduciary activities a fee adequate to cover the expenses thereof, and which fee shall be treated, paid, and deposited in the same manner as an assessment for expenses of examination provided for in this section.

"(h) In addition to the expense of examinations to be assessed by the Chairman in accordance with paragraphs (a) and (b), savings associations or affiliates of savings associations examined more frequently than twice in one calendar year shall be assessed the expense of those additional examinations. Funds from such assessment shall be treated, paid, and deposited in the same manner as an assessment for expenses of examination provided for in this section.

"(i) All savings associations and affiliates shall provide the System with access to any information or report with respect to any examination made by any public regulatory authority and furnish any additional information with respect thereto as the System may require.".

SEC. 319. SAVINGS AND LOAN HOLDING COMPANIES.—Section 408 of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1730a) is hereby transferred to and shall become new section 10 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended, and is further amended as follows:

(1) by deleting the words "insured and institution", "insured institutions", and "institution" wherever they occur and inserting in lieu thereof "savings association", "savings associations" and "association", respectively;

(2) by deleting the word "Corporation" wherever it occurs and inserting in lieu thereof "System";

(3) by deleting all references to subsection (m) and section 1729(f) of this title wherever they occur and inserting in lieu thereof "section 1823(c) of this title" and "section 1823(k) of this title", respectively;

(4) by deleting subparagraph (a)(1)(A) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(A) "savings association" means a Federal savings and loan association or Federal savings bank, a building and loan, savings and loan or homestead association, a cooperative bank or a state savings bank that is a member of the Savings Association Insurance Fund, the deposits of which are insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and shall include a savings bank which is deemed by the System to be a savings association under subsection (m)";

(5) by deleting subparagraph (a)(1)(B) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(B) "uninsured institution" means any financial institution the deposits of which are not insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation;";

(6) by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (a)(1)(K) thereof; by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (a)(1)(L) thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon; and by adding a new subparagraph (a)(1)(M) to read as follows:

"(M) "System" means the Federal Home Loan Bank System and";

(7) by deleting subsections (d), (g), (m), (p), (t), by redesignating subsections (h), (i), (j), (k), (l), (n), (o), (q), (r) and (s) as paragraphs (g), (h), (i), (j), (k), (l), (m), (n), (o), (p) and (q), respectively, and by inserting the following new subsection (d) to read as follows:

"(d) TRANSACTIONS WITH AFFILIATES.—Transactions between any subsidiary savings associations of a savings and loan holding company and any affiliate (of such savings association subsidiary) shall be subject to the limitations and prohibitions specified in section 11 of this Act.";

(8) by deleting paragraph (e)(4) thereof and by redesignating paragraph (e)(5) as new paragraph (e)(4);

(9) by amending subsection (2)(i) by striking out "(A), except with the prior approval of the Board, to serve at the same time as a director, officer, or employee of an insured institution or another savings and loan holding company, not a subsidiary of such holding company, or (B)", and inserting a comma in lieu thereof;

(10) by deleting paragraph (4) of redesignated subsection (n) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(4) FAILURE TO ACHIEVE AND MAINTAIN QTL STATUS.—

"(A) A savings association that fails to achieve or maintain its status as a qualified thrift lender shall, within three years of the date on which the association loses its status as a qualified thrift lender, convert its charter to one or more bank charters, unless during the one year period following the date it loses its status as a qualified thrift lender, the association becomes a qualified thrift lender and does not thereafter lose its status as a qualified thrift lender.

"(B) Until such conversion is complete, such savings association shall not:

"(i) after three years from the date it loses its qualified thrift lender status, be eligible to obtain advances from any Federal Home Loan Bank and shall repay any outstanding advances promptly;

"(ii) expand its activities beyond those conducted on the date the savings association loses its status as a qualified thrift lender;

"(iii) open any additional branch offices; or

"(iv) after three years from the date it loses its qualified thrift lender status, engage directly or through a subsidiary in an activity unless such activity is permissible for either a bank or a state bank (other than a savings bank) located in the State in which the association is located.

"(C) Any company that controls a savings association identified in paragraph (A) shall, after three years following the date on which the savings association loses its status as a qualified thrift lender, be subject to all of the provisions of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, as amended, and other applicable statutes as if the company were a bank holding company and the savings association were a bank as those terms are defined in the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, as amended.

"(D) Any bank chartered as a result of the requirements of this section shall be obligated until December 31, 1993, to pay the assessments assessed on savings associations under the Federal Deposit Insurance Act. Such institution shall also be assessed the exit fee provided in section 5(d)(2) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act.

"(E) as used in this subsection, "bank" shall mean a national member bank or a State bank (other than a savings bank), as defined in section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act."

(11) By deleting paragraph (7) of redesignated subsection (n).

SEC. 320. TRANSACTIONS WITH AFFILIATES; LOANS TO INSIDERS.—The Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 as amended is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section 11:

"SECTION 11. TRANSACTIONS WITH AFFILIATES; LOANS AND EXTENSIONS OF CREDIT TO EXECUTIVE OFFICERS, DIRECTORS AND CONTROLLING PERSONS.—(a) Except to the extent that the System determines for reasons of safety and soundness that additional restrictions should apply the provisions of section 23A and section 23B of the Federal Reserve Act shall be applicable to every savings association in the same manner and to the same extent as if such savings association were a member bank as defined in that Act and for this purpose any company which would be an affiliate of a savings association for the purposes of section 23A and section 23B of the Federal Reserve Act if such savings association were a member bank as defined in that Act shall be deemed to be an affiliate of such savings association.

"(b) Except to the extent that the System determines for reasons of safety and soundness that additional restrictions should apply, the provisions of section 22(h) of the Federal Reserve Act relating to limits on loans and extensions of credit by a member bank to its executive officers or directors or to any person who directly or indirectly owns, controls, or has the power to vote more than 10 per centum of any class of voting securities of such member bank shall be applicable to every savings association in the same manner and to the same extent as if such savings association were a member bank as defined in that Act.

"(c) Violations of this section shall be enforced by the System in accordance with section 8 of this Federal Deposit Insurance Act.".

SEC. 321. ADVERTISING.—The Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended, is hereby amended by adding a new section 12 to read as follows:

SECTION 12. ADVERTISING.—No savings association shall carry on any sale, plan or practices, or any advertising, in violation of regulations promulgated by the System.".

TITLE IV—DISSOLUTION AND TRANSFER OF FUNCTIONS, PERSONNEL AND PROPERTY OF FEDERAL SAVINGS AND LOAN INSURANCE CORPORATION

SEC. 401. DISSOLUTION.—Sixty days after enactment of this Act, except as otherwise provided in it, the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, shall cease to exist and shall for all purposes be considered dissolved. Except as otherwise provided in this Act, after its enactment, all insurance and receivership functions previously performed by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation shall be performed as appropriate, by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation or the Resolution Trust Corporation. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall also have the power to take any action necessary on behalf of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation in connection with its dissolution in accordance with this Act.

SEC. 402. CONTINUATION OF RULES.—(a) All rules, regulations and orders of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, or the Federal Home Loan Bank Board as operating head thereof, in effect on the date of enactment of this Act and relating to (i) the provision, rates, cancellation, or payment of insurance of accounts, (ii) administration of the insurance fund, or (iii) conduct of conservatorships or receiverships, including the handling of claims against receiverships, shall remain effective and enforceable by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation or the Resolution Trust Corporation, as appropriate, unless otherwise determined by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation after consultation with the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank System.

(b) All other rules, regulations, and orders of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation shall remain effective and enforceable by the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank System.

(c) Within 60 days after enactment of this Act, the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank System and the Chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall identify the rules, regulations, and orders referred to in subsections (a) and (b) of this section in accordance with the allocation of authority between them under this Act and promptly publish notice thereof in the Federal Register.

(d) The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall have the power to promulgate and enforce rules, regulations, or orders to prevent actions or practices of savings associations that pose a serious threat to the Savings Association Insurance Fund or the Bank Insurance Fund.

SEC. 403. PERSONNEL.—(a) The Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank System, jointly with the Chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, shall identify those employees of the Board and the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation who, on the date of enactment of this Act, were engaged in functions or activities (hereinafter, "functions") related primarily to the functions which are transferred from the Board and/or Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. The employees so identified shall be entitled to the following rights:

(1) Each employee identified in a transferred function shall be transferred to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation for employment and shall be guaranteed a position. All Board and Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation employees electing to transfer with their function shall be transferred to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation no later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act. For purposes of determining assignment rights, any transfer from the Board and/or Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall be deemed to be a transfer of function as defined by the regulations promulgated by the Office of Personnel Management pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 3503 and transferring employees shall be entitled to all rights and benefits under the regulations promulgated by the Office of Personnel Management pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 3502. All Board and Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation employees who agree to transfer with their functions shall be placed in a competitive area of their own at Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation separate and apart from the competitive areas in existence at Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation for purposes of placement under this section. In placing transferring employees under 5 CFR 351 procedures, Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation may provide for the assignment of a transferred employee in an excepted service position to a position in the competitive service. In addition Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation may elect to bring into the competitive service any or all excepted service positions tranferred from the Board or Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation. Transferring employees who are in the excepted service and are placed by Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation in a competitive service position will have their appointments converted to career or career conditional in accordance with 5 CFR 315.701. Transferring employees shall receive notice of their assignment rights pursuant to 5 CFR 351 and this section no later than 90 days after the effective date of their transfer to Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. Transferring employees shall be entitled to pay and grade retention in accordance with the principles reflected in the regulations promulgated by the Office of Personnel Management pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 5361-66.

(2) Any employee who declines to transfer with his or her function to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall be entitled to severance pay in accordance with the regulations promulgated by the Office of Personnel Management pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 5595 and shall be entitled to placement assistance under the Office of Personnel Management's Displaced Employee Program as defined at 5 CFR 330, Subpart C. Notwithstanding the foregoing, severance pay shall in no event be less than 90 days pay. All such severance pay shall be paid by the Federal Home Loan Bank System. Each employee in an excepted service position who declines to transfer shall be entitled to placement assistance under the Office of Personnel Management's Interagency Placement Assistance Program for a period of 120 days after receipt of their termination notice.

(3) A transferred Board or Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation employee who declines an offer of employment by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation which is not considered a reasonable offer under regulations promulgated by the Office of Personnel Management pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 8336(d)(1) shall be entitled to the benefits specified in paragraph 2 of this subsection for employees declining to transfer and any such employee who is otherwise eligible shall be entitled to early optional retirement under 5 U.S.C. 8336(d)(2). Within one year after the transfer of functions to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is completed, should Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation determine that a reorganization of the combined workforce is required, that reorganization shall be deemed a "major reorganization" for purposes of affording employees early optional retirement under 5 U.S.C. 8336(d)(2).

(4) Any employee accepting employment with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation as a result of this transfer may retain any benefit of or continue membership in any employee benefit program of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, including insurance, to which he or she belongs on the date of enactment of this Act, provided the employee does not elect to give up the benefit or membership in the program and further provided the benefit or program is continued by the Federal Home Bank System. The difference in the costs between the benefits which would have been provided by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and those provided by this section shall be paid by the Federal Home Loan Bank System.

SEC. 404. DIVISION OF PROPERTY AND PERSONNNEL.—Within 60 days after enactment of this Act, the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank System, jointly with the Chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, shall divide between the Federal Home Loan Bank System and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation in accordance with the division of responsibilities effected by this Act, all personnel and all property of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation previously employed to perform its functions and those of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. Any disagreement between them in so doing shall be resolved by the Director of the Office of Management and Budget.

SEC. 405. REPEALS.—Except as otherwise provided in this Act, sections 401, 402, 403, 404, 405, 406, 407, 411, 415, and 416 of the National Housing Act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 406. REPORT.—Immediately prior to its dissolution, the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation shall provide by written report to the Secretary of the Treasury, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget and to the Congress, a final accounting of its finances and operations, and shall thereafter cease operations.

TITLE V—FINANCING FOR THRIFT RESOLUTIONS

Subtitle A—Resolution Trust Corporation

SEC. 501. RESOLUTION TRUST CORPORATION ESTABLISHED.—

The Federal Home Loan Bank Act (12 U.S.C. 144 et seq.) is hereby amended by inserting after section 21 the following new section:

"SECTION 21a. RESOLUTION TRUST CORPORATION ESTABLISHED.—ESTABLISHMENT.—(a) There is hereby established the Resolution Trust Corporation (hereinafter in this section also referred to as the Corporation) with the powers, authorities and purposes herein provided. The Oversight Board and the Corporation shall not be an "agency" or "executive agency" for purposes of title 5, United States Code.

(b) PURPOSES.—(1) The purpose of the Corporation shall be to carry out a program, under the direction of the Oversight Board, to manage and resolve all cases involving institutions, the accounts of which were insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, prior to enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989, for which a receiver or liquidating conservator has been appointed or is appointed within the three-year period following the date of the enactment of that Act; to manage the assets of the Federal Asset Disposition Association; and to perform such other functions as authorized under this Act. In its resolution activities, the Resolution Trust Corporation is authorized to take warrants, voting and nonvoting equity, or other participation interests in resolved institutions or assets or properties acquired in connection with resolution.

"(2) In carrying out its obligations, the Corporation shall possess all of the rights and powers provided in Sections 11, 12 or 13 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, or otherwise granted herein; provided that it shall not have the power to obligate the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation or its funds (except as otherwise specifically provided); and in connection with providing assistance to or liquidating or otherwise resolving an institution as provided above, it shall consider and be subject to the limitations set forth in Section 13(c)(4) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act.

"(c) OVERSIGHT BOARD.—

"(1) MEMBERSHIP.—The Oversight Board of the Resolution Trust Corporation, which shall serve as the board of directors thereof, shall consist of three members: the Secretary of the Treasury, the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, and the Attorney General of the United States, or their respective designees.

"(2) CHAIRMAN.—The Chairman of the Oversight Board shall be the Secretary of the Treasury.

"(3) TERMS OF OFFICE, SUCCESSION, DELEGATION, VACANCIES.—The term of each member of the Oversight Board shall expire when the Resolution Trust Corporation is terminated. Vacancies on the Oversight Board shall be filed in the same manner as the vacant position was previously filled.

"(4) COMPENSATION.—Members of the Oversight Board shall receive reasonable allowances for necessary expenses of travel, lodging, and subsistence incurred in attending meetings and other activities of the Oversight Board, as set forth in the bylaws issued by the Oversight Board, except that such level shall not exceed the maximum fixed by subchapter 1 of chapter 57 of title 5, United States Code, for officers and employees of the United States.

"(5) DUTIES.—The Oversight Board shall review and have overall responsibility over the work, progress, management and activities of the Resolution Trust Corproation and may disapprove, in its discretion, any and all regulations, policies, procedures, guidelines, statements, contracts, and other actions of the Resolution Trust Corporation and shall approve or disapprove, in its discretion, any and all agreements for the purchase of assets and assumption of liabilities, any and all agreements for the acquisition, consolidation or merger, or any other transaction proposed by the Resolution Trust Corporation by which any person or entity will acquire an institution subject to the provisions of this title.

"(6) QUORUM REQUIRED.—A quorum shall consist of two members of the Oversight Board and all decisions of the Board shall require an affirmative vote of at least a majority of the members voting.

"(7) The Oversight Board is authorized to employ such staff as it deems necessary and appropriate to fulfill its obligations under this Act, which shall be subject to the terms and conditions of employment applicable to the Resolution Trust Corporation, provided however that the Oversight Board as it considers necessary shall utilize the personnel of the agencies of the three members of the Oversight Board, without additional compensation to carry out the Oversight Board's staff functions.

"(8) RULES AND RECORDS.—The Oversight Board shall adopt such rules as it may deem appropriate for the transaction of its business and the accomplishment of its duties hereunder, and shall keep permanent and accurate records of its acts and proceedings.

"(d) CHIEF EXECUTIVE OFFICER.—A chief executive officer of the Resolution Trust Corporation shall be selected by the Oversight Board and shall serve at the pleasure of the Board.

"(e) CORPORATE POWERS.—The Resolution Trust Corporation shall be a body corporate that shall have the power to—

"(1) operate under the direction of the Oversight Board;

"(2) adopt, alter, and use a corporate seal, which shall be judicially noted;

"(3) issue capital certificates as provided in this Act;

"(4) provide for one or more vice presidents, a secretary, a treasurer and such other officers, employees, and agents, as may be necessary, define their duties, and require surety bonds or make other provisions against losses occasioned by acts of such persons;

"(5) subject to the approval of the Oversight Board, hire, promote, compensate, and discharge officers and employees of the Resolution Trust Corporation, without regard to title 5, United States Code, provided that compensation and benefits of such employees shall be consistent with those of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation;

"(6) prescribe by the Oversight Board its bylaws that shall be consistent with law and that shall provide for the manner in which—

"(A) its officers, employees, and agents are selected;

"(B) its property is acquired, held and transferred;

"(C) its general operations are to be conducted; and

"(D) the privileges granted by law are exercised and enjoyed.

"(7) with the consent of any executive department or agency, use the information, services, staff, and facilities of such in carrying out this title;

"(8) enter into contracts and make advance, progress, or other payments with respect to such contracts;

"(9) acquire, hold, lease, mortgage, or dispose of, at public or private sale, real and personal property, and otherwise exercise all the usual incidents of ownership of property necessary and convenient to its operations;

"(10) obtain insurance against loss;

"(11) modify or consent to the modification of any contract or agreement to which it is a party or in which it has an interest under this title;

"(12) deposit its securities and its current funds under the terms and conditions applicable to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation under section 13(b) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act and pay fees therefor and receive interest thereon as may be agreed; and

"(13) exercise such other powers as set forth in this title, and such incidental powers as are necessary to carry out its powers, duties and functions in accordance with this title.

"(f) SPECIAL POWERS.—

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Resolution Trust Corporation is authorized—

"(1) to enter into contracts with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and with such other persons or entities, public and private, as it deems advisable and necessary in order to manage the institutions for which it is responsible and their assets; provided, however, that the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall be the primary manager of the Resolution Trust Corporation, in accordance with an agreement between the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the Oversight Board, except in such case where the Oversight Board shall specifically contract with another person or entity on a case by case basis; provided further that all contracts with persons or entities other than the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation must be subject to a competitive bid process;

"(2) to set the policy on credit standards to be used by the institution for which it is responsible;

"(3) to require a merger or consolidation of an institution for which it is responsible;

"(4) to organize one or more Federal mutual savings associations, which shall be chartered by the Federal Home Loan Bank System and the deposits of which shall be insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation through the Savings Association Insurance Fund;

"(5) to review and analyze all insolvent institution cases resolved by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation since January 1, 1988, through the date of enactment of this Act, and to actively review all means by which it can reduce costs under existing Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation agreements, including through the exercise of rights to restructure such agreements, subject only to the monitoring of the Oversight Board. The Corporation shall report to the Oversight Board the results and conclusions of its examination, and thereafter the Corporation, as permitted by the terms of any resolution agreement and upon the express concurrence of the Oversight Board, shall restructure such agreements where savings would be realized therefrom, the costs of which restructuring shall be a liability of the Corporation;

"(6) to exercise all resolution powers and activities authorized to be exercised by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation under the Federal Deposit Insurance Act and the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation under title IV of the National Housing Act including but not limited to the powers and authorities with respect to receiverships or conservatorships, to engage in assistance transactions, to collect indebtedness, to enforce liabilities and obligations, and to exercise the incidental powers and authorities provided the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation all of which may be performed and exercised by the Corporation under this section as may be necessary to fulfill its obligations and duties under this Act; and

"(7) to take such other incidental powers as the Resolution Trust Corporation determines as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this title.

"(g) INSTITUTIONS MANAGED BY THE CORPORATION.—

"(1) All insured savings associations organized by the Corporation under this section shall be subject to such limitations, restrictions, and conditions as determined by the Corporation with respect to the following activities:

"(A) growth of assets;

"(B) lending activities;

"(C) asset acquisitions (except as necessary to serve its existing customer base with residential mortgages or consumer loans;

"(D) use of brokered deposits; and

"(E) payment of deposit rates.

"(2) All insured savings associations organized by the Corporation under this section shall be subject to all laws, rules, and regulations otherwise applicable to them as insured savings associations.

"(3) Any insured savings association organized by the Corporation under this section that holds deposits insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall continue to be subject to supervision by the Federal Home Loan Bank System and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation as othewise provided by law.

"(h) FADA.—The Corporation shall convert the Financial Asset Disposition Association to a corporation or other business entity and sell such other corporate entity or business entity, or wind down such Association or dissolve it no later than 180 days after the enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989; provided that in connection with any such sale, no contract rights to manage savings association resolution shall be transferred.

"(i) CAPITAL CERTIFICATES.—The Resolution Trust Corporation shall be authorized to issue capital certificates to the Resolution Funding Corporation consistent with the provisions of section 21b of this Act.

(i) IN AUTHORIZATION TO ISSUE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Resolution Trust Corporation is hereby authorized to issue to the Resolution Funding Corporation nonvoting capital certificates.

"(2) REQUIREMENT RELATING TO THE AMOUNT OF CERTIFICATES.—The amount of certificates issued by the Resolution Trust Corporation under paragraph (A) shall be equal to the aggregate amount of funds provided by the Resolution Funding Corporation to the Resolution Trust Corporation under section 21b of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act.

"(3) CERTIFICATES MAY BE ISSUED ONLY TO THE RESOLUTION FUNDING CORPORATION.—Capital certificates issued under subparagraph (A) may be issued only to the Resolution Funding Corporation in the manner and to the extent provided in section 21 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act and this subsection.

"(4) NO DIVIDENDS.—The Resolution Trust Corporation shall pay no dividends on any capital certificates issued under this paragraph.

"(j) EXEMPTION FROM TAXATION.—The Resolution Trust Corporation, the capital, reserves, and surplus thereof, and the income derived therefrom, shall be exempt from Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation except taxes on real estate held by the Resolution Trust Corporation, according to its value as other similar property held by other persons is taxed.

"(k) TERMINATION.—

"(1) RESOLUTION TRUST CORPORATION.—The Resolution Trust Corporation shall terminate five years after the date of enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989.

"(2) CASE RESOLUTIONS.—Simultaneously with the termination of the Resolution Trust Corporation as provided in subsection (1), all assets and liabilities of the Corporation would be transferred to the FSLIC Resolution Fund to be managed by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation with the proceeds of the net assets being provided to the Resolution Funding Corporation."

"(l) POWER TO REMOVE: JURISDICTION.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any civil action, suit or proceeding to which the Corporation is a party shall be deemed to arise under the laws of the United States, and the United States District Courts shall have original jurisdiction over such. The Resolution Trust Corporation may, without bond or security, remove any such action, suit, or proceeding from a State court to the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, or if the action, suit or proceeding arises out of the actions of the Corporation with respect to an institution for which a receiver or liquidating conservator has been appointed, the United States District Court for the district where the institution is located.

"(m) GUARANTEES OF FSLIC.—(1) Guarantee issued by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation after January 1, 1989, and before the date of enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989, made in connection with loans made to savings associations extended by the Federal Reserve Banks and Federal Home Loan Banks (the "Lenders") and guaranteed by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation during such period, shall be operation of law and without further action by the Federal Home Loan Bank System, the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, or any court, become and be converted into obligations, entitlements, and instruments of the Corporation.

(2) Obligations under the guarantees to the Lenders, assumed by the Corporation under (1) above, shall be paid by the Corporation one year after the date of enactment of this title, to the extent that the loans referred to in (1) above have not previously been paid, using any funds or other assets available to the Corporation; and, in any event, the Corporation shall draw upon the resources available to it through borrowing by Resolution Funding Corporation.

"(n) ISSUE REGULATIONS.—The Corporation may issue such regulations, policies, procedures, guidelines or statements as that Corporation considers necessary or appropriate to carry out this title, all of which shall be promulgated and enforced without regard to subchapter II of chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code.

"(o) BORROWING.—The Corporation is authorized to borrow from the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Treasury authorized and directed to loan to the Corporation on such terms as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury not exceeding in the aggregate $5,000,000,000 outstanding at any one time. Provided, That each such loan shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average rate on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States as of the last day of the month preceding the making of such loan: For purposes of this subsection, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds of the sale of any securities hereafter issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as now or hereafter in force, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as now or hereafter in force, are hereby extended to include such loans.

Subtitle B—Resolution Funding Corporation

SEC. 502. RESOLUTION FUNDING CORPORATION ESTABLISHED.—The Federal Home Loan Bank Act (12 U.S.C. 1421 et seq.) is hereby amended by inserting after new section 21a the following new section:

"SECTION 21b. RESOLUTION FUNDING CORPORATION ESTABLISHED.—(a) PURPOSE. The purpose of the Resolution Funding Corporation is to provide funds to the Resolution Trust Corporation in order for that corporation to carry out its purposes under this Act.

"(b) ESTABLISHMENT.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law and not later than five days after the enactment of this title, the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank System shall be authorized to and shall charter a corporation to be known as the Resolution Funding Corporation (hereinafter referred to in this Act as the 'Funding Corporation').

"(c) MANAGEMENT OF THE FUNDING CORPORATION.—

"(1) DIRECTORATE.—The Funding Corporation shall be under the management of a directorate composed of three members as follows:.

"(A) The director of the Office of Finance of the Federal Home Loan Banks (or the head of any successor office to such office); and

"(B) Two members selected by the Oversight Board from among the presidents of the Federal Home Loan Banks.

"(2) TERMS.—Of the two members appointed under (1)(b) with respect to initial terms, one shall be appointed for a term of two years and one shall be appointed for a term of three years, and thereafter, each member appointed under paragraph (1)(b) shall be appointed for a term of three years.

"(3) VACANCY.—If any member leaves the office in which such member was serving when appointed to the Directorate—

"(A) such member's service on the Directorate shall terminate on the date such member leaves such office; and

"(B) the successor to the office of such member shall serve the remainder of such member's term.

"(4) EQUAL REPRESENTATION OF BANKS.—No president of a Federal Home Loan Bank may be appointed to serve an additional term on the Directorate until such time as the presidents of each of the other Federal Home Loan Banks have served as many terms on the Directorate as the president of such bank (before the appointment of such president to such additional term).

"(5) CHAIRPERSON.—The Oversight Board shall select the chairperson of the Directorate from among the three members of the Directorate.

"(6) STAFF.—

"(A) NO PAID EMPLOYEES.—The Funding Corporation shall have no paid employees.

"(B) POWERS.—The Directorate may, with the approval of the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank System, authorize the officers, employees, or agents of the Federal Home Loan Banks to act for and on behalf of the Funding Corporation in such manner as may be necessary to carry out the functions of the Funding Corporation.

"(7) Administrative expenses, insurance costs and custodian fees.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—All administrative expenses issuance costs (as defined in subsection (k)(4)) and custodian Fees (as defined in subsection (k)(5)) of the Funding Corporation shall be paid by the Federal Home Loan Banks.

"(B) PRO RATA DISTRIBUTION.—The amount each Federal Home Loan Bank shall pay shall be determined by the Oversight Board by multiplying the total administrative expenses, issuance costs and custodian fees for any period by the percentage arrived at by dividing—

"(i) the aggregate amount the Oversight Board required such bank to invest in the Funding Corporation (as of the time of such determination) under paragraphs (4) and (5) of subsection (e) (as computed without regard to paragraphs (3) or (6) of such subsection); by

"(ii) the aggregate amount the Oversight Board required all Federal Home Loan Banks to invest (as of the time of such determination) under such paragraphs.

"(C) ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES DEFINED.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'administrative expenses' does not include any interest on (and any redemption premium with respect to) any obligation of the Funding Corporation.

"(8) REGULATION BY OVERSIGHT BOARD.—The Directorate of the Funding Corporation shall be subject to such regulations, orders, and directions as the Oversight Board may prescribe.

"(9) NO COMPENSATION FROM FUNDING CORPORATION.—Members of the Directorate of the Funding Corporation shall receive no pay, allowances, or benefits from the Funding Corporation by reason of their service on the Directorate.

"(d) POWERS OF THE FUNDING CORPORATION.—The Funding Corporation shall have only the following powers, subject to the other provisions of this section and such regulations, orders, and directions as the Oversight Board may prescribe:

"(1) To issue nonvoting capital stock to the Federal Home Loan Banks;

"(2) To purchase capital certificates issued by the Resolution Trust Corporation under section 21a of this Act;

"(3) To issue debentures, bonds, or other obligations and to borrow, to give security for any amount borrowed, and to pay interest on (and any redemption premium with respect to) any such obligation or amount;

"(4) To impose assessments in accordance with subsection (e)(7);

"(5) To adopt, alter, and use a corporate seal;

"(6) To have succession until dissolved;

"(7) To enter into contracts;

"(8) To sue and be sued in its corporate capacity, and to complain and defend in any action brought by or against the Funding Corporation in any State or Federal court of competent jurisdiction; and

"(9) To exercise such incidental powers not inconsistent with the provisions of this section or section 21a(i) of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act as are necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this section.

"(e) CAPITALIZATION OF THE FUNDING CORPORATION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Purchase of capital stock by Federal Home Loan Banks. Each Federal Home Loan Bank shall invest in nonvoting capital stock of the Funding Corporation at such times and in such amounts as the Oversight Board may prescribe under this subsection.

"(2) PAR VALUE; TRANSFERABILITY.—Each share of stock issued by the Funding Corporation to a Federal Home Loan Bank shall have a par value in an amount determined by the Oversight Board and shall be transferable only among the Federal Home Loan Banks in the manner and to the extent prescribed by the Oversight Board at not less than par value.

"(3) MAXIMUM INVESTMENT AMOUNT LIMITATION FOR EACH FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANK.—The cumulative amount of funds invested in nonvoting capital stock of the Funding Corporation by each Federal Home Loan Bank shall not exceed the aggregate amount of—

"(A) the sum of—

"(i) the reserves maintained by such bank on December 31, 1988, pursuant to the requirement contained in the first two sentences of section 16 of this Act (12 U.S.C. 1436); and

"(ii) the undivided profits (as defined in paragraph (8) hereof) of such bank on such date; minus

"(iii) the amounts used to invest in the capital stock of the Financing Corporation pursuant to the requirement contained in section 21 of this Act (12 U.S.C. 1441); and

"(B) for the period December 31, 1988 through December 31, 1991, or such later date as necessary to fund the funding Corporation Principal Fund pursuant to this Act, the sum of—

"(i) the amounts added to reserves after December 31, 1988, pursuant to the requirement contained in the first two sentences of section 16 of this Act (12 U.S.C. 1436); and

"(ii) the undivided profits of such bank accruing after December 31, 1988; minus

"(iii) the amounts required to be used to invest in the capital stock of the Financing Corporation pursuant to the requirement contained in section 21 of this Act (12 U.S.C. 1441) after December 31, 1988.

"(4) PRO RATA DISTRIBUTION OF FIRST $1,000,000,000 INVESTED IN THE FUNDING CORPORATION BY THE FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANKS.—With respect to the first $1,000,000,000 which the Oversight Board may require the Federal Home Loan Banks to invest in capital stock of the Funding Corporation under this subsection, the amount which each Federal Home Loan Bank (or any successor to such bank) shall invest shall be determined by the Oversight Board by applying to the total amount of such investment by all such banks the percentage appearing in the following table for each such bank:

"Bank	Percentage
Federal Home Loan Bank of Boston	1.8629
Federal Home Loan Bank of New York	9.1006
Federal Home Loan Bank of Pittsburgh	4.2702
Federal Home Loan Bank of Atlanta	14.4007
Federal Home Loan Bank of Cincinnati	8.2653
Federal Home Loan Bank of Indianapolis	5.2863
Federal Home Loan Bank of Chicago	9.6886
Federal Home Loan Bank of Des Moines	6.9301
Federal Home Loan Bank of Dallas	8.8181
Federal Home Loan Bank of Topeka	5.2706
Federal Home Loan Bank of San Francisco	19.9644
Federal Home Loan Bank of Seattle	6.1422

"(5) PRO RATA DISTRIBUTION OF AMOUNTS REQUIRED TO BE INVESTED IN EXCESS OF $1,000,000,000.—With respect to any amount in excess of $1,000,000,000 which the Oversight Board may require the Federal Home Loan Banks to invest in capital stock of the Funding Corporation under this subsection, the amount which each Federal Home Loan Bank (or any successor to such bank) shall invest shall be determined by the Oversight Board by multiplying such excess amount by the percentage arrived at by dividing—

"(A) the sum of the total assets (as of the most recent December 31) held by all insured savings associations which are members of such bank; by

"(B) the sum of the total assets (as of such date) held by all insured savings associations which are members of any Federal Home Loan Bank.

"(6) SPECIAL PROVISIONS RELATING TO MAXIMUM AMOUNT LIMITATIONS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—If the amount any Federal Home Loan Bank is required to invest in capital stock of the Funding Corporation pursuant to a determination by the Oversight Board under paragraph (5) (or under subparagraph (B) of this paragraph) exceeds the maximum investment amount applicable with respect to such bank under paragraph (3) at the time of such determination (hereinafter in this paragraph referred to as the 'excess amount')—

"(i) the Oversight Board shall require each remaining Federal Home Loan Bank to invest (in addition to the amount determined under paragraph (5) for such remaining bank and subject to the maximum investment amount applicable with respect to such remaining bank under paragraph (3) at the time of such determination) in such capital stock on behalf of the bank in the amount determined under subparagraph (B);

"(ii) the Oversight Board shall require the bank to subsequently purchase the excess amount of capital stock from the remaining banks in the manner described in subparagraph (C); and

"(iii) the requirements contained in subparagraphs (D) and (E) relating to the use of net earnings available for dividends shall apply to such bank until the bank has purchased all of the excess amount of capital stock.

"(B) ALLOCATION OF EXCESS AMOUNT AMONG REMAINING HOME LOAN BANKS.—The amount each remaining Federal Home Loan Bank shall be required to invest under subparagraph (A)(i) is the amount determined by the Oversight Board by multiplying the excess amount by the percentage arrived at by dividing—

"(i) the amount of capital stock of the Funding Corporation held by such remaining bank at the time of such determination; by

"(ii) the aggregate amount of such stock held by all remaining banks at such time.

"(C) PURCHASE PROCEDURE.—The bank on whose behalf an investment in capital stock is made under subparagraph (A)(i) shall purchase, annually and at such issuance price, from each remaining bank an amount of such stock determined by the Oversight Board by multiplying the amount available for such purchases (at the time of such determination) by the percentage determined under subparagraph (B) with respect to such remaining bank until the aggregate amount of such capital stock has been purchased by the bank.

"(D) LIMITATION ON DIVIDENDS.—The amount of dividends which may be paid for any year by a bank on whose behalf an investment is made under subparagraph (A)(i) shall not exceed an amount equal to ¼ of the net earnings available for dividends of the bank for the year.

"(E) TRANSFER TO ACCOUNT FOR THE PURCHASE OF STOCK REQUIRED.—Of the net earnings available for dividends for any year of a bank on whose behalf an investment is made under subparagraph (A)(i), such amount as is necessary to make the purchases of stock required under subparagraph (A)(ii) shall be placed in a reserve account (established in such manner as the Oversight Board shall prescribe by regulations) the balance in which shall be available only for such purchases.

"(F) NET EARNINGS AVAILABLE FOR DIVIDENDS DEFINED.—For purposes of this paragraph the term 'net earnings available for dividends' means the net earnings of a bank for any period as computed after reducing the amount of earnings for such period by the amount required to be carried (for such period) to reserves maintained by such bank pursuant to the first two sentences of section 16 of this Act (U.S.C. 1436).

"(7) ADDITIONAL SOURCES.—In the event that each Federal Home Loan Bank has exhausted the investment amount applicable with respect to such bank under paragraph (3) with respect to investments under paragraphs (4), (5), and (6), then the amounts necessary to provide additional funding for the Funding Corporation Principal Fund shall be obained as follows:

"(A) First, the Funding Corporation, with the approval of the Board of Directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, shall assess each insured savings association an assessment as if such assessment was assessed by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation with respect to Savings Association Insurance Fund members pursuant to section 7 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, as amended; provided that the maximum amount of the aggregate amount assessed shall be the amount of additional funds necessary to fund the Funding Corporation Principal Fund; provided that the amount assessed hereunder and the amount assessed by the Financing Corporation under section 21 of this Act shall not exceed the amount authorized to be assessed pursuant to section 7 noted above and that the Financing Corporation shall have first priority to make such assessments; all such amounts shall be subtracted from the amounts authorized to be assessed by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation pursuant to section 7 noted above.

"(B) To the extent funds available pursuant to paragraph (A) are insufficient to capitalize the Funding Corporation so as to provide funds for the Funding Corporation Principal Fund, then the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall transfer to the Funding Corporation from the proceeds of the FSLIC Resolution Fund the remaining amount of funds necessary for such purpose.

"(8) UNDIVIDED PROFITS DEFINED.—For purposes of paragraph (3), the term 'undivided profits' means retained earnings minus the sum of—

"(A) that portion required to be added to reserves maintained pursuant to the first two sentences of section 16 of this Act (12 U.S.C. 1436); and

"(B) the dollar amounts held by the respective Federal Home Loan Banks in special dividend stabilization reserves on December 31, 1985, as determined by the table set forth in section 21(d)(7) of this Act (12 U.S.C. 1441(d)(7)).

"(9) AGGREGATE ANNUAL FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANKS CONTRIBUTION.—Notwithstanding any other provision in sections 21, 21a and 21b of this Act, the aggregate annual amount contributed by the Federal Home Loan Banks under subsections (e)(3)(B) and (f)(2)(B) of this section (for the period from the date of enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989, until such time as the Funding Corporation has no more liabilities) for Funding Corporation principal and interest payments and Financing Corporation principal payments under section 21 of this Act shall be $300,000,000; provided, however, that such aggregate annual amount shall be such lesser number equal to all the amounts needed for the purposes above if such total amounts shall be less than $300,000,000.

"(f) OBLIGATIONS OF THE FUNDING CORPORATION.—

"(1) ISSUANCE.—The Funding Corporation, subject to the direction of the Resolution Trust Corporation, may issue bonds, notes, debentures, and similar obligations, in an aggregate amount not to exceed $50,000,000,000.

"(2) INTEREST PAYMENTS.—The Funding Corporation shall pay the interest due on (and any redemption premium with respect to) such obligations from funds obtained for such interest payments from the following sources.

"(A) The Resolution Trust Corporation shall pay to the Funding Corporation the net proceeds received by the Resolution Trust Corporation from the liquidation of institutions under its management pursuant to section 21a of this Act to the extent they are determined by the Oversight Board to be in excess of funds necessary for resolution costs in the near future and any proceeds from warrants and participations of the Resolution Trust Corporation; and

"(B) To the extent the funds available pursuant to clause (A) are insufficient to cover the amount of interest payments, then the Federal Home Loan Banks shall pay to the Funding Corporation the aggregate annual amount of $300,000,000 minus the amounts needed by the Financing Corporation pursuant to section 21 of this Act and for the purchase of Funding Corporation capital certificates, with each bank's individual share to be determined pursuant the formulation and limitations of paragraphs (3) through (6) of subsection (e);

"(C) The proceeds of all net assets of the Resolution Trust Corporation, upon its dissolution, which shall be transferred to the Funding Corporation; and

"(D) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, to the extent that the Directorate determines after consultation with and approval of the Secretary of the Treasury that the Funding Corporation is unable to pay the interest on any obligation issued under this subsection from the sources of funds under (A), (B), and (C), the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to the Funding Corporation the additional amount due which shall be used by the Funding Corporation to pay such interest. In each such instance where the Secretary of the Treasury is required to make a payment under this paragraph to the Funding Corporation, the amount of the payment shall become a liability of the Funding Corporation to be repaid to the Secretary of the Treasury upon dissolution of the Funding Corporation to the extent that the Funding Corporation may have any remaining assets. There is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of the Treasury, for fiscal year 1989 and each fiscal year thereafter, such sums as may be necessary to carry out this paragraph.

"(3) PRINCIPAL PAYMENTS.—On maturity of an obligation issued under this subsection, the obligation shall be repaid by the Funding Corporation from the liquidation of noninterest bearing instruments held in the Funding Corporation Principal Fund established by subsection (g)(2). The Funding Corporation shall obtain funds for such Principal Fund from the funds obtained pursuant to subsection (e) of this section, all of which such funds shall be invested in noninterest bearing instruments described in subsection (g)(1).

"(4) PROCEEDS TO BE INVESTED IN CAPITAL CERTIFICATES OF THE RESOLUTION TRUST CORPORATION.—Subject to such terms and conditions as may be approved by the Oversight Board, the proceeds of any obligation issued by the Funding Corporation shall be used to—

"(A) purchase the capital certificates issued by the Resolution Trust Corporation under section 21a of this Act; or

"(B) refund any previously issued obligation the net proceeds of which were invested in the manner described in subparagraph (A).

"(5) INVESTMENT OF UNITED STATES FUNDS IN OBLIGATIONS.—Obligations issued under this section by the Funding Corporation, with the approval of the Oversight Board shall be lawful investments, and may be accepted as security, for all fiduciary, trust, and public funds the investment or deposit of which shall be under the authority or control of the United States or any officer of the United States.

"(6) MARKET FOR OBLIGATIONS.—All persons having the power to invest in, sell, underwrite, purchase for their own accounts, accept as security, or otherwise deal in obligations of the Federal Home Loan Banks shall also have the power to do so with respect to obligations of the Funding Corporation.

"(7) TAX EXEMPT STATUS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), obligations of the Funding Corporation shall be exempt from tax both as to principal and interest to the same extent as any obligation of a Federal Home Loan Bank is exempt from tax under section 13 of this Act (12 U.S.C. 1433).

"(B) EXCEPTION.—The Funding Corporation, like the Federal Home Loan Banks, shall be treated as an agency of the United States for purposes of the first sentence of section 3124(b) of title 31, United States Code (relating to determination of tax status of interest on obligations).

"(8) OBLIGATIONS ARE EXEMPT SECURITIES.—Notwithstanding paragraph (10) below, obligations of the Funding Corporation shall be deemed to be exempt securities (within the meaning of the laws administered by the Securities and Exchange Commission) to the same extent as securities which are direct obligations of the United States or are guaranteed as to principal or interest by the United States.

"(9) MINORITY PARTICIPATION IN PUBLIC OFFERINGS.—The Oversight Board and the Directorate shall ensure that minority owned or controlled commercial banks, investment banking firms, underwriters, and bond counsels throughout the United States have an opportunity to participate to a significant degree in any public offering of obligations issued under this section.

"(10) NO FULL FAITH AND CREDIT OF THE UNITED STATES.—Obligations of the Funding Corporation shall not be obligations of, or guaranteed as to principal by, the Federal Home Loan Bank System, the Federal Home Loan Banks, the United States, or the Resolution Trust Corporation and the obligations shall so plainly state. The Secretary of the Treasury shall pay interest on such obligations as required pursuant to subsection (f).

"(g) USE AND DISPOSITION OF ASSETS OF THE FUNDING CORPORATION NOT INVESTED IN RESOLUTION TRUST CORPORATION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to such regulations, restrictions, and limitations as may be prescribed by the Oversight Board, assets of the Funding Corporation, which are not invested in capital certificates issued by the Resolution Trust Corporation under section 21a of this Act and which are not needed for current interest payments, shall be invested in—

"(A) direct obligations of the United States;

"(B) obligations, participations, or other instruments of, or issued by, the Federal National Mortgage Association or the Government National Mortgage Association;

"(C) mortgages, obligations, or other securities for sale by, or which have been disposed of by, the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation under section 305 or 306 of the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation Act [12 U.S.C. 1454 or 1455]; or

"(D) any other security in which it is lawful for fiduciary and trust funds to be invested under the laws of any State.

"(2) SEGREGATED ACCOUNTS FOR ZERO COUPON INSTRUMENTS HELD TO ASSURE PAYMENT OF PRINCIPAL.—The Funding Corporation shall invest funds from sources specified in subsection (e) in, and hold in a segregated account (the "Funding Corporation Principal Fund"), noninterest bearing instruments—

"(A) which are securities described in paragraph (1); and

"(B) the total of the face amounts (the amount of principal payable at maturity) of which is approximately equal to the aggregate amount of principal on the obligations of the Funding Corporation.

"(h) MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS RELATING TO THE FUNDING CORPORATION.—

"(1) TREATMENT FOR CERTAIN PURPOSES.—Except as provided in subsection (f)(7)(b), the Funding Corporation shall be treated as a Federal Home Loan Bank for purposes of sections 13 and 23 of this Act (12 U.S.C. 1433 and 1443).

"(2) FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS AS DEPOSITARIES AND FISCAL AGENTS.—The Federal Reserve banks are authorized to act as depositaries for or fiscal agents or custodians of the Funding Corporation.

"(3) APPLICABILITY OF CERTAIN PROVISIONS RELATING TO GOVERNMENT CORPORATIONS.—Notwithstanding the fact that no Government funds may be invested in the Funding Corporation, the Funding Corporation shall be treated, for purposes of sections 9105, 9107, and 9108 of title 31, United States Code, as a mixed-ownership Government corporation which has capital of the Government.

"(4) POWER TO REMOVE AND JURISDICTION.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any civil action, suit, or proceeding to which the Resolution Funding Corporation is a party shall be deemed to arise under the laws of the United States, and the United States District Court for the District of Columbia shall have original jurisdiction over such. The Resolution Funding Corporation may, without bond or security, remove any such action, suit, or proceeding from a State court to the United States District Court for the District of Columbia.

"(i) TERMINATION OF THE FUNDING CORPORATION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Funding Corporation shall be dissolved, as soon as practicable, after the date by which all capital certificates purchased by the Funding Corporation in the Resolution Trust Corporation have been retired.

"(2) OVERSIGHT BOARD AUTHORITY TO CONCLUDE THE AFFAIRS OF THE FUNDING CORPORATION.—Effective on the date of the dissolution of the Funding Corporation under paragraph (1), the Oversight Board may exercise on behalf of the Funding Corporation, any power of the Funding Corporation which the Oversight Board determines to be necessary to settle and conclude the affairs of the Funding Corporation.

"(j) REGULATIONS.—The Oversight Board may prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section, including regulations defining terms used in this section.

"(k) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) INSURED SAVINGS ASSOCIATION.—The term 'insured savings association' means a savings association as such term is defined by section 3(u) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act and which is insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

"(2) OVERSIGHT BOARD.—The term 'Oversight Board' means the Oversight Board of the Resolution Trust Corporation under section 21a of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, and after the termination of said Corporation the term shall mean the Secretary of the Treasury, the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board and the Attorney General.

"(3) DIRECTORATE.—The term 'Directorate' means the directorate established in the manner provided in subsection (c)(1) to manage the Funding Corporation.".

"(4) ISSUANCE COSTS.—The term "issuance costs"—

"(i) means issuance fees and commissions incurred by the Funding Corporation in connection with the issuance or servicing of any obligation of the Funding Corporation; and

"(ii) includes legal and accounting expenses, trustee and fiscal paying agent charges, costs incurred in connection with preparing and printing offering materials, and advertising expenses, to the extent that any such cost or expense is incurred by the Funding Corporation in connection with issuing any obligation; and

"(5) CUSTODIAN FEES.—The term "custodian fee" means—

"(i) any fee incurred by the Funding Corporation in connection with the transfer of any security to, or the maintenance of any security in, the segregated accounts established under subsection (g); and

"(ii) any other expense incurred by the Funding Corporation in connection with the establishment or maintenance of such accounts.

SEC. 503. FINANCING CORPORATION.—Section 21 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act (12 U.S.C. 1441) is hereby amended as follows:

(1) By deleting the term "insured institution" and "institution" each time they appear and inserting "insured savings association" and "savings association" in lieu thereof respectively; and by deleting the term "Federal Home Loan Bank Board" and "Board" each time they appear and inserting in lieu thereof "Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank System" and "Chairman" in lieu thereof respectively.

(2) In subsection (c), in paragraph (2) by adding "prior to the date of the enactment of the Financial Institution Industry Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989 and thereafter the FSLIC Resolution Fund" before the period therein; and in paragraph (9) by striking out "or section 402(b) of the National Housing Act [12 USCS § 1725(b)]".

(3) In subsection (e), in paragraph (3) by adding "prior to the enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989, and thereafter purchase capital certificates or capital stock issued by the FSLIC Resolution Fund" before the semi-colon;

(4) In subsection (e), in paragraph (7) by deleting "the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation" and inserting "the FSLIC Resolution Fund" in lieu thereof.

(5) In subsection (f), by striking out everything thereunder and inserting the following:

"(f) SOURCES OF FUNDS FOR INTEREST PAYMENTS; FINANCING CORPORATION ASSESSMENT AUTHORITY.—The Financing Corporation shall obtain funds for interest payments on obligations issued hereunder from the following sources:

"(1) The Financing Corporation assessments which were assessed on insured institutions pursuant to subsection (f) of this section prior to the enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989;

"(2) The Financing Corporation, with the approval of the Board of Directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, shall assess on each insured savings association an assessment as if such assessment was assessed by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation with respect to Savings Association Insurance Fund members pursuant to section 7 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act: Provided, That the amount assessed hereunder and the amount assessed by the Funding Corporation under section 21b of this Act shall not exceed the amount authorized to be assessed pursuant to section 7 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, and that the Financing Corporation shall have first priority to make such assessments; and Provided, further, that all assessments made by the Financing Corporation under this section and the Funding Corporation under section 21b shall be subtracted from the amounts authorized to be assessed by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation pursuant to section 7 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act; and

"(3) To the extent the funds available pursuant to paragraphs (1) and (2) are insufficient to cover the amount of interest payments, then to the extent the funds are not required by the Resolution Funding Corporation so as to provide funds for the Funding Corporation Principal Fund under section 21b of this Act, then the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall transfer to the Financing Corporation from the proceeds of the FSLIC Resolution Fund the remaining amount of funds necessary for the Financing Corporation to make interest payment.

"(4) In subsection (g), by deleting the comma after "[12 USCS 1725(b)(1)(A)]" and inserting thereafter "prior to the enactment of the Financial Institution Industry Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989 and thereafter in capital certificates or capital stock issued by the FSLIC Resolution Fund,".

(5) In subsection (1), by deleting subparagraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof a new subparagraph (1) to read as follows:

"(1) Insured Savings Association means a savings association as defined by section 3(u) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 USCS § 1813(u)) that is insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation."

"(L) The Resolution Funding Corporation".

TITLE VI—THRIFT ACQUISITION ENHANCEMENT PROVISIONS

SEC. 601. ACQUISTION OF THRIFTS BY BANK HOLDING COMPANIES.—Section 4 of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 184 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(i) ACQUISITION OF SAVINGS ASSOCIATIONS.—

"(1) Beginning on the date two years following the enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989, the Board may approve an application by a bank holding company under subsection (c)(8) to acquire any savings association pursuant to the requirements and limitations of this section. In approving applications by bank holding companies to acquire a savings association, the Board shall not impose restrictions on transactions between the savings association and its holding company affiliates, except as required under the provisions of sections 23A and 23B of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 371c and 371c-1) or other applicable statute."

SEC. 602. INVESTMENTS BY SAVINGS AND LOAN HOLDING COMPANIES IN UNAFFILIATED THRIFT INSTITUTIONS.—Section 408(e)(1)(A)(iii) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1730a(e)(1)(A)(iii)) is amended to read as follows;

"(iii) to acquire, by purchase or otherwise, or to retain more than 5 percent of the voting shares of an insured institution not a subsidiary, or of a savings and loan holding company not a subsidiary, or in the case of a multiple savings and loan holding company, to so acquire or retain more than 5 percent of the voting shares of any company not a subsidiary which is engaged in any business activity other than those specified in paragraph (2) of subsection (c) of this section.".

SEC. 603. TECHNICAL AMENDMENT TO THE BANK HOLDING COMPANY ACT.—Section (2)(j) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1841(j)) is amended to read as follows:

"(j) INSURED INSTITUTION; SAVINGS ASSOCIATION.—For purposes of this Act, the terms 'insured institution' and 'savings association' have the meaning given to the term 'savings association' in section 10(a)(1)(A) of the Home Owners' Loan Act (12 U.S.C. ——)."

TITLE VII—FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANK ACT SYSTEM REFORMS

SUBTITLE A—FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANK ACT AMENDMENTS

SEC. 701 DEFINITIONS.—

(a) Add new paragraph (10) to section 2 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act (12 U.S.C. 1422) to read as follows:

"(10) The term "savings association" has the same meaning as in section 2(c) of the Home Owners Loan Act (12 U.S.C. § 1462(c))."

(b) Add a new paragraph (11) to Section 2 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act and (12 U.S.C. 1422) to read as follows:

"(11) The term "Chairman" means "Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank System."

(c) All provisions of Federal law are hereby amended by deleting the term "Federal Home Loan Bank Board" or "Board" where such term refers to the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, and inserting "Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank System" or "Chairman" in lieu thereof, respectively.

SEC. 702. FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANK SYSTEM CHAIRMAN.—Section 17 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act (12 U.S.C. 1437) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(a) The Federal Home Loan Bank Board is hereby abolished and all power and authority vested in it or its Chairman immediately prior to enactment of the Financial Institution Industry Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989 are, except as otherwise provided in that Act, vested in the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank System, which System shall be a bureau in the Department of the Treasury. The Chairman shall supervise the Federal Home Loan Banks and their members and shall promulgate and enforce such rules, regulations, and orders, as are necessary from time to time for carrying out the provisions of this Act and all other laws it is his duty to implement. The Chairman shall perform his duties under the general directions of the Secretary of the Treasury.

"(b) The Chairman, who shall be a citizens of the United States, shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall hold office for a term of five years unless sooner removed by the President, upon reasons to be communicated by the President to the Senate; provided, however, that the individual serving as the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board on the date of enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989 shall be the Chairman until the date on which his term as Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board would have expired notwithstanding subsection (a). The Chairman may continue to serve until a successor has been appointed and qualified.

"(c) Subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank System may employ, direct and fix the compensation of such employees, attorneys and agents as he deems necessary to carry out his duties. In directing and fixing such compensation, the Chairman shall seek to maintain comparability with the compensation at the other Federal bank regulatory agencies. The Chairman may designate who shall serve in his absence; may continue or establish collective offices or administrative units of the Federal Home Loan Banks and, after consultation with the Federal Home Loan Banks, appoint the heads of such collective offices or administrative units; and, notwithstanding any other provisions of law, may delegate to any duly authorized employee, representative, or agent (including the Office of Finance or Office of Regulatory Affairs of the Federal Home Loan Banks or any other joint office or administrative unit of the Federal Home Loan Banks) any power vested in the Chairman by law.

"(d) The Chairman shall have the power to suspend or remove any director, officer, employee or agent of any Federal Home Loan Bank or administrative unit of such Banks (including the Office of Finance and the Office of Regulatory Affairs or any other joint office or administrative unit of the Federal Home Loan Banks), the fact of such suspension or removal to be communicated in writing forthwith to such director, officer, employee, or agent and to such Bank or joint office or administrative unit.

"(e) The salaries of the Chairman and other employees of the bureau and all other expenses thereof shall be paid from assessments levied on the Federal Home Loan Banks pursuant to section 18 of this Act, and the funds derived from such assessments shall not be construed to be Government Funds or appropriated monies, or subject to Presidential apportionment for the purposes of Chapter 15 of Title 31 or any other authority. Such compensation, other than that of the Chairman, shall be paid without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to officers or employees of the United States.

"(f) It shall not be lawful for the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank System to have a financial interest, either directly or indirectly, in any member of a Federal Home Loan Bank.

"(g) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Chairman shall have and may exercise all functions which the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, and the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation had or could exercise immediately prior to August 24, 1954, or immediately prior to June 24, 1954, which are not expressly transferred or consolidated into the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation or the Resolution Trust Corporation pursuant to this Act.

"(h) The Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank System shall make an annual report to Congress."

SEC. 702. ELECTION OF BANK DIRECTORS.—Section 7 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act (12 U.S.C. 1427) is hereby amended as follows: (1) By striking out subsections (a), (b), (c), and by inserting the following new subsections in lieu thereof:

"(a) NUMBER OF MEMBERS; CLASSES.—The management for each Federal Home Loan Bank shall be vested in a board of directors selected as hereinafter specified and shall consist of nine members, all of whom shall be citizens of the United States, holding office for three years, and divided into three classes, designated as classes A, B, and C, as follows.

"(1) Class A shall consist of three members, without discrimination on the basis of race, creed, color, sex, or national origin, who shall be chosen by and be representative of the stockholding members.

"(2) Class B shall consist of three members, who shall represent the public and who shall be elected without discrimination on the basis of race, creed, color, sex, or national origin, and with due consideration to the interests of the financial services industry and the housing industry, who shall be chosen by the Class A and C directors.

"(3) Class C shall consist of three members who shall be designated by the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank System. They shall be selected to represent the public, without discrimination on the basis of race, creed, color, sex, or national origin, and with due but not exclusive consideration to the interests of commerce, industry (other than the savings and loan industry), services, agriculture and consumers. No Class C director shall be an officer, director, employee of stockholder of any member.".

"(b) CLASS A DIRECTORS; SELECTION.—Directors of Class A shall be chosen in the following manner:

"(1) The System shall classify the members of a district into three general groups or divisions, designating each group by number. Each group shall consist of as nearly as may be of members of similar capitalization. Each member shall be permitted to nominate, in writing to the chairman of the board of directors of the Federal Home Loan Bank of the district, one candidate for director of Class A. The candidates so nominated shall be listed by the chairman, indicating by whom nominated, and a copy of said list shall, within fifteen days after its completion, be furnished by the chairman to each member. Each member by a resolution of the board or by amendment to its bylaws shall authorize its president, cashier or some other officer to cast the vote of the member in the elections of Class A directors: Provided, That whenever any member within the same Federal Home Loan Bank district are subsidiaries of the same savings and loan holding company, within the meaning of section 10 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended, participation in any such nomination or election by such member, including such holding company if it is also a member, shall be confined to one of such members, which may be designated for the purpose by such holding company.

"(2) Within fifteen days after receipt of the list of candidates, the duly authorized officer of the member shall certify to the chairman his first, second, and other choices for director of Class A upon a preferential ballot upon a form furnished by the chairman of the board of directors of the Federal Home Loan Bank of the district. Each such officer shall make a cross opposite the name of the first, second, and other choices for a director of Class A, but shall not vote more than one choice for any one candidate. No officer or director of a member shall be eligible to serve as a Class A director unless nominated and elected by members which are of the same group as the member of which he is an officer or director.

"(3) Any person who is an officer or director of more than one member shall not be eligible for nomination as a Class A director except by members in the same group as the member having the largest aggregate resources of any of those of which such person is an officer or director.

"(4) Any candidate having a majority of all votes cast in the column of first choice shall be declared elected. If no candidate has a majority of all the votes in the first column, then there shall be added together the votes cast by the electors for such candidates in the second column and the votes cast for the several candidates in the first column. The candidate then having a majority of the electors voting and the highest number of combined votes shall be declared elected. If no candidate has a majority of electors voting and the highest number of votes when the first and second choices shall have been added, then the votes cast in the third column for other choices shall be added together in like manner, and the candidate then having the highest number of votes shall be declared elected. An immediate report shall be declared.

"(c) CLASS B DIRECTORS; SELECTION.—Class B directors shall be chosen by the Class A and C directors. They shall have been for at least two years residents of the district for which they are appointed.

"(d) CLASS C DIRECTORS; SELECTION.—Class C directors shall be appointed by and serve at the pleasure of the Chairman of the System. They shall have been for at least two years residents of the district for which they are appointed. One Class C director shall be designated by the Chairman of the System as chairman of the board of directors of the Federal Home Loan Bank. The chairman of the board of directors shall be a person of tested experience and shall be required to maintain, under regulations established by the System, a local office of said board on the premises of the Federal Home Loan Bank. The chairman of the board shall make regular reports to the Chairman of the System and receive an annual compensation to be fixed by the Chairman of the System and paid monthly by the Federal Home Loan Bank to which the chairman of the board is designated. One other Class C director shall be appointed by the Chairman of the System as deputy chairman of the board to exercise the powers of the chairman of the board when necessary. In case of the absence of the chairman and deputy chairman, the third Class C director shall preside at meetings of the board.";

(2) Renumber subsection (d) as (e), and strike out the first two sentences thereof;

(3) Delete existing subsection (e) and inserting in lieu thereof the following new subsection as subsection (f):

"(f) ESTABLISHMENT OF TERMS.—At the first meeting of the full board of directors of each Federal Home Loan Bank, it shall be the duty of the Class A, B, and C directors, respectively to designate one of the members of each class whose term of office shall expire in one year from the 1st of January nearest to the date of such meeting, one whose term of office shall expire at the end of two years from said date, and one whose term of office shall expire at the end of three years from said date. TITLE VIII—BANK CONSERVATION ACT AMENDMENTS

SEC. 801. DEFINITIONS.—Section 202 of title II of the Act of March 9, 1933 (48 Stat. 2, 12 U.S.C. 202), the Bank Conservation Act (hereinafter "Bank Conservation Act"), is amended by adding the words "or any other financial institution chartered under Federal law and subject to the supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency after the words "national banking association".

SEC. 802. APPOINTMENT OF CONSERVATOR.—Section 203 of the Bank Conservation Act (12 U.S.C. 203) is amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 203. APPOINTMENT OF CONSERVATOR.—

(a) APPOINTMENT.—

The Comptroller of the Currency may, without notice, appoint a conservator which may be the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, to take possession and control of a bank whenever the Comptroller determines that one or more of the following circumstances exists:

(1) the conditions for appointment of a receiver for the bank are present;

(2) the bank is in danger of closing, such that the bank is not likely to be able to meet the demands of its depositors, or pay its obligations in the normal course of business, or the bank has incurred or is likely to incur losses that will deplete all or substantially all of its capital;

(3) a violation or violations of laws, rules or regulations or any unsafe or unsound practice or condition which is likely to cause insolvency or substantial dissipation of assets or earnings, or is likely to weaken the condition of the bank or otherwise seriously prejudice the interests of its depositors;

(4) the bank is in an unsafe and unsound condition to transact business;

(5) the bank's board of directors consists of less than five members;

(6) a willful or continuing violation of an order enforceable under the provisions of section 8(i) and (j) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, as amended (12 U.S.C. 1818 (i));

(7) concealment of books, papers, records, or assets of the bank or refusal to submit books, papers, records, or affairs of the bank for inspection to any examiner or to any lawful agent of the Comptroller; or

(8) such other circumstances which, in the Comptroller's opinion, warrant appointment of a conservator for the benefit of depositors and other creditors.

(b) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—

(1) Not later than ten days after the initial appointment of a conservator pursuant to this section, the bank may bring an action in the United States District Court for the judicial district in which the home office of such bank is located, or in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, for an order requiring the Comptroller to terminate the appointment of a conservator, and the court, upon the merits, shall dismiss such action or shall direct the Comptroller to terminate the appointment of such conservator. The Comptroller's decision to appoint a conservator pursuant to this provision shall be set aside only if the court shall find that such decision was arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law.

(2) Upon the commencement of such an action, the court having jurisdiction of any other action or proceeding to which the bank, or the conservator thereof, is a party shall stay such action or proceeding during the pendency of the action for removal of the conservator.

(3) Except as provided in this subsection, no court shall have jurisdiction to affect by injunction or otherwise the appointment of a conservator, or to review, modify, suspend, terminate or set aside any order or action taken pursuant to such conservatorship: Provided, That a court, upon application by the Comptroller, shall enforce an order of the Comptroller relating to the conservatorship and the bank in conservatorship or restraining or affecting the exercise of powers of functions of a conservator.

(c) ADDITIONAL GROUNDS FOR APPOINTMENT.—

In addition to the foregoing provisions, the Comptroller may appoint a conservator for a bank in the event that (i) the bank, by an affirmative vote of a majority of its board of directors or by an affirmative vote of a majority of its shareholders, consents to such appointment, or (ii) in lieu of the provisions of section 8(o) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, as amended (12 U.S.C. 1818(o)), the bank's status as an insured bank is terminated by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. The appointment of a conservator pursuant to this subsection shall not be subject to review.

(d) EXCLUSIVE AUTHORITY.—

The Comptroller shall have exclusive power and jurisdiction to appoint a conservator for a bank. Whenever the Comptroller appoints a conservator for any bank, he may appoint the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation conservator for such bank. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, as such conservator, shall have all the powers granted under the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, and (when not inconsistent therewith) any other rights, powers, and privileges possessed by conservators or receivers of banks under this Act and any other provisions of law. The Comptroller may also appoint another person as conservator, who shall be subject to the provisions of this Act.

(e) The Comptroller may, without notice or hearing, replace a conservator with another conservator. Such replacement shall not affect the bank's right under subsection (b) to obtain judicial review of the Comptroller's original decision to appoint a conservator.

SEC. 803. EXAMINATIONS.—Section 204 of the Bank Conservation Act (12 U.S.C. 204) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 204. EXAMINATIONS.—

The Comptroller of the Currency, in consultation with the Board of Directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation when the Corporation is appointed conservator, is authorized to examine and supervise the bank in conservatorship as long as the bank continues operations as an ongoing national bank. The Comptroller may use reports and other information provided by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation for this purpose."

SEC. 804. TERMINATION OF CONSERVATORSHIP.—Section 205 of the Bank Conservation Act (12 U.S.C. 205) is amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 205.—TERMINATION OF CONSERVATORSHIP.—

(a) At any time the Comptroller becomes satisfied that it may safely be done and that it would be in the public interest, the Comptroller, with the agreement of the Board of Directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation when the Corporation is appointed conservator, may:

(1) terminate the conservatorship and permit the involved bank to resume the transaction of its business subject to such terms, conditions and limitations as the Comptroller may prescribe; or

(2) terminate the conservatorship upon a sale, merger, consolidation, purchase and assumption, change in control, or voluntary liquidation of the involved bank.

(b) The Comptroller also may terminate the conservatorship upon a declaration that the bank is insolvent and upon the appointment of a receiver pursuant to section 1 of the Act of June 30, 1876 (12 U.S.C. 191).

(c) Such terms, conditions and limitations as prescribed by subsection (a)(1) of this section shall be enforceable under the provisions of section 8(i) and (j) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, as amended (12 U.S.C. 1818(i) and (j)) to the same extent as an effective and outstanding order issued pursuant to section 8(b) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, as amended (12 U.S.C. 1818(b)) that has become final: Provided, that the bank may bring an action in the United States district court for the judicial district in which the home office of such bank is located or in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia for an order requiring the Comptroller to terminate the order. An action for judicial review of the terms, conditions and limitations may not be commenced later than 30 days from the date of the termination of the conservatorship or the imposition of the order, whichever is later.

(d) Upon termination of the conservatorship under subsection (a)(2) of this section—

(1) when the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is appointed conservator, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, as conservator, shall proceed to wind up the affairs of the conservatorship; or

(2) when another person is appointed conservator, the conservator shall proceed to wind up the affairs of the conservatorship as follows:

(A) Within 180 days of the sale, merger, consolidation, purchase and assumption, or voluntary liquidation, the conservator shall deposit all net proceeds received from the transaction, less any expenses of the conservatorship that are outstanding, with the United States District Court for the judicial district in which the home office of such bank is located and shall cause notice to be published for three consecutive months and notify by mail all known creditors and shareholders. Within sixty days thereafter, any depositor, creditor, or other claimant of the bank, or any shareholder of the bank may bring an action in interpleader in that court for distribution of the proceeds. The District Court shall disseminate such funds in an equitable manner. If no such action is instituted within one year of the date the funds were deposited with the District Court, title to such net proceeds shall revert to the United States and the District Court shall remit the funds to the Treasury of the United States.

(B) The conservator shall be deemed to have discharged all responsibility of the conservatorship upon the deposit of the proceeds with the District Court and fulfillment of the required notifications.

SEC. 805. CONSERVATOR; POWERS AND DUTIES.—Section 206 of the Bank Conservation Act (12 U.S.C. 206) is amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 206. CONSERVATOR; POWERS AND DUTIES.—

(a) A conservator shall have all the powers of the shareholders, directors, and officers of the bank and shall be authorized to operate the bank in its own name unless the Comptroller in the order of appointment limits the authority of the conservator.

(b) The conservator shall be subject to such rules, regulations, and orders as the Comptroller from time to time deems appropriate; and, except as otherwise specifically provided in such rules, regulations, or orders, shall be vested with or subject to the same rights privileges, duties, restrictions, penalties, conditions, and limitations that apply to directors, officers, or employees of a national bank, except as otherwise provided in Section 209 of this Act.

(c) The Comptroller may require the conservator to set aside and make available for withdrawal by depositors and payment to other creditors such amounts as in the opinion of the Comptroller may safely be used for this purpose: Provided, That all depositors and creditors who are similarly situated shall be treated in the same manner.

(d) The conservator and professional employees appointed to represent or assist the conservator shall be paid amounts no greater than are payable for employees of the Federal Government for similar services, except that the Comptroller of the Currency may authorize payment at higher rates, not to exceed rates prevalent in the private sector, if the Comptroller determines that payment of such higher rates is necessary in order to recruit and retain competent personnel.

(e) All expenses of any such conservatorship shall be paid by the bank and shall be a lien upon the bank which shall be prior to any other lien.

SEC. 806. LIABILITY PROTECTION.—Section 209 of the Bank Conservation Act (12 U.S.C. 209) is amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 209. LIABILITY PROTECTION.—

(a) The conservator shall not be held liable for damages in tort or otherwise for acts or omissions of acts performed pursuant to and in the course of the duties and responsibilities of the conservatorship unless such acts or omissions of acts are grossly negligent, as determined by a court.

(b) The Comptroller shall have authority to indemnify the conservator on such terms as the Comptroller deems proper.

SEC. 807. RULES AND REGULATIONS.—Section 211 of the Bank Conservation Act (12 U.S.C. 211) is amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 211. RULES AND REGULATIONS.—

"The Comptroller of the Currency is hereby authorized and empowered to prescribe such rules and regulations as the Comptroller may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act."

SEC. 808. REPEALS.—Sections 207 and 208 of the Bank Conservator Act (48 Stat. 3, 12 U.S.C. 207 and 208) are hereby repealed.

SEC. 809. CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 5373(2) of Title 5, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(2) sections 203, 248, 481 and 1819 of title 12,".

TITLE IX—REGULATORY AUTHORITY AND CRIMINAL ENHANCEMENTS

SEC. 901. SHORT TITLE.—

This title may be cited as the "Enforcement Powers Improvement Act of 1989".

Subtitle A—Regulation of Financial Institutions

SEC. 902. AMENDMENTS TO THE FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE ACT.—

(a) Section 8 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1818) is amended—

(1) by replacing the following phrases in each place they appear with the phrase "institution-related party":

(A) "director, officer, employee, agent, or other person participating in the conduct of the affairs of such bank";

(B) "director, officer or other person"; and

(C) "director, officer, employee, agent or other person";

(2)(A) by redesignating subsection (a) as subsection 8(a)(1) and by replacing the words "one hundred and twenty days" with the words "sixty days";

(B) by replacing the words "shall continue for a period of two years" with the words "shall continue for a period of at least six months or up to two years, within the discretion of the Board of Directors."; and

(C) by adding the following new paragraph (a)(2):

"(2) In addition to the foregoing administrative proceedings described in subsection (a)(1), whenever the Board of Directors, after consultation with the appropriate federal banking agency, shall find that an insured financial institution has no tangible shareholders' equity that qualifies as tier one capital under the capital guidelines or regulations of the appropriate Federal banking agency, the Corporation may issue a temporary order suspending deposit insurance on all deposits received by the institution after the effective date of such order. Such order shall become effective not earlier than ten days from the date of service upon the institution and, unless set aside, limited or suspended by a court in proceedings authorized hereunder, such temporary order shall remain effective and enforceable pending completion of the administrative proceedings or until the Corporation shall dismiss such administrative proceedings. Within ten days after the temporary order has been served upon the institution as hereinabove provided, the institution may apply to the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, or the United States district court for the judicial district in which the home office of the institution is located, for an injunction setting aside, limiting or suspending the enforcement, operation or effectiveness of such order, and such court shall have jurisdiction to issue such injunction. The insured deposits of each depositor in such financial institution on the effective date of the order issued under this paragraph (8), less all subsequent withdrawals from any deposits of such depositor, shall continue to be insured, subject to the administrative proceddings as provided in this Act. In addition, the Corporation may publish notice of any order issued under this paragraph (8) and the financial institution shall give notice of such order to each of its depositors in such manner and at such times as the Board of Directors may find to be necessary and may order for the protection of depositors. In the event the Corporation determines that the financial institution has not substantially complied with the notice to depositors required by the Board of Directors, the Corporation may provide such notice in such manner as the Board of Directors may find to be necessary and appropriate. The failure of a depositor to receive notice shall not affect the effectiveness of any order issued under this paragraph.";

(3) at the end of paragraph (1) of subsection (b), by striking the period and inserting: "including, without limitation, reimbursement, restitution, indemnification, rescission, the disposal of loans or assets, prohibitions or restrictions on growth of the institution, guarantees against loss, or other action the appropriate Federal banking agency deems appropriate. Such order may place limitations on the activities or functions of the financial institution or any institution-related party necessary to correct the conditions resulting from any such violation or practice.";

(4) in paragraph (3) of subsection (b), by striking out "Nothing" in the second sentence thereof and inserting in lieu thereof "Except as provided in subsection (b)(6) of this section, nothing";

(5) at the end of subsection (b), by adding the following new paragraph:

"(6) This subsection and subsections (c) through (n) of this section shall apply to any savings and loan holding company and to any subsidiary (other than a bank or subsidiary of that bank) of a savings and loan holding company, to any service corporation of a savings, association and to any subsidiary of such service corporation, whether wholly or partly owned, in the same manner as they apply to a savings association.";

(6) in paragraph (1) of subsection (c), by striking the words "substantial" and "seriously" and by inserting the following sentence after the first sentence: "Such order may place limitations on the activities or functions of the financial institution or prohibitions or restrictions on the growth of the institution or any institution-related party.";

(7) at the end of subsection (c), by adding the following new paragraph:

"(3) Whenever a notice of charges specifies that an insured financial institution's books and records are so incomplete or inaccurate that the appropriate Federal banking agency is unable with reasonable effort to determine the financial condition of that financial institution or the details or purpose of any transaction or transactions that may have a substantial effect on the financial condition of that financial institution, the agency may issue a temporary order requiring cessation of any activities the agency deems appropriate, including prohibitions or restrictions on the growth of the institution, or affirmative action to restore such books and records to a complete and accurate state, or both, until completion of proceedings conducted under paragraph (1) of subsection (b) of this section. Such order shall become effective upon service, and unless set aside, limited, or suspended by a court in proceedings authorized by paragraph (2) of this subsection, shall remain effective and enforceable pending completion of the administrative proceeding initiated under such notice or until the Federal banking agency determines by examination or otherwise that the financial institution's books and records are accurate and capable of reflecting the financial condition of the financial institution.";

(8) in subsection (e), by striking paragraph (2) and amending paragraph (1) to read as follows:

"(1)(A) Whenever the appropriate Federal banking agency determines that any institution-related party, directly or indirectly, has violated any law, rule, regulation, or cease-and-desist order which has become final, or has engaged or participated in any unsafe or unsound practice in connection with any insured financial institution or business institution, or has committed or engaged in any act, omission, or practice which constitutes a breach of fiduciary duty, and

"(B) such insured financial institution or business institution has suffered or will probably suffer financial loss or other damage, or the interests of its depositors have been or could be prejudiced by reason of such violation, practice, or breach, or the institution-related party has received financial gain by reason of such violation, practice, or breach, and

"(C) such violation, practice, or breach involves personal dishonesty on the part of such institution-related party or demonstrates willful or continuing disregard for the safety or soundness of such insured financial institution or business institution, the agency may serve upon such institution-related party a written notice of its intention to remove such party from office or to prohibit the party's further participation in any manner in the conduct of the affairs of any insured financial institution.";

(9) in subsection (e), by redesignating paragraphs (3) through (6) as paragraphs (2) through (5), respectively, and by amending paragraph (3), as redesignated, to read as follows:

"(3) In respect to any institution-related party referred to in paragraph (1) or (2) of this subsection, the appropriate Federal banking agency may, if it deems it necessary for the protection of the financial institution or the interests of its depositors, by written order to such effect served upon such party, suspend such party from office or prohibit such party from further participation in any manner in the conduct of the affairs of the financial institution. Such suspension or prohibition shall become effective upon service of such order on the institution-related party and, unless stayed by a court in proceedings authorized by subsection (f) of this section, shall remain in effect pending the completion of the administrative proceedings pursuant to the notice served under paragraph (1) or (2) of this subsection and until such time as the agency shall dismiss the charges specified in such notice, or, if an order of removal or prohibition is issued against such party, until the effective date of any such order. Copies of any order issued pursuant to this paragraph shall also be served upon any financial institution where the party involved is presently associated.";

(10) after paragraph (5) of subsection (e), as redesignated, by inserting the following new paragraph:

"(6) Any person who is subject to a removal, suspension, or prohibition order pursuant to this subsection or subsection (g) shall also be removed, suspended, or prohibited from participation in the conduct of the affairs of—

"(A) any insured financial institution,

"(B) any bank holding company or subsidiary of a bank holding company (as those terms are defined in the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956),

"(C) any organization organized and operated under section 25A of the Federal Reserve Act or operating under section 25 of the Federal Reserve Act,

"(D) any service corporation or subsidiary of a service corporation whether wholly or partly owned of any insured financial institution,

"(E) any savings and loan holding company or any subsidiary of a savings and loan holding company (as those terms are defined in the Home Owners' Loan Act),

"(F) any depository institution whose accounts are insured by the National Credit Union Share Insurance Fund, and

"(G) any institution chartered under the Farm Credit Act of 1971, unless the party involved has received the prior written approval of the appropriate

Federal regulatory agency to continue such affiliation or to continue participating in the affairs of such institution.";

(11) in subsection (f), by striking "(e)(4)" in subsection (f) and inserting "(e)(3)", and by striking "(e)(1), (e)(2), or (e)(3)" and inserting "(e)(1) or (e)(2)";

(12) in subsection (i), by redesignating paragraphs (1) and (2) as paragraphs (2) and (3), respectively, and by inserting after "(i)" the following new paragraph:

"(1) The jurisdiction and authority of the appropriate Federal banking agency to proceed under this section against any institution-related party shall not be affected by the resignation, termination of employment, or other separation of such person from an insured financial institution.";

(13) by amending redesignated subsection (i)(3)(i) by replacing the words "$1,000 per day for each day during which such violation continues" with the words "$25,000 for each day during which such violation continues. Notwithstanding the foregoing, for violations made with reckless disregard for the safety and soundness of the financial institution, the Corporation may, in its discretion, assess a penalty of not more than $1,000,000 per day for each day during which such violation continues.";

(14) by adding paragraph (i)(4) as follows:

"(4)(A) Any insured financial institution and any institution-related party which has violated any law or regulation relating to financial institutions, or any condition imposed in writing by the appropriate Federal banking agency in connection with the grant of any application or other request by such insured bank, or has breached any fiduciary duty or engaged in any unsafe or unsound practice where such breach or practice has resulted in a loss to the financial institution or pecuniary gain to the institution-related party, shall pay a civil penalty of not more than $25,000 for each day during which such violation continues. Notwithstanding the foregoing, for violations made with reckless disregard for the safety and soundness of the financial institution, the Corporation may, in its discretion, assess a penalty of not more than $1,000,000 per day for each day during which such violation continues.

"(B) Any penalty imposed under subparagraph (A) shall be assessed, determined, reviewed, and collected in the manner provided in paragraph (3) for any penalty imposed under such paragraph.

"(c)(i) The assessment of any penalty under subparagraph (A) with respect to any violation shall not preclude the appropriate Federal banking agency from issuing any order under subsection (b), (c), (e), (g), or (s) with respect to such violation, or taking any other action authorized by law with respect to such violation.

"(ii) No civil penalty may be imposed under subparagraph (A) for any violation for which a civil penalty is imposed under paragraph (3) or any other provision of law.";

(15) in (i)(2)(vi), by removing the period at the end thereof and by adding the words "and shall have the authority to promulgate regulations to define any term not otherwise defined in this section.";

(16) by amending subsection (j) to read as follows:

"(j) PENALTY.—Any institution-related party against whom there is any outstanding and effective order served upon such person under paragraph (3) or (4) of subsection (e) or under subsection (g) who, directly or indirectly, without the prior written approval of the appropriate Federal regulatory agency.

"(1) participates in any manner in the conduct of the affairs of any insured financial institution, any bank holding company or subsidiary of a bank holding company (as those terms are defined in the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956), any organization organized and operated under section 25A of the Federal Reserve Act or operating under section 25 of the Federal Reserve Act, any service corporation or subsidiary of a service corporation of any insured financial institution, any savings and loan holding company or subsidiary of a savings and loan holding company (as those terms are defined in the Home Owners' Loan Act), any depository institution whose accounts are insured by the National Credit Union Share Insurance Fund, or any institution chartered under the Farm Credit Act of 1971, from which he has been suspended, removed, or prohibited, or solicits or procures, or transfers or attempts to transfer, or votes or attempts to vote any proxies, consents, or authorization in respect to any voting rights in such institution; or

"(2) votes for a director, or serves or acts as a director, officer, employee, or agent, or otherwise participates in any manner in the conduct of the affairs of any insured institution, any bank holding company or subsidiary thereof or any other institution described in paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be fined not more than $1,000,000 for each day the violation continues or imprisoned for not more than five years, or both. Any order issued under subsection (e) of this section may prohibit any act that would violate this subsection.";

(17) by amending subsection (k) to read as follows:

"(k) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section:

"(1) The term 'appropriate Federal regulatory agency' means—

"(A) the appropriate Federal banking agency, as provided in subsection (g) of section 3 (12 U.S.C. 1813);

"(B) the National Credit Union Administration Board in the case of a depository institution whose accounts are insured by the National Credit Union Share Insurance Fund; and

"(C) the Farm Credit Administration in the case of an institution chartered under the Farm Credit Act of 1971.

"(2) The terms 'cease-and-desist order which has become final' and 'order which has become final' mean a cease-and-desist order or other order issued by the appropriate Federal banking agency (i) with the consent of the financial institution or the institution-related party concerned; (ii) with respect to which no petition for review of the action of the agency has been filed and perfected in a court of appeals as specified in paragraph (2) of subsection (h) of this section; (iii) with respect to which the action of the court in which such a petition is so filed is not subject to further review by the Supreme Court of the United States in proceedings provided for in that paragraph; or (iv) under paragraph (1) or (3) of subsection (g) of this section.

"(3) The term "controlling shareholder" means a person that directly or indirectly, or acting through or in concert with one or more persons, owns or controls a financial institution. Shares owned or controlled by a member of an individual's immediate family are considered to be held by the individual. For the purpose of this paragraph, a "person" means an individual or a corporation, partnership, trust, association, joint venture, pool, syndicate, sole proprietorship unincorporated organization, or any form of entity not specifically listed herein.

"(4) The term 'institution-related party' means a director, officer, employee, agent, independent contractor, controlling, shareholder (other than a holding company), or other person participating in the conduct of the affairs of an insured financial institution or a subsidiary of an insured financial institution, or any person who has filed or is required to file a change-in-control notice with the appropriate Federal banking agency under section 7(j).

"(5) The term 'violation' includes without limitation any action (alone or with another or others) for or toward causing, bringing about, participating in, counseling, or aiding or abetting a violation.";

(18) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(t)(1) An appropriate Federal banking agency, within its discretion, after notification to the Attorney General, may pay a reward to a person who provides original information which leads directly to recovery which exceeds $50,000, of a criminal fine, restitution or civil penalty under this title or under section 215, 656, 657, 1005, 1006, 1007, 1014, 1344, or 3663 or a forfeiture under section 983 or 984 of title 18, United States Code, or of a penalty under this section.

"(2) An appropriate Federal banking agency may not pay a reward of more than 25 per cent of the amount of the fine, penalty, restitution, or forfeiture or $100,000, whichever is less.

"(3) An officer or employee of the United States, State or local government who provides information described in subsection (a), obtained in the performance of official duties, is not eligible for a reward under this section.

"(4) A reward decision, or decision not to give a reward, made pursuant to this section by the appropriate Federal banking agency is final and not reviewable by any court.

"(u)(1) No federally insured financial institution may discharge or otherwise discriminate against any employee with respect to compensation, terms, conditions or privileges of employment because the employee (or any person acting pursuant to the request of the employee) provided information to any financial institution regulatory authority or to the Department of Justice regarding a possible violation of any law or regulation by the financial institution or its officers, directors or employees.

"(2) Any employee or former employee who believes he has been discharged or discriminated against in violation of paragraph (1) may file a civil action in federal district court within two years from the date of such discharge or discrimination.

"(3) If the district court determines that a violation of paragraph (1) has occurred, it shall order the financial institution who committed the violation to reinstate the employee to his former position together with compensatory damages and otherwise remedy any past discrimination.

"(4) The protections of this subsection do not apply to any employee who deliberately causes the alleged violation of law or regulation.

"(v) The Corporation, based on an examination of a savings association by the Corporation or by the Federal Home Loan Bank System, may recommend that the System take any enforcement action authorized under this section with respect to any savings association. If the System fails to take the recommended action or to provide an acceptable plan for addressing the concerns of the Corporation as set forth in its recommendation within 60 days of receipt of the formal recommendation from the Corporation, the Board of Directors may order the Corporation to take such action if the Board determines that the association is in an unsafe or unsound condition to continue as an insured financial institution or that failure to take the recommended action will result in continuance of unsafe or unsound practices in conducting the business of the savings association. Notwithstanding the above, the Board of Directors may order the Corporation to exercise its authority without regard to the time period set forth, in exigent circumstances upon notification of the System. The Corporation shall, by agreement with the System, set forth those exigent circumstances in which the Corporation may act without regard to the time period set forth above.

"(w) The authority granted to the appropriate Federal banking agencies under this section shall be in addition to, and not be restricted by, any other authority provided by Federal or State law."

"(x) Any decision by the Board of Directors to:

(1) issue a notice of intention to terminate insured status;

(2) issue a temporary order terminating deposit insurance;

(3) issue a final order terminating deposit insurance; or

(4) initiate an enforcement action against an ongoing association pursuant to subsection (v) shall be made by the Board of Directors and may not be delegated.".

(b) Section 19 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1829) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 1829. PENALTY FOR PARTICIPATION.—

"Except with the prior written consent of the Corporation, no person who has been convicted, or who is hereafter convicted, of any criminal offense involving dishonesty or a breach of trust shall act or serve as an institution-related party of an insured financial institution or shall participate in the conduct of the affairs of any insured financial institution. For each knowing violation of this section, the financial institution or the individual involved each shall be fined not more than $1,000,000 for each day such prohibition is violated or imprisoned for not more than five years, or both, and be subject to a civil penalty of not more than $1,000,000 for each day such prohibition is violated. The Corporation may recover the costs of assessment and collection of such penalty for its use.

SEC. 903. PARALLEL INCREASES IN CIVIL PENALTY PROVISIONS.—

(a) Section 29(a) of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 504(a)) is amended by replacing the words "$1,000 per day for each day during which such violation continues" with the words "$25,000 for each day during which such violation continues. Notwithstanding the foregoing, for violations made with reckless disregard for the safety and soundness of the financial institution, the Corporation may, in its discretion, assess a penalty of not more than $1,000,000 per day for each day during which such violation continues.".

(b) Section 8 of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1847) is amended—

(1) by amending section 1847(a) to read as follows:

"Any company which willfully violates any provision of this chapter, or any regulation or order issued by the Board pursuant thereto shall be subject to a fine of $1,000,000 for each day during which such violation continues. Any individual who willfully participates in a violation of any provision of this chapter or any rule, regulation or order thereunder, shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000,000 for each day during which such violation continues or shall be imprisoned for not more than five years, or both."; and

(2) in section 1847(b)(1)—

(A) by replacing the first sentence with the following:

"Any company which or individual who willfully participates in a violation of any provision of this chapter, or any regualtion or order issued pursuant thereto, shall pay a civil penalty of not more than $1,000,000 per day for each day during which such violation continues and for all other violations shall pay a civil penalty of not more than $25,000 per day for each day during which such violation continues."; and

(B) by adding at the end thereof the following sentence:

"Criminal and civil penalties under this section are cumulative.".

(c) Section 106(b)(2)(F)(i) of the Bank Holding Company Act Amendments of 1970 (12 U.S.C. 1972(2)(F)(i)) is amended by replacing the words "$1,000 per day for each day during which such violation continues:" with the words "$25,000 for each day during which such violation continues. Notwithstanding the foregoing, for violations made with reckless disregard for the safety and soundness of the financial institution, the agency having authority to impose a penalty may, in its discretion, assess a penalty of not than $1,000,000 per day for each day during which such violation continues.".

(d) Section 5239 of the Revised Statutes (12 U.S.C. 93) is amended in subsection (b)(1) by replacing the words "$1,000 per day for each day during which such violation continues" with the words "$25,000 for each day during which such violation continues. Notwithstanding the foregoing, for violations made with reckless disregard for the safety and soundness of the financial institution, the Corporation may, in its discretion, assess a penalty of not more than $1,000,000 per day for each day during which such violation continues.".

(e) Section 5240 of the Revised Statutes (12 U.S.C. 481) is amended by replacing the words "$100 for each day such refusal shall continue" with the words "not more than $25,000 for each day such refusal continues. Notwithstanding the foregoing, for violations made with reckless disregard for the safety and soundness of the bank, the Comptroller may, in his discretion, assess a penalty of not more than $1,000,000 for each day during which such refusal continues.".

SEC. 904. PENALTY FOR VIOLATION OF "CHANGE IN BANK CONTROL ACT".—

Section 7(j)(16) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1817(j)(16)) is amended to read as follows:

"(16)(A) Any person who violates any provision of this subsection, or any regulation or order issued by the appropriate Federal banking agency pursuant thereto, shall pay a civil penalty of not more than $25,000 for each day during which such violation continues. Notwithstanding the foregoing, for violations made with reckless disregard for the safety and soundness of the financial institution, the agency having authority to impose a civil money penalty, in its discretion, may assess a penalty of not more than $1,000,000 per day for each day during which such violation continues. The agency having authority to impose a civl money penalty may, in its discretion, compromise, modify, or remit any civil money penalty which is subject to imposition or has been imposed under such authority. The penalty may be assessed and collected by the appropriate Federal banking agency by written notice. As used in this paragraph, the term 'volates' includes without any limitation any action (alone or with another or others) for or toward causing, bringing about, participating in, counseling, or aiding or abetting a violation.

"(B) In determining the amount of the penalty, the appropriate Federal banking agency shall take into account the appropriateness of the penalty with respect to the size of financial resources and good faith of the person charged, the gravity of the violation, the history of previous violations, and such other matters as justice may require.

"(C) The person assessed shall be afforded an opportunity for an agency hearing upon request made within 10 days after receipt of the notice of assessment. In such hearing all issues shall be determined on the record pursuant to section 554 of title 5, United States Code. The agency determination shall be made by final order which may be reviewed only as provided in subparagaph (D). If no hearing is requested as herein provided, the assessment shall constitute a final and unappealable order.

"(D) Any financial institution or person against whom an order imposing a civil money penalty has been entered after an agency hearing under this section may obtain review by the United States Court of appeals for the circuit in which the home office of the insured financial institution is located, or the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, by filing a notice of appeal in such court within 20 days from the date of such order and simultaneously sending a copy of such notice by registered or certified mail to the appropriate Federal banking agency. The agency shall promptly certify and file in such court the record upon which the penalty was imposed, as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code. The findings of the agency shall be set aside if found to be unsupported by substantial evidence as provided by section 706(2)(E) of title 5, United States Code.

"(E) If any person fails to pay an assessment after it has become a final and unappealable order, or after the court of appeals has entered final judgment in favor of the agency, the agency shall refer the matter to the Attorney general, who shall recover the amount assessed by action in the appropriate United States district court. In such action, the validity and appropriateness of the final order imposing the penalty shall not be subject to review.

"(F) All penalties collected under authority of this section shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States."

SEC. 905. REPORTS.—

(a) Section 3 of the Bank Protection Act of 1968 (12 U.S.C. 1882) is amended by striking in the first sentence of subsection (b) the phrase "and shall require the submission of periodic reports with respect to the installation, maintenance, and operation of security devices and procedures".

(b) Section 5211 of the Revised Statutes (12 U.S.C. 161) is amended—

(1) by striking, in the fifth sentence of subsection (a), "within ten days after the receipt of a request thereof from him;" and inserting "within the period of time specified by him;";

(2) by striking "; penalties" in the heading of subsection (c); and

(3) by striking the last sentence of subsection (c).

(c) NATIONAL BANKS.—Section 5213 of the Revised Statutes (12 U.S.C. 164) is amended by striking the first sentence and inserting the following:

"Every association which fails to make, obtain, transmit or publish any report or information required by the Comptroller under section 5211 of the Revised Statutes (12 U.S.C. 161) or which submits any false, misleading, or incomplete report or information shall be subject to a penalty for such failure, submission, or publication of not more than $25,000 for each day during which such failure continues or for each day from the time of submission or publication until such false, misleading, or incomplete report or information is corrected. Notwithstanding the foregoing, for violations made with reckless disregard for the safety and soundness of the financial institution, the Comptroller may, in his discretion, assess a penalty of not more than $1,000,000 per day for each day during which such failure continues or for each day from the time of submission or publication until such false, misleading, or incomplete report or information is corrected.".

(d) STATE NONMEMBER BANKS.—Section 7(a)(1) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1817(a)(1)) is amended by striking the last sentence and inserting the following:

"Every such bank which fails to make or publish any such report within the period of time specified by the Corporation or which submits or publishes any false, misleading, or incomplete report or information shall be subject to a penalty for such failure, submission, or publication of not more than $25,000 for each day during which such failure continues or for each day from the time of submission or publication until such false, misleading, or incomplete report or information is corrected. Notwithstanding the foregoing, for such failure, submission or publication resulting from reckless disregard for the safety and soundness of the institution, such bank shall be subject to a penalty of not more than $1,000,000 for each day during which such failure continues or for each day from the time of submission or publication until such false, misleading, or incomplete information is corrected. Such penalty may be collected by the Corporation by suit or otherwise and the costs of assessment and collection for such penalty retained by the Corporation for its own use.".

(e) Section 9 of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 324) is amended by striking the fourth sentence and inserting "Every bank which fails to make such reports within the period of time specified by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System or which submits or publishes any false, misleading, or incomplete report or information shall be subject to a penalty for such failure, submission, or publication of not more than $25,000 for each day during which such failure continues or for each day from the time of submission or publication until such false, misleading, or incomplete report or information is corrected. Notwithstanding the foregoing, for such failure, submission or publication resulting from reckless disregard for the safety and soundness of the bank, such bank shall be subject to a penalty of not more than $1,000,000 for each day during which such failure continues or for such day from the time of submission or publication until such false, misleading or incomplete information is corrected, and for all other such failures, submissions, or publications a penalty shall be assessed and collected in the same manner as prescribed by section 8(i)(3) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act.".

(f) Section 8(b) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1847(b)) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (b)(1) as subsection (b) and redesignating sections (b)(2) through (6) as sections (d)(1) through (5); and

(2) by adding a new subsection (c) as follows: "Any company which fails to make such reports as are required by this chapter or any regulation or order issued pursuant thereto within the period of time specified by the Board or which submits or publishes any false, misleading or incomplete report or information shall pay a civil penalty of not more than $25,000 for each day during which such failure continues or for each day from the time of submission or publication until such false, misleading, or incomplete report or information is corrected. Notwithstanding the foregoing, for such failure, submission or publication made with reckless disregard, the company shall be subject to a penalty of not more than $1,000,000 for each day during which such failure continues or for each day from the time of submission or publication until such false or misleading report or submission is corrected.

Subtitle B—Regulation by the Federal Home Loan Bank System

SEC. 906. EXAMINATION AUTHORITY.—

Section (5)(d)(1) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 (12 U.S.C. 1464(d)) is redesignated as (5)(d)(1)(A) and section 407(m) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1730(m)) is redesignated as section 5(d)(1)(B) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 and is further amended by substituting the term "savings association" or "savings associations" for the terms "institution" and "insured institutions", by deleting the phrase "on behalf of the Corporation" and by substituting the term "System" for "Corporation" everywhere it appears and a new subparagraph (5)(d)(1)(C) is added as follows:

"(C) References in this subsection to savings account holders and to members of associations shall be deemed to be references to holders of withdrawable accounts in institutions over which the System has any statutory power of examination or supervision as provided in this paragraph, and references therein to boards of directors of associations shall be deemed to be references to boards of directors or other governing boards of such institutions. The System shall have power by regulation to define, for the purposes of this paragraph, terms used or referred to in the preceding sentence and other terms used in this subsection.".

SEC. 907. REPORTS OF CONDITION AND PENALTIES.—

Section 5 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 (12 U.S.C. 1464) is amended by inserting after new subsection (t) the following new subsection:

"(u)(1) Each association shall make reports of condition to the System which shall be in such form and shall contain such information as the System may require.

"(2) The System may require reports of condition to be published in such manner as the System may direct.

"(3) Any association which fails to submit or publish any report or information required by the System under paragraph (1) or (2) within the period of time specified by the System, or submits or publishes any false, misleading or incomplete report or information shall be subject to a penalty for such failure, submission or publication of not more than $25,000 for each day during which such failure continues, or for each day from the time of submission or publication until such false, misleading, or incomplete report or information is corrected. Notwithstanding the foregoing, for violations resulting from reckless disregard for the safety and soundness of an association, the system may, in its discretion, assess a penalty of not more than $1,000,000 for each day during which such failure continues or for each day from the time of submission or publication until such false or misleading report or information is corrected.

"(4) Any penalty imposed under paragraph (3) shall be assessed, and collected by the System in the manner provided in section 8(i) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1818(i)) and any such assessment (including the determination of the amount of the penalty) shall be subject to the provisions of such section.

"(5) The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall have access to reports of condition made to the System pursuant to paragraph (1) and any revision made to any such report.".

SEC. 908. SAVINGS AND LOAN HOLDING COMPANIES.—

(a) Redesignated sections 10(j) (1) and (2) of the Home Owners' Loan Act (formerly 12 U.S.C. 1730a(j) (1) and (2)) are amended to read as follows:

"(j)(1) Any company which willfully violates any provision of this section, or any regulation or order issued by the System pursuant thereto shall be subject to a fine of $1,000,000 for each day during which such violation continues. Any individual who willfully participates in a violation of any provision of this section or any rule, regulation or order thereunder, shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000,000 for each day during which such violation continues or shall be imprisoned for not more than five years, or both."; and

"(2) Any company which or individual who willfully participates in a violation of any provision of this section, or any regulation or order issued pursuant thereto, shall pay a civil penalty of not more than $1,000,000 per day for each day during which such violation continues and for all other violations, shall pay a civil penalty of not more than $25,000 per day for each day during which such violation continues.".

"(b) Section 5 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 (12 U.S.C. 1464) is amended by inserting after new subsection (u) the following new subsection:

"(v) Any savings and loan holding company, and any subsidiary of such holding company, which fails to submit or publish any report or information required under section 5 of the National Home Owners' Loan Act or regulations prescribed by the System within the period of time specified by the System, or submits or publishes any false, misleading or incomplete report or information shall be subject to a penalty for such failure, submission or publication, or false, misleading or incomplete submission of not more than $25,000 for each day during which such failure continues or for each day from the time of submission or publication until such false, misleading, or incomplete report or information is corrected. Notwithstanding the foregoing, for violations resulting from reckless disregard for the safety and soundness of the association, or not more than $1,000,000 for each day during which such failure continues or for each day from the time of submission or publication until such false or misleading, or incomplete report or information is corrected;

"(2) Any penalty imposed under paragraph (1) shall be assessed and collected by the System in the manner provided in section 8(i) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1818(i)) and any such assessment (including the determination of the amount of the penalty) shall be subject to the provisions of such section.".

SEC. 909. CONTINUITY OF AUTHORITY FOR ONGOING LITIGATION.—

All ongoing litigation in which the Federal Home Loan Bank Board or the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation are named parties, shall be pursued after the effective date of this Act by the Federal Home Loan Bank System or the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, as appropriate under this Act.

SEC. 910. TEMPORARY EXTENSION OF AUTHORITY.—

Any administrative hearing or proceeding initiated prior to the effective date of this Act or any order issued, agreement entered, condition imposed, memorandum of understanding entered, penalty assessed or capital directive issued pursuant to those provisions in section 5(d) of the Federal Home Owners' Loan Act (12 U.S.C. 1464(d)), repealed by section 307 of this Act, or pursuant to section 407 (e) through (h), (k) or (p) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1730) shall be continued by the Federal Home Loan Bank System as if those provisions remained in effect.

Subtitle C—Credit Unions

SEC. 911. AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 206.—

Section 206 of the Federal Credit Union Act (12 U.S.C. 1786) is amended—

(1) by striking the following phrases:

(A) "director, officer, committee member, employee, agent, or other person participating in the conduct of the affairs of such a credit union";

(B) "director, officer, committee member, employee, agent, or other person";

(C) "director, officer, committee member, or employee";

(D) "director, officer, or committee member";

(E) "director, committee member, or officer";

(F) "director, committee member, officer, or other person";

(G) "officer, director, committee member, employee, agent, or other person participating in the conduct of the affairs of such a credit union";

(H) "officer, director, committee member, employee, agent, or other person participating in the conduct of the affairs of such a credit union";

(I) "director, committee member, officer or other person";

(J) "director, officer, committee member, or other person"; and

(K) "director, committee member, or officer of an insured credit union, or other person participating in the conduct of the affairs of such credit union";

each place they appear and inserting "institution-related party";

(2) in section (b)(1) by replacing the words "one hundred and twenty days" with the words "sixty days";

(3) in section (c), by replacing the words "one year" with the words "a minimum of six months up to two years";

(4) at the end of section (e)(1) by striking the period and inserting the following: "including, without limitation, reimbursement, restitution, indemnification, rescission, the disposal of loans or assets, prohibitions or restrictions on growth of the institution, guarantees against loss, or other action the Board deems appropriate. Such order may place limitations on the activities or functions of the credit union or any institution-related party necessary to correct the conditions resulting from any such violation or practice.";

(5) after the first sentence of paragraph (1) of subsection (f), by inserting the following sentence: "Such order may place limitations on the activities or functions of the credit union or any institution-related party.";

(6) in subsection (f), by redesignating paragraphs (2) and (3) as paragraphs (3) and (4), respectively, and by inserting after paragraph (1) the following new paragraph:

"(2) Whenever a notice of charges specifies that any insured credit union's books and records are so incomplete or inaccurate that the Board is unable with reasonable effort to determine the financial condition of that credit union or the details or purpose of any transactions that may have a substantial effect on the financial condition of that credit union, the Board may issue a temporary order requiring cessation of any activities the Board deems appropriate, including prohibitions or restrictions on the growth of the institution, or affirmative action to restore such books and records to a complete and accurate state, or both, until completion of proceedings conducted under paragraph (1) of subsection (e) of this section. Such order shall become effective upon service, and, unless set aside, limited, or suspended by a court in proceedings authorized by paragraph (3) of this subsection, shall remain effective and enforceable pending completion of the administrative proceeding initiated under such notice or until the Board determines by examination or otherwise that the credit union's books and records are accurate and capable of reflecting the financial condition of the credit union.";

(7) by striking paragraph (2) and amending paragraph (1) of subsection (g), to read as follows:

"(1) Whenever the Board determines that—

"(A) any institution-related party, directly or indirectly, has violated any law, rule, regulation, or cease-and-desist order which has become final, or has engaged or participated in any unsafe or unsound practice in connection with any insured credit union or other business institution, or has committed or engaged in any act, omission, or practice which constitutes a breach of fiduciary duty, or by conduct or practice has evidenced such party's personal dishonesty or unfitness to continue as an institution-related party; and

"(B) such insured credit union or other business institution has suffered or will probably suffer financial loss or other damage, or the interests of its insured members have been or could be prejudiced by reason of such violation, practice, or breach, or the institution-related party has received financial gain by reason of such violation, practice, or breach the Board may serve upon such institution-related party a written notice of its intention to remove such party from office or to prohibit such party's further participation in any manner in the conduct of the affairs of any insured credit union."

(8) in subsection (g), by striking subparagraph (7) and by redesignating paragraphs (3) through (6) of subsection (g) as paragraphs (2) through (5), respectively, and by amending paragraph (3) (as so redesignated) to read as follows:

"(3) In respect to any institution-related party referred to in paragraph (1) or (2) of this subsection, the Board may, if it deems necessary for the protection of the credit union or the interests of its members, by written order to such effect served upon such party, suspend that party from office or prohibit that party from further participation in any manner in the conduct of the affairs of the credit union. Such suspension or prohibition shall become effective upon service of such order on the institution-related party and, unless stayed by a court in proceedings authorized by paragraph (5) of this subsection, shall remain in effect pending the completion of the administrative proceedings pursuant to the notice served under paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection and until such time as the Board shall dismiss the charges specified in such notice, or, if an order of removal or prohibition is issued against such party, until the effective date of any such order. Copies of any order issued pursuant to this paragraph also shall be served upon any institution where the party involved is presently associated.";

(9) in subsection (g)(5), as redesignated, by striking "(4)" and inserting "(3)", and by striking "(1), (2), or (3)" and inserting "(1) or (2)";

(10) in subsection (k)(2)(A), by replacing the words "$1,000 per day during which such violation continues" with the words "$25,000 for each day such violation continues. Notwithstanding the foregoing for violations made with reckless disregard for the safety and soundness of the institution, the Board, in its discretion may assess a penalty of not more than $1,000,000 per day for each day such violation continues.";

(11) by adding the following new subparagraphs (3) and (4) to subsection (k):

"(3)(A) Any insured credit union which, and any director or officer of such credit union or other person participating in the conduct of the affairs of such credit union who, has violated any law or regulation on which no civil penalty has been assessed under any other provision of law, or any condition imposed in writing by the Board in connection with the grant of any application or other request by such credit union, or has breached any fiduciary duty or engaged in any unsafe or unsound practice, where such breach or practice has lead to a loss to the credit union or pecuniary gain to the institution-related party, shall pay a civil penalty of not more than $25,000 for each day such violation continues. Notwithstanding the foregoing, for violations made with reckless disregard for the safety and soundness of the institution, the Board, in its discretion, may assess a penalty of not more than $1,000,000 per day for each day such violation continues.

"(B) Any penalty imposed under subparagraph (A) shall be assessed, determined, reviewed, and collected in the manner provided in paragraph (2) for any penalty imposed under such paragraph.

"(C)(i) The assessment of any penalty under subparagraph (A) with respect to any violation shall not preclude the appropriate Federal banking agency from—

"(I) issuing any order under subsection (e), (f), or (g) with respect to such violation; or

"(II) taking any other action authorized by any such subsection with respect to such violation.

"(ii) No civil penalty may be imposed under subparagraph (A) for any violation for which a civil penalty is imposed under paragraph (2) or other provision of law.

"(4) The jurisdiction and authority of the Board to proceed under this section against any institution-related party shall not be affected by the resignation, termination of employment, or other separation of such person from an insured credit union.";

(12) in the first sentence of paragraph (3)(A) of subsection (k), by inserting after "this section" the following: "or any condition imposed in writing by the Board in connection with the granting of any application or other request by the credit union", and by striking "subsection (e), (f), or (g)" and inserting "subsection (e), (f), or (p)";

(13) by amending subsection (1) to read as follows:

"(1) Any person against whom there is outstanding and effective any order served upon such person under paragraph (3) or (4) of subsection (g) or under subsection (i) who, directly or indirectly, without the prior written approval of the Board participates in any manner in the conduct of the affairs of—

"(A) any insured institution,

"(B) any bank holding company or subsidiary of a bank holding company (as those terms are defined in the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956),

"(C) any organization organized and operated under section 25A of the Federal Reserve Act or operating under section 25 of the Federal Reserve Act,

"(D) any savings and loan holding company or subsidiary of a savings and loan holding company, or

"(E)(1) any institution chartered under the Farm Credit Act of 1971, from which such person has been suspended, removed, or prohibited, or solicits or procures, or transfers or attempts to transfer, or votes or attempts to vote any proxies, consents, or authorization in respect to any voting rights in such institution; or

"(2) votes for a director, or serves or acts as a director, officer, committee member, employee, or agent, or otherwise participates in any manner in the conduct of the affairs of any insured institution, any bank holding company or subsidiary thereof, or any other institution described in paragraph (1) of this subsection.

shall be fined not more than $1,000,000 or imprisoned for not more than five years, or both. Any order issued under subsection (g) of this section may prohibit any act that would violate this subsection.";

(14) by striking subsection (m) and redesignating subsections (n), (o), (p), and (q) of this section as subsections (m), (n), (o), and (p), respectively; and

(15) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs, (q), (r), (s), and (t):

"(q) (A) The Board, within its discretion, after notification of the Attorney General may pay a reward to a person who provides original information which directly leads to recovery of a criminal fine or restitution or civil penalty under this title, or under section 215, 656, 657, 1005, 1006, 1007, 1014, 1344 or 3663 or of a forfeiture under section 983 or 984 of title 18, United States Code, or penalty under this section, which exceeds $50,000.

"(B) The Board may not pay more than 25 per cent of the amount of the fine, penalty or forfeiture or $100,000, whichever is less.

"(C) An officer or employee of the United States, State, or local government who provides information described in paragraph (A), obtained in the performance of official duties, is not eligible for a reward under this section.

"(D) A reward decision or decision not to make a reward made pursuant to this section by the Board is final and not reviewable by any court.

"(r)(1) No federally insured credit union may discharge or otherwise discriminate against any employee with respect to compensation, terms, conditions or privileges of employment because the employee (or any person acting pursuant to the request of the employee) provided information to any financial institution regulatory authority or to the Department of Justice regarding a possible violation of any law or regulation by the financial institution or its officers, directors or employees.

"(2) Any employee or former employee who believes he has been discharged or discriminated against in violation of paragraph (1) may file a complaint in federal district court within two years from the date of such discharge or discrimination.

"(3) If the district court determines that a violation of paragraph (1) has occurred, it shall order the financial institution who committed the violation to reinstate the employee to his former position together with compensatory damages and otherwise remedy any past discrimination.

"(4) The protections of this subsection do not apply to an employee who deliberately caused the alleged violation of law or regulation.

"(s) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section:

"(1) The term 'appropriate Federal regulatory agency' has the same meaning as in section 8(k) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act.

"(2) The terms 'cease-and-desist order which has become final' and 'order which has become final' mean a cease-and-desist order or other order issued by the Board (A) with the consent of the credit union or the institution-related party concerned; (B) with respect to which no petition for review of the action of the agency has been filed and perfected in a court of appeals as specified in paragraph (2) of subsection (j) of this section; (C) with respect to which the action of the court in which such a petition is so filed is not subject to further review by the Supreme Court of the United States in proceedings provided for in that paragraph; or (D) under paragraphs (1) or (3) of subsection (i) of this section.

"(3) The term 'institution-related party' means a director, officer, committee member, employee, agent, independent contractor, or other person participating in the conduct of the affairs of an insured credit union.

"(4) The term 'insured institution' means an insured credit union, as defined in section 101, or a depository institution whose accounts are insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

"(5) The term 'violation' includes without limitation any action (alone or with another or others) for or toward causing, bringing about, participating in, counseling, or aiding or abetting a violation.

"(t) The authority granted to the Board under this section shall be in addition to, and not restricted by, any other authority provided by Federal or State law.".

SEC. 912. AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 205.—Section 205 of the Federal Credit Union Act (12 U.S.C. 1785) is amended—

(1) in the first sentence of subsection (d), by inserting after the phrase "insured credit union", the phrase "or shall participate in the conduct of the affairs of such insured credit union";

(2) by striking the second sentence of subsection (d) and inserting "For each violation of this subsection, the credit union or the individual involved shall pay a civil penalty of not more than $25,000 for each day such violation continues. Notwithstanding the foregoing, for violations made with reckless disregard for the safety and soundness of the institution, the Board, in its discretion may assess a penalty of not more than $1,000,000 per day for each day such violation continues. The Board may recover the costs of penalty assessment and collection for its use."; and

(3) in the first sentence of paragraph (2) of subsection (e), by inserting a period after the word "standards" and striking the phrase "and shall require the submission of periodic reports with respect to the installation, maintenance, and operation of security devices and procedures".

SEC. 913. AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 202.—Section 202(a)(3) of the Federal Credit Union Act (12 U.S.C. 1782(a)(3) is amended by striking out the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following new sentences: "Any insured credit union which—

"(A) fails to submit or publish any report required under this subsection or section 106 within the period of time specified by the Board; or

"(B) submits or publishes any false, misleading, or incomplete report or information shall be subject to a penalty for such failure, submission, or publication or false, misleading, or incomplete submission of not more than $25,000 for each day during which such failure continues or for each day from the time of submission or publication until such false, misleading, or incomplete report or information is corrected. Notwithstanding the foregoing, for violations made with reckless disregard for the safety and soundness of a credit union, the Board, in its discretion, may assess a penalty of not more than $1,000,000 for each day during which such failure continues or for each day from the time of submission or publication until such false, misleading, or incomplete report or information is corrected. Any penalty imposed by the preceding sentence shall be assessed and collected by the Board in the manner provided in section 206(k)(2) (for penalties imposed under such section), and any such assessment (including the determination of the amount of the penalty) shall be subject to the provisions of such section.".

Subtitle D—Right to Financial Privacy Act

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (6) and (7) as paragraphs (7) and (8), respectively; and

(2) by deleting in paragraph (7), as redesignated, all before subparagraph (A) and inserting in lieu thereof:

"(7) 'supervisory agency' means with respect to any particular financial institution, holding company or any subsidiary of a financial institution or holding company, any of the following which has statutory authority to examine the financial condition, business operations or records or transactions of that institution, holding company or subsidiary—"; and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (5) the following new paragraph (6) to read as follows:

"(6) 'Holding company' means any 'bank holding company' as defined in section 2 and any company described in section 3(f)(1) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (12 U.S.C. 1841), or any 'savings and loan holding company' as defined in the National Home Owners' Loan Act.".

(b) Section 1113 of the Right of Financial Privacy Act of 1978 (Title XI of Public Law 95-630, 12 U.S.C. 3413(b)) is amended—

(1) by amending subsection (b) to read as follows:

"(b) Nothing in this chapter applies to the examination by or disclosure to any supervisory, agency of financial records or information in the exercise of its supervisory, regulatory or monetary functions, including conservatorship or receivership functions, with respect to any financial institution, holding company or any subsidiary of a financial institution or holding company or any officer, director, employee, agent or other person participating in the affairs thereof."; and

(2) by adding new paragraphs (m) and (n) as follows:

"(m) Nothing in this title shall apply to the examination by or disclosure to employees or agents of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System or any Federal Reserve Bank of financial records or information in the exercise of the Federal Reserve System's authority to extend credit to depository institutions or others.

"(n) Nothing in this title shall apply to the examination by or disclosure to the Resolution Trust Corporation or its employees or agents of financial records or information in the exercise of its conservatorship, receivership or liquidation functions with respect to a financial institution.".

(c) Section 3420 of the Right to Financial Privacy Act of 1978 (12 U.S.C. 3420) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "A financial institution on which a grand jury subpoena has been served, relating to a possible violation of sections 215, 656, 657, 1005, 1006, 1007, 1008, 1014, or 1344 of title 18, United States Code, shall not notify the customer whose records are sought or any other party about the existence or contents of the subpoena or information that has been furnished to the grand jury in response to that subpoena. Any person who violates the requirement of the preceding sentence shall be punished as provided in section 1510(b) of title 18, United States Code.".

Subtitle E—Criminal Enhancements

SEC. 915. INCREASED CRIMINAL PENALTIES AND CIVIL PENALTIES FOR CERTAIN FINANCIAL INSTITUTION OFFENSES.—

(a) Section 215, title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by replacing "$5,000" with "$1,000,000" and the word "five" with the word "twenty" in subsection 215(a) and removing the period at the end thereof and adding the following: "and shall be subject to a civil penalty of $1,000,000 or the amount of the thing given, offered, promised, solicited, demanded, accepted or agreed to be accepted, whichever is greater. Civil and criminal penalties under this section are cumulative." and

(2) in subsection 215(b)—

(A) by replacing the words "a bank" in subsection (b)(1) with the words "an institution"; and

(B) by removing subsections (b)(2) and (b)(8) and by redesignating subsections (b)(3), (4), (5), (6), and (7) subsections (b)(2), (3), (4), (5), and (6); and

(3) by adding new subsections (e) and (f) as follows:

"(e) The Attorney General may bring a civil action against any person who violates the provisions of the preceding section. The suit may be brought in any district court of the United States or the United States courts of any territory in which the defendant or, in the case of multiple defendants, any one defendant resides, is doing business, may be found, or in which any proscribed act was committed. A subpoena requiring the attendance of a witness at trial or hearing conducted under this provision may be served at any place in the United States. The court in which such action is brought shall determine the existence of a violation upon a preponderance of the evidence, shall assess the civil penalty, and shall have power to grant such other relief, including injunctions, as may be appropriate. Such remedies shall be in addition to any other remedy available under statutory or common law.

"(f)(1) For the purpose of any civil investigation or proceeding under this chapter, the Attorney General or any officer designated by him is empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, subpoena witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, or other records which the Attorney General deems relevant or material to the inquiry. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of any such records may be required from any place in the United States or any State at any designated place of hearing.

"(2) In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpoena issued to, any person, the Attorney General may invoke the aid of any court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such investigation or proceeding is carried on, or where such person resides or carries on business, in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, and other records. And such court may issue an order requiring such person to appear before the Attorney General or officer designated by the Attorney General to produce records, if so ordered, or to give testimony touching upon the matter under civil investigation or in question. Any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. All process in any such case may be served in the judicial district where such person is an inhabitant or wherever he may be found. Any person who shall, without just cause, fail or refuse to attend and testify or to answer any lawful inquiry or to produce books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, and other records, if in his power so to do, in obedience to the subpoena of the Attorney General shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 or to imprisonment for a term of not more than one year, or both.".

(b) Section 656, title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by replacing "$5,000" with the words "$1,000,000 or twice the amount authorized by section 3571(d) of this title, whichever is greater," and the word "five" with the word "twenty";

(2) by removing the period at the end of the first paragraph and adding the following:

"and shall be subject to a civil penalty of $1,000,000 for each day the violation continues or the amount embezzled, abstracted, purloined or willfully misapplied and any pecuniary gain attributable to that amount, or $5,000,000, whichever is greater. Civil and criminal penalties and restitution under this section are cumulative."; and

(3) by redesignating current section 656 as 656(a) and by adding new subsections (b) and (c) as follows:

"(b) The Attorney General may bring a civil action against any person who violates the provisions of the preceding section. The suit may be brought in any district court of the United States or the United States courts of any territory in which the defendant or, in the case of multiple defendants, any one defendant resides, is doing business, may be found, or in which any proscribed act was committed. A subpoena requiring the attendance of a witness at trial or hearing conducted under this provision may be served at any place in the United States. The court in which such action is brought shall determine the existence of a violation upon a preponderance of the evidence, shall assess the civil penalty, and shall have power to grant such other relief, including injunctions, as may be appropriate. Such remedies shall be in addition to any other remedy available under statutory or common law."

"(c)(1) For the purpose of any civil investigation or proceeding under this chapter, the Attorney General or any officer designated by him is empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, subpoena witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, or other records which the Attorney General deems relevant or material to the inquiry. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of any such records may be required from any place in the United States or any State at any designated place of hearing.

"(2) In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpoena issued to, any person, the Attorney General may invoke the aid of any court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such investigation or proceeding is carried on, or where such person resides or carries on business, in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, and other records. And such court may issue an order requiring such person to appear before the Attorney General or officer designated by the Attorney General to produce records, if so ordered, or to give testimony touching upon the matter under civil investigation or in question. Any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. All process in any such case may be served in the judicial district where such person is an inhabitant or wherever he may be found. Any person who shall, without just cause, fail or refuse to attend and testify or to answer any lawful inquiry or to produce books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, and other records, if in his power so to do, in obedience to the subpoena of the Attorney General shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 or to imprisonment for a term of not more than one year, or both.".

(c) Section 657, title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by replacing "$5,000" with the words "$1,000,000 or twice the amount authorized by section 3571(d) of this title, whichever is greater, and any pecuniary gain attributable to that amount," and the word "five" with the word "twenty";

(2) by removing the period at the end of the section and adding the following:

"and shall be subject to a civil penalty of $1,000,000 for each day the violation continues or the amount embezzled, abstracted, purloined or willfully misapplied and any pecuniary gain attributable to that amount, or $5,000,000, whichever is greater. Civil and criminal penalties and restitution under this section are cumulative."; and

(3) by redesignating current section 657 as 657(a) and by adding new subsections (b) and (c) as follows:

"(b) The Attorney General may bring a civil action against any person who violates the provisions of the preceding section. The suit may be brought in any district court of the United States or the United States courts of any territory in which the defendant or, in the case of multiple defendants, any one defendant resides, is doing business, may be found, or in which any proscribed act was committed. A subpoena requiring the attendance of a witness at trial or hearing conducted under this provision may be served at any place in the United States. The court in which such action is brought shall determine the existence of a violation upon a preponderance of the evidence, shall assess the civil penalty, and shall have power to grant such other relief, including injunctions, as may be appropriate. Such remedies shall be in addition to any other remedy available under statutory or common law."

"(c)(1) For the purpose of any civil investigation or proceeding under this chapter, the Attorney General or any officer designated by him is empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, subpoena witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, or other records which the Attorney General deems relevant or material to the inquiry. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of any such records may be required from any place in the United States or any State at any designated place of hearing.

"(2) In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpoena issued to, any person, the Attorney General may invoke the aid of any court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such investigation or proceeding is carried on, or where such person resides or carries on business, in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, and other records. And such court may issue an order requiring such person to appear before the Attorney General or officer designated by the Attorney General to produce records, if so ordered, or to give testimony touching upon the matter under civil investigation or in question. And any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. All process in any such case may be served in the judicial district whereof such person is an inhabitant or wherever he may be found. Any person who shall, without just cause, fail or refuse to attend and testify or to answer any lawful inquiry or to produce books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, and other records, if in his power so to do, in obedience to the subpoena of the Attorney General shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 or to imprisonment for a term of not more than one year, or both.".

(d) Section 1005, title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by adding the words "bank or savings and loan holding company," after the words "member bank," in the third clause thereof;

(2) by replacing the "—" at the end of the third clause following the words "Federal Reserve System" with a semicolon and adding a fourth clause immediately thereafter as follows:

"Whoever with intent to defraud the United States or any agency thereof, or any financial institution referred to in this section, participates or shares in or receives directly or indirectly any money, profit, property, or benefits through any transaction, loan, commission, contract, or any other act of any such financial institution".

(3) by replacing "$5,000" with the words "$1,000,000 or twice the amount authorized by section 3571(d) of this title, whichever is greater" and the word "five" with the word "twenty";

(4) by removing the period at the end of the first paragraph and by adding the following:

"and shall be subject to a civil penalty of $1,000,000 for each day the violation continues or the amount of any pecuniary gain attributable to the proscribed actions, or $5,000,000, whichever is greater. Civil and criminal penalties and restriction under this section are cumulative."; and

(5) by redesignating current section 1005 as 1005(a) and by adding new subsections (b) and (c) as follows:

"(b) The Attorney General may bring a civil action against any person who violates the provisions of the preceding section. The suit may be brought in any district court of the United States or the United States courts of any territory in which the defendant or, in the case of multiple defendants, any one defendant resides, is doing business, may be found, or in which any proscribed act was committed. A subpoena requiring the attendance of a witness at trial or hearing conducted under this provision may be served at any place in the United States. The court in which such action is brought shall determine the existence of a violation upon a preponderance of the evidence, shall assess the civil penalty, and shall have power to grant such other relief, including injunctions, as may be appropriate. Such remedies shall be in addition to any other remedy available under statutory or common law."

"(c)(1) For the purpose of any civil investigation or proceeding under this chapter, the Attorney General or any officer designated by him is empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, subpoena witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, or other records which the Attorney General deems relevant or material to the inquiry. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of any such records may be required from any place in the United States or any State at any designated place of hearing.

"(2) In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpoena issued, to, any person, the Attorney General may invoke the aid of any court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such investigation or proceeding is carried on, or where such person resides or carries on business, in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, and other records. And such court may issue an order requiring such person to appear before the Attorney General or officer designated by the Attorney General to produce records, if so ordered, or to give testimony touching upon the matter under civil investigation or in question. And any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. All process in any such case may be served in the judicial district where such person is an inhabitant or wherever he may be found. Any person who shall, without just cause, fail or refuse to attend and testify or to answer any lawful inquiry or to produce books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, and other records, if in his power so to do, in obedience to the subpoena of the Attorney General shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 or to imprisonment for a term of not more than one year, or both.".

(e) Section 1006, title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by replacing "$5,000" with the words "$1,000,000 or twice the amount authorized by section 3571(d) of this title, whichever is greater" and the word "five" with the word "twenty";

(2) by removing the period at the end of the section and adding the following: "and shall be subject to a civil penalty of $1,000,000 for each day the violation continues or the amount of pecuniary gain attributable to the proscribed actions, or $5,000,000, whichever is greater. Civil and criminal penalties and restitution under this section are cumulative."; and

(3) by redesignating current section 1006 as 1006(a) and by adding new subsections (b) and (c) as follows:

"(b) The Attorney General may bring a civil action against any person who violates the provisions of the preceding section. The suit may be brought in any district court of the United States or the United States courts of any territory in which the defendant or, in the case of multiple defendants, any one defendant resides, is doing business, may be found, or in which any proscribed act was committed. A subpoena requiring the attendance of a witness at trial or hearing conducted under this provision may be served at any place in the United States. The court in which such action is brought shall determine the existence of a violation upon a preponderance of the evidence, shall assess the civil penalty, and shall have power to grant such other relief, including injunctions, as may be appropriate. Such remedies shall be in addition to any other remedy available under statutory or common law."

"(c)(1) For the purpose of any civil investigation or proceeding under this chapter, the Attorney General or any officer designated by him is empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, subpoena witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, or other records which the Attorney General deems relevant or material to the inquiry. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of any such records may be required from any place in the United States or any State at any designated place of hearing.

"(2) In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpoena issued to, any person, the Attorney General may invoke the aid of any court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such investigation or proceeding is carried on, or where such person resides or carries on business, in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, and other records. And such court may issue an order requiring such person to appear before the Attorney General or officer designated by the Attorney General to produce records, if so ordered, or to give testimony touching upon the matter under civil investigation or in question. And any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. All process in any such case may be served in the judicial district where such person is an inhabitant or wherever he may be found. Any person who shall, without just cause, fail or refuse to attend and testify or to answer any lawful inquiry or to produce books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, and other records, if in his power so to do, in obedience to the subpoena of the Attorney General shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 or to imprisonment for a term of not more than one year, or both.".

(f) Section 1007, title 18, United States Code, is amended to read:

"(a) Whoever, for the purpose of inducing the insurance of the accounts of any institution by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, for the purpose of obtaining any loan from the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, for the purpose of obtaining any extension or renewal of such insurance or such loan, or for the purpose of obtaining the acceptance, release, or substitution of security for such loan, or for the purpose of inducing the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to purchase any assets, or for the purpose of obtaining the payment of any insured deposit or transferred deposit or the allowance, approval, or payment of any claim, or for the purpose of influencing in any way the action of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, makes, passes, utters, or publishes any statement, knowing it to be false; utters, forges, or counterfeits any instrument, paper, or document, or utters, publishes, or passes as true any instrument, paper or document, knowing it to have been uttered, forged, or counterfeited; or willfully overvalues any security, asset, or income, of any institution insured or applying for insurance by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall be fined not more than $1,000,000 or twice the amount authorized by section 3571(d) of this title, whichever is greater, or imprisoned for not more than twenty years, or both, and shall be subject to a civil penalty of $1,000,000 for each day the violation continues, or the amount of pecuniary gain attributable to the proscribed actions, or $5,000,000, whichever is greater. Civil and criminal penalties and restitution under this section are cumulative.

"(b) The Attorney General may bring a civil action against any person who violates the provisions of the preceding section. The suit may be brought in any district court of the United States or the United States courts of any territory in which the defendant or, in the case of multiple defendants, any one defendant resides, is doing business, may be found, or in which any proscribed act was committed. A subpoena requiring the attendance of a witness at trial or hearing conducted under this provision may be served at any place in the United States. The court in which such action is brought shall determine the existence of a violation upon a preponderance of the evidence, shall assess the civil penalty, and shall have power to grant such other relief, including injunctions, as may be appropriate. Such remedies shall be in addition to any other remedy available under statutory or common law."

"(c)(1) For the purpose of any civil investigation or proceeding under this chapter, the Attorney General or any officer designated by him is empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, subpoena witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, or other records which the Attorney General deems relevant or material to the inquiry. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of any such records may be required from any place in the United States or any State at any designated place of hearing.

"(2) In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpoena issued to, any person, the Attorney General may invoke the aid of any court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such investigation or proceeding is carried on, or where such person resides or carries on business, in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers correspondence, memoranda, and other records. And such court may issue an order requiring such person to appear before the Attorney General or officer designated by the Attorney General to produce records, if so ordered, or to give testimony touching upon the matter under civil investigation or in question. And any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. All process in any such case may be served in the judicial district where such person is an inhabitant or wherever he may be found. Any person who shall, without just cause, fail or refuse to attend and testify or to answer any lawful inquiry or to produce books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, and other records, if in his power so to do, in obedience to the subpoena of the Attorney General shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 or to imprisonment for a term of not more than one year, or both.".

(g) Section 1008, title 18, United States Code, is repealed.

(h) Section 1014, title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by replacing "$5,000" with the words "$1,000,000 or twice the amount authorized by section 3571(d) of this title, whichever is greater" and the word "two" with the word "twenty";

(2) by removing the period at the end of the first paragraph and by adding the following:

"and shall be subject to a civil penalty of $1,000,000 for each day the violation continues, or the amount of any pecuniary gain attributable to the false statement or report or overvaluation, or $5,000,000, whichever is greater. Civil and criminal penalties and restitution under this section are cumulative."; and

(3) by redesignating current section 1014 as 1014(a) and by adding new subsections (b) and (c) as follows:

"(b) The Attorney General may bring a civil action against any person who violates the provisions of the preceding section. The suit may be brought in any district court of the United States or the United States courts of any territory in which the defendant or, in the case of multiple defendants, any one defendant resides, is doing business, may be found, or in which any proscribed act was committed. A subpoena requiring the attendance of a witness at trial or hearing conducted under this provision may be served at any place in the United States. The court in which such action is brought shall determine the existence of a violation upon a preponderance of the evidence, shall assess the civil penalty, and shall have power to grant such other relief, including injunctions, as may be appropriate. Such remedies shall be in addition to any other remedy available under statutory or common law.

"(c)(1) For the purpose of any civil investigation or proceeding under this chapter, the Attorney General or any officer designated by him is empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, subpoena witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, or other records which the Attorney General deems relevant or material to the inquiry. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of any such records may be required from any place in the United States or any State at any designated place of hearing.

"(2) In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpoena issued to, any person, the Attorney General may invoke the aid of any court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such investigation or proceeding is carried on, or where such person resides or carries on business, in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, and other records. And such court may issue an order requiring such person to appear before the Attorney General or officer designated by the Attorney General to produce records, if so ordered, or to give testimony touching upon the matter under civil investigation or in question. And any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. All process in any such case may be served in the judicial district where such person is an inhabitant or wherever he may be found. Any person who shall, without just cause, fail or refuse to attend and testify or to answer any lawful inquiry or to produce books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, and other records, if in his power so to do, in obedience to the subpoena of the Attorney General shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 or to imprisonment for a term of not more than one year, or both.".

(i) Section 1344(a), title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by replacing "$10,000" with the words "$1,000,000 or twice the amount authorized by section 3517(d) of this title, whichever is greater" and the word "five" with the word "twenty";

(2) by removing the period at the end and adding the following: "and shall be subject to a civil penalty of $1,000,000 for each day the violation continues or the amount of pecuniary gain attributable to the fraud, or $5,000,000, whichever is greater. Civil and criminal penalties and restitution under this section are cumulative."; and

(3) by adding new subsections (c) and (d) as follows:

"(c) The Attorney General may bring a civil action against any person who violates the provisions of the preceding section. The suit may be brought in any district court of the United States or the United States courts of any territory in which the defendant or, in the case of multiple defendants, any one defendant resides, is doing business, may be found, or in which any proscribed act was committed. A subpoena requiring the attendance of a witness at trial or hearing conducted under this provision may be served at any place in the United States. The court in which such action is brought shall determine the existence of a violation upon a preponderance of the evidence, shall assess the civil penalty, and shall have power to grant such other relief, including injunctions, as may be appropriate. Such remedies shall be in addition to any other remedy available under statutory or common law."

"(d)(1) For the purpose of any civil investigation or proceeding under this chapter, the Attorney General or any officer designated by him is empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, subpoena witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, or other records which the Attorney General deems relevant or material to the inquiry. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of any such records may be required from any place in the United States or any State at any designated place of hearing.

"(2) In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpoena issued to, any person, the Attorney General may invoke the aid of any court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such investigation or proceeding is carried on, or where such person resides or carries on business, in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, and other records. And such court may issue an order requiring such person to appear before the Attorney General or officer designated by the Attorney General to produce records, if so ordered, or to give testimony touching upon the matter under civil investigation or in question. And any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. All process in any such case may be served in the judicial district where such person is an inhabitant or wherever he may be found. Any person who shall, without just cause, fail or refuse to attend and testify or to answer any lawful inquiry or to produce books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, and other records, if in his power so to do, in obedience to the subpoena or the Attorney General shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 or to imprisonment for a term of not more than one year, or both."

(j) Chapter 213 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"No person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for violation of any provision of sections 215, 656, 657, 1005, 1006, 1007, 1008, 1014 and 1344 of this title, or for conspiracy to commit violations of any of the aforementioned sections, unless the indictment is returned or the information is filed within ten years after the commission of the offense. This section shall apply to any of the aforementioned offenses committed before the effective date of this section, if the statute of limitations applicable to that offense under this chapter had not run as of the effective date of this section.".

(k) Pursuant to its authority under section 994(p) of title 28, United States Code, and section 21 of the Sentencing Act of 1987, the United States Sentencing Commission shall promulgate guidelines, or shall amend existing guidelines, to provide that a defendant convicted of violating section 215, 656, 657, 1005, 1006, 1007, 1008, 1014, or 1344 of title 18, United States Code, under circumstances which substantially jeopardize the safety and soundness of a financial institution shall be assigned an offense level under chapter 2 of the sentencing guidelines that is not less than level 24. If the sentencing guidelines are amended after the effective date of this section, the Sentencing Commission shall implement the instruction set forth in this provision so as to achieve a comparable result.

SEC. 916. MISCELLANEOUS REVISIONS TO TITLE 18.—

(a) The term "Federal Home Loan Bank Board" is replaced by the term "Federal Home Loan Bank System" wherever it appears.

(b) Section 212 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by replacing the word "bank" or "banks" wherever they appear with the words "financial institution" or "financial institutions", respectively (except in the phrases "land bank" and "member banks") and by adding in the second sentence the words "Federal Home Loan Bank System" after the words "Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation".

(c) Section 213 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by replacing the words "banks the deposits of which" with the words "financial institutions the deposits of which".

(d) Section 1009, title 18, United States Code, is repealed.

(e) Section 1030, title 18, United States Code, is amended by removing the words "a bank" from subsection (e)(4)(A) and replacing it with the words "an institution," by removing subsection (e)(4)(C), and by redesignating subsections (e)(4)(D), (E), (F), (G), and (H), as subsections (e)(4)(C), (D), (E), (F), and (G), respectively.

(f) Section 1114, title 18, United States Code, is amended by removing the words "the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation,".

(g) Section 1306, title 18, is amended by removing the words "section 20 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, or section 410 of the National Housing Act" and replacing it with the words "or section 20 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act."

(h) Section 1510, title 18, United States Code, is amended (1) by redesignating subsection (b) as subsection (c), and (2) by adding a new subsection (b) as follows: "Whoever, being an officer, director, partner, or employee of a financial institution (as that term is defined in section 3401 of title 12, United States Code), directly or indirectly notifies a customer of that financial institution whose financial records are sought by a grand jury subpoena served on that financial institution, relating to a possible violation of sections 215, 656, 657, 1005, 1006, 1007, 1008, 1014, or 1344 of title 18, United States Code, or any other party about the existence or contents of the subpoena or information that has been furnished to the grand jury in response to that subpoena shall be fined not more than $1,000,000 or twice the amount authorized by section 3571(d) of this title, whichever is greater, or be imprisoned not more than twenty years, or both.".

(i) Section 2113, title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by removing from subsection (f) the words "any bank the deposits of which" and replacing it with "any institution the deposits of which";

(2) by adding before the period at the end of subsection (h) the words ", and any 'Federal credit union' as defined in section 2 of the Federal Credit Union Act"; and

(3) by removing subsection (g) and redesignating subsection (h) as subsection (g).

(j) Section 1961(1), title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding the words "Sections 656 and 657 (relating to financial institution embezzlement)," after the words "(relating to counterfeiting)," and the words "section 1344 (relating to financial institution fraud)," following the words "(relating to wire fraud),".

SEC. 917. CIVIL AND CRIMINAL FORFEITURE.—

(A) Title 18, United States Code is amended by adding the following new sections 983 and 984 as follows:

"§ 983. Civil forfeiture relating to certain financial institution violations

"(a) Any property, real or personal, which constitutes or is derived from proceeds traceable to a violation of sections 215, 656, 657, 1005, 1006, 1007, 1014, or 1344 of this title affecting a federally insured financial institution, shall be subject to forfeiture to the United States, except that no property shall be forfeited under this section, to the extent of the interest of an owner or lienholder by reason of any act or omission established by that owner or lienholder to have been committed or omitted without the knowledge or consent of that owner or lienholder.

"(b) Any property subject to civil forfeiture to the United States under this section may be seized by the Attorney General upon process issued pursuant to the Supplemental Rules for Certain Admiralty and Maritime Claims by any district court of the United States having jurisdiction over the property, except that seizure without such process may be made when the seizure is incident to a lawful arrest or search or if the Attorney General has probable cause to believe that the property is subject to civil forfeiture under this section. In the event of seizure pursuant to paragraph (1) or (2) of this subsection, proceedings under subsection (d) of this section shall be instituted promptly. The government may request the issuance of a warrant authorizing the seizure of property subject to forfeiture under this section in the same manner as provided for a search warrant under the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

"(c) Property taken or detained under this section shall not be repleviable, but shall be deemed to be in the custody of the Attorney General, subject only to the orders and decrees of the court or the official having jurisdiction thereof. Whenever property is seized under any of the provisions of this subchapter, the Attorney General may—

"(1) place the property under seal;

"(2) remove the property to a place designated by him; or

"(3) require that the General Services Administration take custody of the property and remove it, if practicable, to an appropriate location for disposition in accordance with law.

"(d) The provisions of law relating to the seizure, summary and judicial forfeiture, and condemnation of property for violation of customs laws; the disposition of such property or the proceeds from the sale thereof; the remission or mitigation of such forfeitures; and the compromise of claims shall apply to seizures and forfeitures incurred, or alleged to have been incurred, under this section, insofar as applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions hereof; except that such duties as are imposed upon the customs officer or any other person with respect to the seizure and forfeiture of property under the customs laws shall be performed with respect to seizures of property under this section by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and with respect to custody and forfeitures under this section by such officers, agents, or other persons as may be authorized or designated for that purpose by the Attorney General.

"(e)(1) Whenever property is forfeited under this section, the Attorney General may sell any forfeited property which is not required to be destroyed by law and which is not harmful to the public.

"(2)(a) The Attorney General shall transfer the property or proceeds from the sale of such property to any federal financial institution regulatory agency to the extent of such agency's contribution of resources to, or expenses involved in, the seizures and forfeiture, and the investigation leading directly to the seizure and forfeiture, of such property; and

"(b) The Attorney General may retrain property and proceeds from the sale of such property to the extent of the Attorney General's contribution of resources to, or expenses involved in, the seizure and forfeiture, and the investigation leading directly to the seizure and forfeiture, of such property. Such expenses include, but are not limited to, expenses for maintenance of custody, advertising, and court cost.

"(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, if the affected financial institution is in receivership, property forfeited pursuant to this section, or proceeds from the sale of such property, less any amount transferred pursuant to subsection (e)(2) of this section, shall be deposited to the General Fund of the Treasury.

"(4) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, if the affected financial institution is not in receivership, property forfeited pursuant to this section, or proceeds from the sale of such property, less any amount transferred pursuant to subsection (e)(2) of this section, shall be deposited to the General Fund of the Treasury or may be made available upon the order of the appropriate federal financial institution as restitution to that financial institution. Amounts received by the financial institution shall be set off against any amounts later recovered by the institution as compensatory damages in any State or Federal proceeding.

"(5) The United States shall not be liable in any action arising out of a transfer made pursuant to subsection (e) (2), (3), or (4).

"(f) All right, title, and interest in property described in subsection (a) of this section shall vest in the United States upon commission of the act giving rise to forfeiture under this section.

"(g) The filing of an indictment or information alleging a violation of law which is also related to a civil forfeiture proceeding under this section shall, upon motion of the United States and for good cause shown, stay the civil forfeiture proceeding.

"(h) In addition to the venue provided for in section 1395 of Title 28 or other provision of law, in the case of property of a defendant charged with a violation that is the basis for forfeiture of the property under this section, a proceeding for forfeiture under this section may be brought in the judicial district in which the defendant owning such property is found or in the judicial district in which the criminal prosecution is brought.

"S 984. Criminal Forfeiture relating to certain financial institution violations

"(a) Any person convicted of an offense under section 215, 656, 657, 1005, 1007, 1014, or 1344 of this title affecting a federally insured financial institution, shall forfeit to the United States, irrespective of any provision of state law, any property constituting, or derived from, proceeds the person obtained directly or indirectly, as the result of such violation. The court, in imposing sentence on such person shall order, in addition to any other sentence imposed, that the person forfeit to the United States all property described in this section.

"(b) Property subject to criminal forfeiture under this section includes—

"(1) real property including things growing on, affixed to, and found in land; and

"(2) tangible and intangible personal property, including rights, privileges, interest, claims and securities.

"(c) All right, title and interest in property described in subsection (a) vests in the United States upon the commission of the act giving rise to forfeiture under this section. Any such property that is subsequently transferred to a person other than the defendant may be the subject of a special verdict of forfeiture and thereafter shall be ordered forfeited to the United States, unless the transferee establishes in a hearing pursuant to subsection (m) that he is a bona fide purchaser for value of such property who at the time of purchase was reasonably without cause to believe that the property was subject to forfeiture under this section.

"(d)(1) Upon application of the United States, the court may enter a restraining order or injunction, require the execution of a satisfactory performance bond, or take any other action to preserve the availability of property described in subsection (a) for forfeiture under this section—

"(A) upon the filing of an indictment or information charging a violation of section 215, 656, 657, 1005, 1006, 1007, 1014, or 1344 of this title and alleging that the property with respect to which the order is sought would, in the event of conviction, be subject to forfeiture under this section; or

"(B) prior to the filing of such an indictment or information, if, after notice to persons appearing to have an interest in the property and opportunity for a hearing, the court determines that—

"(i) there is a substantial probability that the United States will prevail on the issue of forfeiture and that failure to enter the order will result in the property being destroyed, removed from the jurisdiction of the court, or othewise made unavailable for forfeiture; and

"(ii) the need to preserve the availability of the property through the entry of the requested order outweighs the hardship on any party against whom the order is to be entered: "Provided, however, That an order entered pursuant to subparagraph (B) shall be effective for not more than ninety days, unless extended by the court for good cause shown or unless an indictment of information described in subparagraph (A) has been filed.

"(2) A temporary restraining order under this subsection may be entered upon application of the United States without notice or opportunity for a hearing when an information or indictment has not yet been filed with respect to the property, if the United States demonstrates that there is probable cause to believe that the property with respect to which the order is sought would, in the event of conviction, be subject to forfeiture under this section and that provision of notice will jeopardize the availability of the property for forfeiture. Such a temporary order shall expire not more than ten days after the date on which it is entered, unless extended for good cause shown or unless the party against whom it is entered consents to an extension for a longer period. A hearing requested concerning an order entered under this paragraph shall be held at the earliest possible time, and prior to the expiration of the temporary order.

"(3) The court may receive and consider, at a hearing held pursuant to this subsection, evidence and information that would be inadmissible under the Federal Rules of Evidence.

"(e) Upon conviction of a person under section 215, 656, 657, 1005, 1006, 1007, 1014, or 1344 of this title, the court shall enter a judgment of forfeiture of the property to the United States and shall also authorize the Attorney General to seize all property ordered forfeited upon such terms and conditions as the court shall deem proper. Following the entry of an order declaring the property forfeited, the court may, upon application of the United States, enter such appropriate restraining orders or injunctions, require the execution of satisfactory performance bonds, appoint receivers, conservators, appraisers, accountants, or trustees, or take any other action to protect the interest of the United States in the property ordered forfeited. Any income accruing to, or derived from, an enterprise or interest in an enterprise which has been ordered forfeited under this section may be used to offset ordinary and necessary expenses to the enterprise which are required by law, or which are necessary to protect the interests of the United States or third parties.

"(f) Following the seizure of property ordered forfeited under this section, the Attorney General shall direct the disposition of the property by sale or any other commercially feasible means, making due provision for the rights of any innocent persons. Any property right or interest not exercisable by, or transferable for value to, the United States shall expire and not revert to the defendant, nor shall the defendant or any person acting in concert with or on behalf of the defendant be eligible to purchase forfeited property at any sale held by the United States. Upon application of a person, other than the defendant or a person acting in concert with or on behalf of the defendant, the court may restrain or stay the sale or disposition of the property pending the conclusion of any appeal of the criminal case giving rise to the forfeiture, if the applicant demonstrates that proceeding with the sale or disposition of the property will result in irreparable injury, harm or loss to him.

"(g) With respect to property ordered forfeited under this section, the Attorney General is authorized to—

"(1) grant petitions for mitigation or remission of forfeiture, restore forfeited property to victims of the violation, or take any other action to protect the rights of innocent persons which is in the interest of justice and which is not inconsistent with the provisions of this section;

"(2) compromise claims arising under this section;

"(3) award compensation to persons providing information resulting in a forfeiture under this section;

"(4) direct the disposition by the United States of all property ordered forfeited under this section, making due provision for the rights of innocent persons; and

"(5) take appropriate measures necessary to safeguard and maintain property ordered forfeited under this section pending its disposition.

"(h) Except to the extent that they are inconsistent with the provisions of this section, the provisions of sections 983(d) and 983(e) of this title shall apply to a criminal forfeiture under this section.

"(i) Except as provided in subsection (m) of this section, no party claiming an interest in property subject to forfeiture under this section may—

"(1) intervene in a trial or appeal of a criminal case involving the forfeiture of such property under this section; or

"(2) commence an action at law or equity against the United States concerning the validity of his alleged interest in the property subsequent to the filing of an indictment or information alleging that the property is subject to forfeiture under this section.

"(j) The district court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to enter orders as provided in this section without regard to the location of any property which may be subject to forfeiture under this section or which has been ordered forfeited under this section.

"(k) In order to facilitate the identification and location of property declared forfeited and to facilitate the disposition of petitions for remission or mitigation of forfeiture, after the entry of an order declaring property forfeited to the United States, the court may, upon application of the United States, order that the testimony of any witness relating to the property forfeited be taken by deposition and that any designated book, paper, document, record, recording, or other material not privileged be produced at the same time and place, in the same manner as provided for the taking of depositions under Rule 15 or the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

"(l)(1) Following the entry of an order of forfeiture under this section, the United States shall publish notice of the order and of its intent to dispose of the property in such manner as the Attorney General may direct. The Government may also, to the extent practicable, provide direct written notice to any person known to have alleged an interest in the property that is the subject of the order of forfeiture as a substitute for published notice as to those persons so notified.

"(2) Any person, other than the defendant, asserting a legal interest in property which has been ordered forfeited to the United States pursuant to this section may, within thirty days of the final publication of notice or his receipt of notice under paragraph (1), whichever is earlier, petition the court for a hearing to adjudicate the validity of his alleged interest in the property. The hearing shall be held before the court alone, without a jury.

"(3) The petition shall be signed by the petitioner under penalty of perjury and shall set forth the nature and extent of the petitioner's right, title, or interest in the property, the time and circumstances of the petitioner's acquisition of the right, title, or interest in the property, any additional facts supporting the petitioner's claim, and the relief sought.

"(4) The hearing on the petition shall, to the extent practicable and consistent with the interests of justice, be held within thirty days of the filing of the petition. The court may consolidate the hearing on the petition with a hearing on any other petition filed by a person other than the defendant under this subsection.

"(5) At the hearing, the petitioner may testify and present evidence and witnesses on his own behalf, and cross-examine witnesses who appear at the hearing. The United States may present evidence and witnesses in rebuttal and in defense of its claim to the property and cross-examine witnesses who appear at the hearing. In addition to testimony and evidence presented at the hearing, the court shall consider the relevant portions of the record of the criminal case which resulted in the order of forfeiture.

"(6) If, after the hearing, the court determines that the petitioner has established by a preponderance of the evidence that—

"(A) the petitioner has a legal right, title, or interest in the property, and such right, title, or interest renders the order of forfeiture invalid in whole or in part because the right, title, or interest was vested in the petitioner rather than the defendant or was superior to any right, title, or interest of the defendant at the time of the commission of the acts which gave right to the forfeiture of the property under this section; or

"(B) the petitioner is a bona fide purchaser for value of the right, title, or interest in the property and was at the time of the purchase reasonably without cause to believe that the property was subject to forfeiture under this section, the court shall amend the order of forfeiture in accordance with its determination.

"(7) Following the court's disposition of all petitions filed under this subsection, or if no such petitions are filed following the expiration of the period provided in paragraph (2) for the filing of such petitions, the United States shall have clear title to property that is the subject of the order of forfeiture and may warrant good title to any subsequent purchaser or transferee.

"(m) If any of the property described in subsection (a) of this section, as a result of any act or omission of the defendant—

"(1) cannot be located upon the exercise of due diligence;

"(2) has been transferred or sold to, or deposited with, a third party;

"(3) has been placed beyond the jurisdiction of the court;

"(4) has been substantially diminished in value; or

"(5) has been commingled with other property which cannot be divided without difficulty

"the court shall order the forfeiture of any of the property of the defendant up to the value of any property described in paragraph (1) through (5).".

SEC. 918. GRAND JURY AMENDMENTS.—

(a) Paragraphs (A), (B), and (C) of Rule 6(e)(3) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure are amended to read as follows:

"(A) Disclosure otherwise prohibited by this rule of matters occurring before the grand jury, other than its deliberations and the vote of any grand juror, may be made to—

"(i) any attorney for the government for use in the performance by an attorney of the government's duty to enforce federal criminal or civil law; and

"(ii) such government personnel (including personnel of a state or subdivision of a state) as are deemed necessary by an attorney for the government to assist an attorney for the government in the performance of such attorney's duty to enforce federal criminal law.

"(B) Any person to whom matters are disclosed under subparagraph (A)(ii) of this paragraph shall not utilize that grand jury material for any purpose other than assisting an attorney for the government in the performance of such attorney's duty to enforce federal criminal or civil law. An attorney for the government shall promptly provide the district court, before which was impaneled the grand jury whose material has been so disclosed, with the names of the persons to whom such disclosure has been made, and shall certify that the attorney has advised such persons of their obligation of secrecy under this rule.

"(C) Disclosure otherwise prohibited by this rule of matters occurring before the grand jury may also be made—

"(i) when so directed by a court, upon a showing of particularized need, preliminarily to or in connection with a judicial proceeding;

"(ii) when permitted by a court at the request of the defendant, upon a showing that grounds may exist for a motion to dismiss the indictment because of matters occurring before the grand jury;

"(iii) when the disclosure is made by an attorney for the government to another federal grand jury;

"(iv) when permitted by a court at the request of an attorney for the government, upon a showing that such matters may disclose a violation of state criminal law, to an appropriate official of a state or subdivision of a state for the purpose of enforcing such law; or

"(v) at the request of an attorney for the government, and when so permitted by a court upon a showing of substantial need, to personnel of any department or agency of the United States (a) when such personnel are deemed necessary to provide assistance to an attorney for the government in the performance of such attorney's duty to enforce federal civil law, or (b) for use in relation to any matter within the jurisdiction of such department or agency.".

The first sentence of paragraph (D) of Rule 6(e)(3) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure is amended to read as follows:

"(D) A petition for disclosure pursuant to subdivision (e)(3)(C)(i) or (v) shall be filed in the district where the grand jury convened."

(b) Paragraph (1) of section 1681b of title 15, United States Code, is amended by inserting after "an order" the following: ", or a subpoena issued in connection with proceedings before a grand jury".

SEC. 919. LITIGATION AUTHORITY.—

Nothing in this Act may be construed as impairing or diminishing the authority of the Attorney General under section 516 of title 28, United States Code, to conduct and coordinate litigation on behalf of the United States Government.

SEC. 920. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE APPROPRIATION.—

There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, without fiscal year limitation, from the General Fund of the Treasury, $50,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1989 and for each of the two fiscal year thereafter, to the Attorney General, for purposes of investigations and prosecutions involving financial institution crimes.

TITLE X.—STUDY OF FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE AND BANKING REGULATION

SEC. 1001. STUDY.—The Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with the Comptroller of the Currency, the Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank System, the Chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and the Director of the Office of Management and the Budget, shall conduct a study of the Federal deposit insurance system, including an appropriate structure for the offering of competitive products and services to consumers consistent with standards of safety and soundness.

SEC. 1002. TOPICS.—As part of such study, the Secretary shall investigate, review and evaluate the following:

(a) risk and rate structure for deposit insurance;

(b) incentives for market discipline;

(c) the scope of deposit insurance coverage and its impact on the liability of the insurance fund;

(d) the feasibility of market value accounting, assessments on foreign deposits, limitations and brokered deposits, the addition of collateralized borrowings to the deposit insurance base, and multiple insured accounts;

(e) policies to be followed with respect to the recapitalization or closure of insured depositories whose capital is depleted to or near the point of, insolvency; and (f) the efficiency of housing subsidies through the Federal Home Loan Bank System.

SEC. 1003. FINAL REPORT.—The Secretary shall submit to Congress within eighteen months from the date of enactment of this Act, a final report which shall contain a detailed statement of findings and conclusions, including recommendations for advisable administrative and legislative action.

TITLE XI.—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

SEC. 1101. AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 202 OF THE FEDERAL CREDIT UNION ACT.—Section 202 of the Federal Credit Union Act, 12 U.S.C. 1782, is amended as follows:

1. in paragraph (1) of subsection (b), by deleting "both the amount of its deposit or adjustment thereof and" and "both as computed under subsection (c) of this section".

2. in subsection (c) by striking paragraph (1), redesignating paragraph (2) as paragraph (1) and by adding a new paragraph (2) to read as follows:

"In the event the operating level of the Fund at the end of a given insurance year is below a minimum level specified by the Board or extraordinary circumstances exist that in the opinion of the Board raise a risk of serious future insurance losses, the Board shall have authority to assess a premium in excess of that specified in (c)(1). In no event shall any increase in the premium rate exceed fifty percent over the previous year, and in no event shall the premium in a given year exceed 0.35 percent of total member accounts. In no event shall the premiums or fees assessed under this chapter be considered appropriated monies."

3. in paragraph (1) of subsection (d) by striking "deposit or any".

4. in paragraphs (2) and (3) of subsection (d), by striking "its deposit or" and "deposit or the" each time they appear therein.

5. in subsections (e) and (f), by striking "deposit or" "deposit or any", and "its deposit or" each time they appear therein.

6. in subsection (g), by striking "deposits" in the first sentence, and by striking in the second sentence "any deposit or adjustment thereof or" each time it appears therein.

7. in paragraph (2) of subsection (h) by striking "1.30" and inserting "1.25".

8. adding a new paragraph (i) to read as follows:

"(1) Over an eight year transition beginning one year after the date of enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989, insured credit unions shall expense the one percent deposit maintained with the Board pursuant to P.L. 98-369. The method of expensing the deposit shall be established pursuant to rules and regulations of the Board.

"(2) Credit unions that obtain insurance from the Fund during the transition period in (i)(1) above shall not be required to maintain a deposit with the Board, but the Board shall have authority to assess such additional premiums on those credit unions as are necessary and appropriate to ensure that the economic cost of maintaining the Fund is comparable for all insured credit unions."

SEC. 1102. AMENDMENT TO SECTION 203 OF THE FEDERAL CREDIT UNION ACT.—Section 203 of the Federal Credit Union Act, 12 U.S.C. 1783, is amended by striking "deposits and" in paragraph (b).

SEC. 1103. AMENDMENT TO SECTION 5240 OF THE REVISED STATUTES.—

Section 5240 of the Revised Statutes (12 U.S.C. 482) is amended by—

(1) by deleting the first sentence; and

(2) by inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Comptroller of the Currency shall fix the compensation of employees of the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency and shall make a report thereof to the Congress. Such compensation shall be determined by the Comptroller without regard to the provisions of any law or regulation (including, but not limited to, provisions in Title 5 of the United States Code) relating to federal employee and officer compensation. In setting and adjusting such compensation, the Comptroller shall seek to maintain comparability with the compensation at the other Federal bank regulatory agencies."

SEC. 1104. SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS.—If any provision of this Act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the remainder of the Act and the application of the provision to other persons not similarly situated or to other circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

By Mr. DOMENICI:

S. 416. A bill to provide that all Federal civilian and military retirees shall receive the full cost-of-living adjustment in annuities payable under Federal retirement systems for fiscal years 1990 and 1991, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

COLA EQUITY ACT OF 1989

● Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation—the COLA Equity Act of 1989—to ensure that every Federal and military retiree receives the full cost of living adjustment [COLA] due under current law.

The budget submitted to Congress by the administration is, in general, a good starting point for resolving the 1990 budget. But I cannot support the proposal to eliminate the COLA's for Federal and military retirees in 1990, and hold future increases below the rate of inflation.

Mr. President, it is simply unfair to single out Federal and military retirees for COLA cuts. These individuals have spent their careers in the public service. They deserve our thanks and support, not a targeted budget cut.

I am a strong supporter of the concept of COLA equity. In fairness, the same basic COLA policy must apply to those who retire under all Government-sponsored retirement programs, be it Federal and military retirement, or Social Security.

Since no change is contemplated in Social Security COLA's, my bill would ensure that full COLA's are paid to all Federal and military retirees.

And my proposal also covers all retirees of the Postal Service, plus all railroad retirees.

The bill also corrects a technical error in the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law by exempting from sequestration the supplemental annuities paid to railroad retirees. This change is supported by the General Accounting Office and would conform treatment of this program to other Government pensions.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a summary of my bill and the bill itself be printed in the RECORD following this statement.

Finally, Mr. President, the Washington Post agrees with my position on these COLA's and I ask unanimous consent that their editorial of February 20, 1989, be included in the RECORD following my statement.●

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 416

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "COLA Equity Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT BENEFITS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Any benefits payable from the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund pursuant to the provisions of chapter 83 or 84 of title 5, United States Code, during fiscal years 1990 and 1991, including any increase in such benefits which is scheduled to become payable during such fiscal years as the result of an adjustment under section 8340 or 8462 of title 5, United States Code, shall not be subject to reduction or suspension, pursuant to any statute (other than applicable provisions of such chapter 83 or 84).

(b) BENEFITS.—The benefits under this section shall be determined solely in accordance with applicable provisions of chapters 83 and 84 of title 5, United States Code.

SEC. 3. MILITARY RETIREMENT AND SURVIVOR BENEFIT PROGRAMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Any percentage adjustment provided by law to be made in amounts payable under military retirement and survivor benefit programs to take effect during fiscal years 1990 and 1991 shall take effect in accordance with the law providing for such adjustment.

(b) CONSTRUCTION.—During fiscal years 1990 and 1991, an adjustment described in subsection (a) shall not be subject to reduction or suspension under any provision of law (other than applicable provisions of title 10, United States Code).

(c) MILITARY RETIREMENT AND SURVIVOR BENEFIT PROGRAMS DEFINED.—For purposes of this section:

(1) the term "military retirement and survivor benefit programs" means—

(A) the provisions of law creating entitlement to, or determining the amount of, retired or retainer pay for members of the uniformed services; and

(B) the programs providing annuities for survivors of members and former members of the uniformed services, including chapter 73 of title 10, United States Code, section 4 of Public Law 92-425, and section 5 of Public Law 96-402; and

(2) the term "uniformed services" has the meaning given that term in section 101 of title 37, United States Code.

SEC. 4. FOREIGN SERVICE RETIREMENT BENEFITS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Any benefits payable from the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability Fund pursuant to the provisions of subchapter I or II of chapter 8 of the Foreign Service Act of 1980 (22 U.S.C. 4041 et seq.) during fiscal years 1990 and 1991, including any increase in such benefits which is scheduled to become payable during such fiscal years pursuant to section 826(a) of such Act (22 U.S.C. 4066(a)) shall not be subject to reduction or suspension, pursuant to any statute (other than applicable provisions of chapter 8 of such Act).

(b) BENEFITS.—The benefits under this section shall be determined solely in accordance with applicable provisions of chapter 8 of the Foreign Service Act of 1980 (22 U.S.C. 4041 et seq.).

SEC. 5. BENEFITS UNDER THE CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY RETIREMENT AND DISABILITY SYSTEM.

The President shall, pursuant to the authority granted in section 292 of the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement Act of 1964 for Certain Employees (50 U.S.C. 403 note), extend the prohibition under section 2 of this Act on reduction or suspension of certain benefits payable from the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund, to apply with respect to benefits payable from the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement and Disability Fund.

SEC. 6. RAILROAD RETIREMENT TIER II AND SUPPLEMENTAL ANNUITY COLAS.

Section 3(g)(1) of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1974 (45 U.S.C. 231b(g)(1)) is amended by inserting ", shall not otherwise be prevented from taking effect, with respect to benefits paid during fiscal years 1990 and 1991, by any provision of law other than this Act," after "shall not be deferred".

SEC. 7. EXEMPTION OF RAILROAD RETIREMENT SUPPLEMENTAL ANNUITIES FROM SEQUESTER.

Section 255(g)(1)(B) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 is amended by adding before the item "Railroad retirement tier II (60-8011-0-7-601)" the following:

"Railroad retirement supplemental annuities (60-8012-0-7-601)".

SUMMARY OF THE COLA EQUITY ACT OF 1989

Sections 2 through 6 of the bill ensure payment of full COLAs in 1990 and 1991—the likely term of any Budget Summit Agreement—for the following retirement programs:

Federal Civilian Retirement (including Postal Service);

Military Retirement and Survivor Benefit Programs;

Foreign Service Retirement;

Central Intelligence Agency Retirement; and Railroad Retirement Tier II Pensions and Supplemental Annuities.

Note: Coast Guard retirees and retirees from uniformed service of the Public Health Service and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration are covered under the Military Retirement program.

Section 7 of the bill corrects a technical error in the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law by exempting from sequestration the Supplemental Annuity Pension Fund for railroad retirees. This change is supported by the General Accounting Office and would conform treatment of this program to other government pensions.

[From the Washington Post, Feb. 20, 1989]

CUTTING COLA'S

One of the few specific budget cuts to which George Bush put his name two weeks ago would affect federal civilian and military retirees. The president would deny them a cost-of-living increase next year, and in subsequent years would keep increases one percentage point below the consumer price index (the retirees get the full CPI now).

The proposed cut is unfair; it goes either too far or not far enough. If COLAs are thought to be the source of too much fizz in the budget, the president should seek to decarbonate more than just these. Social Security benefits are indexed in much the same way as federal retirement benefits and have a vastly greater impact on the deficit. If there is justification for cutting the one, why, except for the obvious politics of it, isn't there even greater justification for cutting the other? The income tax threshold and brackets are also indexed. If retirees are to lose some protection against inflation in the name of deficit reduction, why not other taxpayers too?

It can be argued that too much of the budget is indexed now, so that the government has become an echo chamber for inflation, and every budget director dreams of cutting or relaxing the connection. But cutting COLAs is neither as painless nor always as fair a step as it sounds. Some of the people covered by these devices—retirees and lower-income taxpayers especially—badly need the protection, without which they will slip below or further below the poverty line. If COLAs are to be cut, it should be all COLAs (or nearly so; we would exempt means-tested programs) for a limited period of time and as part of a major agreement to reduce the deficit. No games.

The administration says that federal retirement benefits are too high. But cutting COLAs is an indiscriminate correction. The budget book notes, among other things, that because retirement benefits were fully indexed they rose faster than pay in the past 10 years. But that is true of Social Security benefits as well. The budget writers also remind us that the civil service and military retirement systems were changed in 1986 so that COLAs for future retirees will generally be kept a percentage point below the CPI; so why not apply the same rule to current retirees? The answer is that the future retirees know what's coming and have time to prepare; the people now in the free fall of retirement cannot.

The bureaucracy is always a tempting target at budget time. Of the cuts the president endorsed in his incomplete budget, about a third would be at the bureaucracy's expense. There is plenty of room for reform still in the federal compensation system, but the budget ax is the wrong way to achieve it. The burden of cutting the deficit should be broadly distributed. The president's proposals two weeks ago were not.

By Mr. HEINZ (for himself, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. PELL, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. WILSON, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. WARNER, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. NUNN, Mr. ROBB, and Mr. JOHNSTON):

S. 417. A bill to amend chapters 83 and 84 of title 5, United States Code, to expedite the processing of applications of Federal employees seeking retirement benefits, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

FEDERAL RETIREES' FAIRNESS ACT OF 1989

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, today I am introducing a measure which addresses a serious problem facing Federal workers who will retire this month and in the months and years to come—late retirement benefits. I am pleased to be joined in this effort by Senator GRASSLEY and several of my colleagues. A companion bill is being introduced today in the House by Congressmen FLORIO and ROYBAL.

There are over 2.6 million Federal employees, and about 6.7 percent—171,000—of them retire each year. In my own State there are over 131,000 Federal employees, of whom over 8,800 will retire this year. These public servants, who have worked for the Government for 20, 30 or more years, have earned their retirement benefits. They expect to receive these benefits in a timely fashion—not months and months later.

The fact is, Mr. President, many of these same Federal employees, after years of public service, wait from 3 to 8 months for their first pension check. While many retirees wait for that first annuity check, they are obliged to draw down on their savings or borrow money to pay their bills.

This delay—an obvious inconvenience to all retirees, but in some cases, a terrible hardship—is not their fault. Unbelievably, the fault lies with the agencies which they have served for many years.

When this problem came to our attention last year, Senator GRASSLEY and I found that the check-issuing agency, the Office of Personnel Management [OPM], is not at fault. OPM cannot begin adjudicating the retirement checks until the employees' records are received from the employing agencies. In fact, once OPM receives the retirement data from the agencies, it takes another 20 to 24 days to cut that first check, assuming the documents are processed correctly by the employing agency.

The statistics—included in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks—show agencies are remiss by delaying their records' submissions to OPM. For example, the data for all retirements, just in the single month of March 1988, show that fully 26 percent of the total 11,447 retirement claims that month alone—representing 3,026 individuals—were forwarded to OPM more than 60 days after the employees' separation. This meant that over 3,000 retirees had to wait more than 3 months for their first pension annuity. Many of these individuals waited as long as 6 to 8 months because their agency did not consider their needs important enough. The attitude seems to be out of sight, out of mind. No matter that the retirees served many, many years in the public's behalf. No matter that the retirees were, in most instances, Federal workers trying to do their jobs well, and on time.

Fixing the current crisis requires urgent management attention. Government agencies must give their retirees the attention and priority they deserve. Retirement processing must be given a higher priority than is now the case. Obviously, there must be more agency accountability.

I am pleased to note that since this legislation was introduced in June of last year, first in the Senate and later in the other body, some agencies have already upgraded their processing systems. This indication that agencies are able to improve their performance shows that it can be done. We must, however, follow through and pass this legislation; although some agencies are improving, most are not. In fact, one or two agencies still forward only 5 percent—yes, 5 percent—of their retirement records to OPM within 30 days.

A former Printing Office employee states the problem better than I ever could:

> It seems to me that retirees deserve much better treatment than this. To me, the time they took to process my papers is entirely too long and is not satisfactory, even reprehensible. * * * I will survive this, even though it looks like it will be a hardship on me and my wife, but there are those who will retire in the future who will really be hurt by the senseless delays.

This is a situation that is simply not fair—but it is a situation that can be solved without spending a dime.

The bill I am introducing today would simply require the agencies to forward retirement documentation to OPM within 30 days at least 80 percent of the time. To enable the agencies to meet this deadline, the legislation would:

Allow agencies to begin retirement processing as early as 4 months before each employee's separation date. Agencies usually wait until the very day an employee actually leaves the Government to begin the paperwork.

Agencies would be required to update employment records of all new employees, thus helping personnel managers to compile much of the data as employees move from agency to agency. This information would then be available at retirement time without undue complications.

Agencies would be required to conduct at least two retirement counseling sessions per year to inform potential retirees of the necessary documents that will be required, such as obtaining former spouses' signatures waiving pension rights. Some of these documents are not easily assembled; the earlier the employees know what documents are actually needed, the better.

If an agency fails to forward at least 80 percent of its retirees' documentation to OPM within 30 days, its inspector general must draft a compliance plan by which the agency can meet this goal. IG's are responsible for eliminating agency waste and management inefficiency. If an IG instructs its agency's personnel office to shape up, there is a good likelihood it will.

Mr. President, what I, Senator GRASSLEY, and 14 other Senators are proposing is simply a management tool to help our Federal retirees make the transition to private life in an orderly, predictable manner. OPM assures us that these proposals will work. The legislation is also strongly endorsed by the Pennsylvania chapter of the National Association of Retired Federal Employees, as well as its national headquarters in Washington, the National Federation of Federal Employees, and the American Federation of Government Employees.

I request that the accompanying graph and bill be included in the RECORD at this time.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 417

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. FEDERAL RETIREMENT PROCESSING.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Federal Retirees' Fairness Act of 1989".

(b) PROCESSING OF CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT SYSTEM APPLICATIONS.—Chapter 83 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 8347 the following new section:

"§ 8347a. Processing of applications

"(a) Within 180 days after the date on which an employee begins service with an agency (other than on a temporary or other similar basis), such agency shall take appropriate measures to ensure that the employee's personnel file contains all relevant information concerning any previous employment or military service which would be needed for purposes of any determination relating to such employee's rights under this chapter.

"(b)(1) If an employee notifies an agency of an intention to separate from service, or if the employee dies such agency shall—

"(A) inform such employee or the employee's survivors of any retirement counseling and other related services or resources available to such employee or survivor; and

"(B) in the case of any employee who would be entitled to an immediate annuity based on such employee's age and service as of the date of such employee's proposed date of retirement under section 8335 or 8336 of this title, take appropriate measures to ensure that all information and records needed for any agency certification, documentation, or other action required in the processing of an application for such annuity are complete and accurate.

"(2) All measures required under paragraph (1)(B) with respect to an employee shall be initiated—

"(A) upon receipt of the notification of intent to separate, when such notification is furnished at least 4 months, but not earlier than 12 months, in advance, or

"(B) if the notification of intent to separate is furnished later than 4 months before the proposed separation date, as soon after the receipt of such notification as possible, so that all such measures can be completed and any certification, documentation, or other matter required from the agency will be received by the Office no later than 30 days after the date of the employee's separation.

"(c) If an employee applies for an annuity under section 8337 of this title through such employee's employing agency, all measures described in subsection (b)(1)(B) shall be completed by the employing agency, and all certification, documentation, or other matter required from the agency shall be received by the Office no later than 30 days after the date on which the employee files the application.

"(d) In the case of any employee who applies for a refund of retirement deductions under section 8342 of this title through the employing agency of such employee, such agency shall take appropriate measures to insure that all information and records needed for any agency certification, documentation, or other action required in the processing of an application for refund are complete and accurate so that all measures required under subsection (b)(1) and section 8342 with respect to the employee are completed and received by the Office no later than 30 days from the date of separation.

"(e) In the case of any deceased employee, such agency shall take appropriate measures to insure that all information and records needed for any agency certification, documentation or other action required in the processing of an application for death benefits are complete and accurate so that all measures required under subsection (b)(1) and section 8341 of this title with respect to the deceased employee and the survivors of such employee are completed and received in the Office no later than 30 days from the date of the employee's death.

"(f)(1) The Office shall compile aggregate records on a quarterly basis on—

"(A) the number of applications for retirement, death benefits, or refunds of deductions under section 8335, 8336, 8337, 8341, or 8342 of this title received by the Office from each agency; and

"(B) of the total number under subparagraph (A)—

"(i) to the extent that section 8335, 8336, 8341, or 8342 of this title is involved, how many (expressed as a number and as a percentage) were received by the Office—

"(I) before 31 days after the date of separation or death;

"(II) after 30 days but before 61 days after the date of separation or death; and

"(III) after 60 days after the date of separation or death; and

"(ii) to the extent that section 8337 of this title is involved, how many applications (expressed as a number and as a percentage) which were accompanied by preliminary retirement records, and were received by the Office—

"(I) before 31 days after the date the application was filed with the employing agency;

"(II) after 30 days, but before 61 days after the date the application was filed with the employing agency; and

"(III) after 60 days after the date the application was filed with the employing agency.

"(2) The Office shall—

"(A) prepare a report on a quarterly basis on the performance of each agency, as determined under paragraph (1) of this subsection; and

"(B) send a copy of each such report to the head of each agency.

"(3)(A) No later than 30 days after receiving a report under paragraph (2)(B), each agency described in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph shall—

"(i) prepare a corrective action plan specifying actions to bring such agency into conformance with the provisions of this subsection; and

"(ii) send such plan to the Inspector General of such agency or, if such agency does not have an Inspector General, the officer designated to perform the functions of Inspector General within such agency.

"(B) This paragraph applies with respect to any agency, the percentage for which in any quarter is less than 80 percent for the figure reported under paragraph (1)(B)(i)(I) or (1)(B)(ii)(I) of this subsection.

"(C) The Inspector General (or the officer performing the functions of Inspector General, if applicable) of the agency shall review any corrective action plan submitted to such Inspector General (or officer) under this paragraph and provide such assistance as appropriate to assist such agency in achieving conformance with the provisions of this subsection.

"(4) No later than April 30 of each year, the Office shall submit a report to the Congress on—

"(A) the speed, accuracy, and completeness with which agencies have provided the Office with the records, certifications, and other matters required in order to process applications for annuities, death benefits, or refunds of deductions under section 8335, 8336, 8337, 8341, or 8342 of this title; and

"(B) the average number of days from the date that the Office receives an application and supporting documentation—

"(i) for an annuity or refund based on section 8335, 8336, 8341, or 8342 of this title, until the Office's authorization of the refund or first annuity payment for those cases that are determined by the Office to be complete enough to initiate the payment process; and

"(ii) for an annuity based on section 8337 of this title, until the Office's authorization of the first annuity payment for those cases that are determined by the Office to be complete enough to initiate the payment process.".

(c) PROCESSING OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES RETIREMENT SYSTEM APPLICATIONS.—Chapter 84 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 8466 the following new section:

"§ 8466a. Processing of applications

"(a) Within 180 days after the date on which an employee begins service with an agency (other than on a temporary or other similar basis), such agency shall take appropriate measures to ensure that the employee's personnel file contains all relevant information concerning any previous employment or military service which would be needed for purposes of any determination relating to such employee's rights under this chapter.

"(b)(1) If an employee notifies an agency of an intention to separate from service, or if the employee dies, such agency shall—

"(A) inform such employee or the employee's survivors of any retirement counseling and other related services or resources available to such employee or survivor; and

"(B) in the case of any employee who would be entitled to an immediate annuity based on such employee's age and service as of the date of such employee's proposed date of retirement under section 8412, 8414, or 8425 of this title, take appropriate measures to ensure that all information and records needed for an agency certification, documentation, or other action required in the processing of an application for such annuity are complete and accurate.

"(2) All measures required under paragraph (1)(B) with respect to an employee shall be initiated—

"(A) upon receipt of the notification of intent to separate, when such notification is furnished at least 4 months, but not earlier than 12 months, in advance, or

"(B) if the notification of intent to separate is furnished later than 4 months before the proposed separation date, as soon after the receipt of such notification as possible, so that all such measures can be completed and any certification, documentation, or other matter required from the agency will be received by the Office no later than 30 days after the date of the employee's separation.

"(c) If an employee applies for an annuity under section 8451 of this title through such employee's employing agency, all measures described in subsection (b)(1)(B) shall be completed by the employing agency, and all certification, documentation, or other matter required from the agency shall be received by the Office no later than 30 days after the date on which the employee files the application.

"(d) In the case of any employee who applies for a refund of retirement deductions under section 8424 of this title through the employing agency of such employee, such agency shall take appropriate measures to ensure that all information and records needed for any agency certification, documentation, or other action required in the processing of an application for refund are complete and accurate so that all measures required under subsection (b)(1) and section 8424 with respect to the employee are completed and received by the Office no later than 30 days from the date of separation.

"(e) In the case of any deceased employee, such agency shall take appropriate measures to ensure that all information and records needed for any agency certification, documentation or other action required in the processing of an application for death benefits are complete and accurate so that all measures required under subsection (b)(1) and subchapter IV of chapter 84 of this title with respect to the deceased employee and the survivors of such employee are completed and received in the Office no later than 30 days from the date of the employee's death.

"(f)(1) The Office shall compile aggregate records on a quarterly basis on—

"(A) the number of applications for retirement, death benefits, or refunds of deductions under section 8412, 8414, 8424, 8425, 8451, or subchapter IV of chapter 84 of this title received by the Office from each agency; and

"(B) of the total number under subparagraph (A)—

"(i) to the extent that section 8412, 8414, 8424, 8425, or subchapter IV of chapter 84 of this title is involved, how many (expressed as a number and as a percentage) were received by the Office—

"(I) before 31 days after the date of separation or death;

"(II) after 30 days, but before 61 days after the date of separation or death; and

"(III) after 60 days after the date of separation or death; and

"(ii) to the extent that section 8451 of this title is involved, how many applications (expressed as a number and as a percentage), which were accompanied by preliminary retirement records, and were received by the Office—

"(I) before 31 days after the date the application was filed with the employing agency;

"(II) after 30 days, but before 61 days after the date the application was filed with the employing agency; and

"(III) after 60 days after the date the application was filed with the employing agency.

"(2) The Office shall—

"(A) prepare a report on a quarterly basis on the performance of each agency, as determined under paragraph (1) of this subsection; and

"(B) send a copy of each such report to the head of each agency.

"(3)(A) No later than 30 days after receiving a report under paragraph (2)(B), each agency described in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph shall—

"(i) prepare a corrective action plan specifying actions to bring such agency into conformance with the provisions of this subsection; and

"(ii) send such plan to the Inspector General of such agency or, if such agency does not have an Inspector General, the officer designated to perform the functions of Inspector General within such agency.

"(B) This paragraph applies with respect to any agency, the percentage for which in any quarter is less than 80 percent for the figure reported under paragraph (1)(B)(i)(I) or (1)(B)(ii)(I) of this subsection.

"(C) The Inspector General (or the officer performing the functions of Inspector General, if applicable) of the agency shall review any corrective action plan submitted to such Inspector General (or officer) under this paragraph and provide such assistance as appropriate to assist such agency in achieving conformance with the provisions of this subsection.

"(4) No later than April 30 of each year, the Office shall submit a report to the Congress on—

"(A) the speed, accuracy, and completeness with which agencies have provided the Office with the records, certifications, and other matters required in order to process applications for annuities, death benefits, or refunds under section 8412, 8414, 8424, 8425,

8451, or subchapter IV of chapter 84 of this title; and

"(B) the average number of days from the date that the Office receives an application and supporting documentation—

"(i) for an annuity or refund based on section 8412, 8414, 8424, 8425, or subchapter IV of chapter 84 of this title, until the Office's authorization of the refund or first annuity payment for those cases that are determined by the Office to be complete enough to initiate the payment process; and

"(ii) for an annuity based on section 8451 of this title, until the Office's authorization of the first annuity payment for those cases that are determined by the Office to be complete enough to initiate the payment process.".

(d) FORM OF APPLICATIONS UNDER CHAPTER 84.—Section 8466 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(d) Applications under this chapter shall be in such form as the Office prescribes. Agencies shall support the applications by such certificates as the Office considers necessary to the determination of the rights of applicants.".

(e) RETIREMENT COUNSELING.—Section 8350 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(d)(1) No less than twice each year, the retirement counselor or designee of each agency shall conduct retirement counseling seminars for all interested employees (including employees within the meaning of chapter 84).

"(2) Such seminars shall include an explanation and review of—

"(A) the retirement processing functions of the agency and the Office of Personnel Management, respectively;

"(B) the application which the employee is required to complete and any certification or documents which are required to be submitted to the Office before refund or annuity payments may begin, including written information designed to assist employees in the expeditious completion of such applications;

"(C) specific circumstances which may complicate and lengthen the amount of time needed to process an application; and

"(D) methods to assist employees in solving potential problems to complete the required retirement documentation.".

(f) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—(1) The table of sections for chapter 83 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 8347 the following:

"8347a. Processing of applications.".

(2) The table of sections for chapter 84 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 8466 the following:

"8466a. Processing of applications.".

(g) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this Act shall be effective 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act.

● Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, today I am joining Senator HEINZ and other colleagues in reintroducing a bill the purpose of which is to speed up the provision of first annuity checks to just-retired Federal employees. At the time of introduction of that bill, S. 2469, on June 6, 1988, both Senator HEINZ and I provided detailed commentaries on the problem and on the bill we were introducing to fix it. I do not intend to repeat that detailed discussion here, Mr. President.

Suffice it to say that we believe that most Federal agencies simply take too long to provide their just-retired former employees with a first annuity check. Furthermore, we do not believe that there is any good reason for such delays.

I was first alerted to this problem by mail from constituents, many of whom wrote to me complaining of the delays they experienced in receiving their first annuity check from the Office of Personnel Management. Some of them told me that they had to wait up to 6 months before receiving that check.

For those in the middle or lower grades when employed, and that is probably the vast majority of Federal retirees, to go 6 months without an annuity check can be a real hardship. Many of these individuals are not eligible for Social Security. Many have not made enough in their working lives to accumulate sufficient resources to carry them through a 6-month wait to their first annuity check.

Even if they have accumulated sufficient resources to do so, it is still unconscionable for them to have to eat into savings just because the Government takes 6 months to send them their first check.

Therefore Senator HEINZ and I introduced, and are reintroducing today, "The Federal Retirement Processing Act of 1989," a bill designed to speed up the completion of the paperwork required to get first annuity checks in the hands of just-retired Federal employees.

When we looked into the causes of the delays experienced by retirees in getting their checks, we found that the problem lies with the agencies which last employed the retiree.

Once the Office of Personnel Management gets a retirement application from the employing agency, it is able to authorize an interim annuity payment of around 80 to 85 percent of the ultimate full benefit due an employee within 12 to 14 days. It then takes the Treasury department and the Postal Service 8 to 10 days to get a check into the mailbox of the retiree. Thus, from the time OPM gets the retirement package from the employing agency, it takes from 20 to 24 days for the retiree to get his or her first annuity check. Currently, OPM is able to follow this time schedule for 95 percent of retirement cases. But only after it receives a retirement claim from the agency.

How have the agencies been about getting those retirement packages to OPM? Well, not very good.

OPM, the Federal Government's personnel officer, thinks the agencies should be able to get an application claim to them within 30 days after the employee's date of separation.

But OPM data show that, over the last year, not more than 63 percent of retirement claims have reached OPM within 30 days after the employees' date of separation from service. In fact, the latest data—for all retirements in the month of December 1988—fully 14 percent of the total 5,735 retirement claims were submitted more than 60 days after the employee's separation date. The data cannot show how much longer than 60 days after separation it took the agencies to submit claims to OPM, but in view of the complaints I have received from new retirees it seems clear that it took much longer than 60 days to submit some of these late claims.

In fairness, it needs to be said that this does represent improvement over the performance we cited when we introduced this bill last year. At that time 26 percent of claims were received by OPM more than 60 days after separation.

The performance record of the 13 largest agencies, which account for 93 percent of the total records submitted to OPM, reflects this generally poor performance. For the month of December 1988, the Justice Department forwarded only 34 percent of its retirement claims within 30 days (still, an improvement over the 9 percent it forward in March 1988). The Treasury forwarded only 10 percent (better than the 2 percent for March 1988). The D.C. government forwarded only 7 percent (a 2-percentage point improvement). The Department of Health and Human Services forwarded 56 percent (vastly better than the 1 percent of March 1988; HHS had achieved 40 and 46 percent in the two data collection periods preceding March 1988).

The same two agencies whose performance demonstrated to us last year that the job can be done better continue to demonstrate that it can be done better. The Post Office, with 800,000 employees, and the Veterans' Administration, with 220,000 employees have regularly forwarded close to 80 percent of their retirement claims to OPM within 30 days.

The legislation Senator HEINZ and I are introducing would do five things:

First, it would require agencies to update the personnel records of employees to reflect all former Federal employment within 180 days after an employee begins service with an agency.

Second, the bill would require agencies to begin processing retirement applications as soon as an individual notifies his or her personnel office of their intention to retire. Although our expectation is that agencies would begin such processing as soon as notified by the employee of his or her intention to retire, our bill requires them to do this only if the employee indicates an intention to retire 120 days prior to the anticipated date of separation. If the employee does not give 4 months' notice, the agency is required to begin processing the employee's paperwork as soon as possible after being notified of the intention to retire. Now, many agencies wait until virtually the last minute before beginning to process an employee's retirement claim.

Third, we have required each agency to hold retirement counseling sessions for all interested employees at least twice yearly. These would focus on the steps required before an employee can retire and on some of the typical problems employees can encounter in trying to complete the required documents. Employees themselves can be a source of delay in completion of their retirement claim. If they are better informed about how the process works and what is expected of them they may do their part more efficiently. This may also help bring about more planful retirement and reduce the number of spur-of-the-moment retirements.

Fourth, the bill would require each agency to file corrective action plans with their agency's inspector general in the event that OPM data show the agency failing, in any quarter, to forward at least 80 percent of their retirement claims to OPM within 30 days of the date the employee separated. The inspector general will provide assistance to the agency so as to achieve a level of 80 percent complete and timely submissions.

The final provision of the bill would require the Office of Personnel Management to report to Congress not later than April 30 of each year on the speed, accuracy, and completeness with which agencies have provided OPM with annuity. Thus, ultimately the oversight committees of the Congress would be able to see how the process is working and take steps to make it work better should that be necessary.

Mr. President, I think this program, if implemented, would shorten the time it takes Federal retirees to get their first annuity checks, and thus would eliminate much inconvenience and some hardship caused by the way the present system works.●

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleagues in supporting legislation to ensure that Federal retirees receive their first retirement checks in a timely manner.

I applaud their efforts on behalf of the millions of retired civil servants who have given so much to their country. This measure would bring some peace of mind to retirees at a turning point in their lives. Our Federal retirees should not be burdened with unnecessary financial hardship caused by bureaucratic inefficiency.

It is time for agencies to be held accountable for the speed in which they process the retirement data of employees. The requirement for agencies to provide counseling is also a good one. Certainly these hard-working employees deserve such consideration at this crucial time in their lives.

The Federal Retirement Applications Act is a thoughtful piece of legislation. I am delighted that this measure would aid the 9,400 Federal employees who retire each year in my State of New York.

I commend my colleagues for their wisdom in introducing this important bill.●

By Mr. HELMS:

S. 418. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to repeal the income taxation of corporations, to impose a 10-percent tax on the earned income—and only the earned income—of individuals, to repeal the estate and gift taxes, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

TITHE TAX ACT

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, a couple of years ago I had the pleasure of meeting Jim and Karen Quick, a delightful young couple from Greensboro, NC. At the time, Karen was a 12-year veteran of the Internal Revenue Service and was working in the Greensboro district's problem resolution office.

I met with Karen and her husband to congratulate her on her international award-winning essay of tax policy. The essay was titled, "Tax Simplification: Let's Play Flat Ball."

In her prize-winning essay, Karen compared U.S. tax laws to a frustrating ball game with constantly changing rules and few winners. "Americans are tired of playing Bracketball," she wrote. "One of the most infuriating aspects of Bracketball is the constant movement of the goal line. When the players get near it, the officials move it." The solution she proposed is "a simple, fair, efficient game called 'Flatball.'"

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of her essay be placed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks, and I recommend that Senators take the time to read and consider Karen's thoughts.

Mr. President, I had mixed feelings about the Tax Reform Act of 1986. On the one hand, Congress made a significant improvement by lowering the tax rates and reducing the number of brackets. On the other hand, many provisions were included simply to raise revenue and keep the bill "revenue neutral." These changes were based neither on logic nor on sound tax policy. The result was that the tax laws were made even more complex, thereby causing a number of problems for various sectors of the economy.

In the closing hours of the 100th Congress, the House and Senate finally managed to pass a tax technical corrections bill that was long overdue. By the time the bill was passed, the "corrections" made to our tax laws were far more than technical.

Mr. President, we still have a long way to go to achieve a tax system which is simple and fair and in which the American people can have confidence. Recently, I've received hundreds of letters from constituents complaining about the growing complexity of our tax laws. These letters are coming not only from average taxpayers trying to fill out their 1040's, but also from tax experts who have spent many years studying Federal tax laws. One such letter came from Mr. R.A. Goodwin, from Wilmington, NC.

Without objection, I ask that a copy of Mr. Goodwin's letter be included in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. President, the complexity of our tax laws was recently demonstrated by a survey done by Money Magazine. In the survey, tax information for a mythical family was sent to 50 tax experts, including 30 independent certified public accountants, 12 representatives of franchise return-preparation outlets, 3 certified public accountants from national accounting companies, and 5 enrolled agents who are tested and licensed by the Internal Revenue Service. Each professional was asked to calculate the family's taxes.

Mr. President, these 50 tax experts came up with 50 different answers for the family's tax liability. Their results ranged from $12,539 to $35,813. The February 18 issue of News and Observer, a newspaper in Raleigh, NC, carried an article about the Money Magazine survey.

Without objection, I ask that a copy of the article be included in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

I don't believe anyone can dispute that our tax laws have become much too voluminous and complex. We must continue to focus our efforts on bringing true simplification to our tax system.

With that goal in mind, I am reintroducing a bill I offered in the 100th Congress to implement a 10-percent flat tax bill. I hope this bill will be the basis for a continued comprehensive study of our increasingly complex Tax Code. The bill is very similar to legislation which I proposed in the 97th Congress. A similar bill had been introduced in the House of Representatives by my distinguished friend and colleague from Illinois, PHIL CRANE.

The first part of the bill would eliminate the income tax on corporations. This recognizes the economic reality that corporations don't pay taxes, people do. Corporations simply pass taxes on to consumers in the form of higher prices and to workers in the form of reduced wages. This burden falls most heavily on the poor because the poor spend a larger percentage of their income on consumer goods.

The corporate income tax is also passed on to shareholders in the form of reduced dividends and reduced corporate savings and investment. Since pension plans are major shareholders, the corporate tax can drastically reduce potential pension benefits to workers.

Reduced corporate savings and investment have a negative impact on economic growth and thus reduce employment opportunities. This constitutes a further hidden tax on America's workers.

Mr. President, elimination of the corporate income tax will promote efficiency in the market because all businesses will be placed on a level-playing field. Tax considerations will no longer affect business decisions. Furthermore, elimination of this cost to business will also make U.S. business more competitive in the world market.

A second aspect of this plan proposes a reform of the income tax on individuals. The bill would eliminate all current deductions, credits, and exemptions. It would provide a single exemption of $10,000 per taxpayer and impose a 10-percent tax on all earned income. The $10,000 individual exemption would be adjusted each year for inflation.

"Earned income" is defined as the compensation one received for performing work. It includes wages, salaries, fees, and fringe benefits. It does not include passive income, such as capital gains, interest income, and dividends. Furthermore, while fringe benefits are taxable, the bill eliminates valuation problems by valuing all fringe benefits at the actual cost to the employer of providing the benefits.

Mr. President, implementation of a flat tax will have a profound effect on the economy by stimulating growth in several ways. First, it will stimulate economic growth through increased savings resulting from the elimination of the tax on interest income. The increased savings will put downward pressure on interest rates and thus reduce the cost of capital.

Second, it will stimulate economic growth through the elimination of tax on capital gains. This will encourage investment and expansion of capital funds, which will lead to more businesses and more jobs.

Third, a flat tax will stimulate economic growth by eliminating the tax on dividends. This eliminates the penalty for investing in stock and will stimulate greater capital availability for economic growth.

Finally, a flat tax brings greater efficiency to the economy by eliminating preferences in the Tax Code that interfere in economic decisions.

Mr. President, the exemption from taxation of the first $10,000 of earned income for each taxpayer will provide relief for low-income individuals while also providing an incentive for individuals to enter the work force. The flat 10-percent rate eliminates the disincentive for one to increase one's income that results with a highly progressive system.

Mr. President, I don't know what could be more fair than a flat 10-percent tax. It makes sense both economically and administratively. Furthermore, true simplification of our Tax Code will go a long way toward restoring faith in our tax system. It deserves full consideration by every Member of Congress.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TAX SIMPLIFICATION: "LETS PLAY FLATBALL"

(By Karen Quick)

Americans are tired of playing Bracketball. Who wants to keep playing this "tax game" which has unfair, complicated rules; an unlimited fourth quarter with no timeouts; and is affiliated with an inefficient association at the point of bankruptcy? Complaints are commonplace; motivation is low; and initiative is almost nonexistent. It is a confusing and biased game. The players are involuntarily drafted for participation despite their physical conditions. Their contracts automatically renew annually requiring longer and longer playing periods. The more influencial athletes manage to gain preferential treatment from the promoters and officials. Some are allowed to sit the bench for extensive periods of time and some are even paid not to show up at all. Needless to say, this does little for team morale and enthusiasm. This favoritism puts an unnecessary burden on the rest of the team. The few remaining dedicated players, who show up for all the practices come rain or shine and who give it their best shot, look forward to high scores. It gets to be a tough game as these dedicated players are forced to compensate for the "bench sitters" and "game cutters." There is a noncommittal attitude spreading among the ranks. Partly to blame is the large staff of inconsistent coaches who have different ideas of how the game is to be played. More and more of the officials are using poor judgment to call the plays. Many illegal substitutes, illegal blockings, and intentional fouls go uncalled. A lot of bloody noses result. Nobody, including the promoters and officials, seems to know how the game is to be played. One of the most infuriating aspects of Bracketball is the constant movement of the goal line. When the players get near it, the officials move it. There are strong rumors circulating in the locker rooms that a players' strike is in the works. They are tackling an enormous task in their efforts to change to a simple, fair, efficient game called "Flatball."

This fictitious analogy of our current system of American taxation may be somewhat exaggerated in pointing out the inherent problems. Yet, it brings to light the need for simplicity, fairness, and efficiency in our system of taxation. Such a tax reform referred to above as "Flatball" would not only provide needed revenue, it would also stimulate the economy, lighten the administrative load, and improve compliance. The most noteworthy result would be a boost to those precious intangibles; morale, motivation, and ingenuity.

To better understand the need for tax reform, some brief background information on the definition and history of American taxation will be given first. Numerous indictments of the current income tax system will follow. The last section will contain workable methods of sound income tax reform.

DEFINITION OF TAXATION

"The art of taxation consists of plucking the greatest number of feathers from a goose with the least amount of squawking." This popular saying equates the unpleasant task of collecting taxes with the plucking of feathers. It implies the need for an economically balanced method that is viewed by the populous as simple, fair, and efficient.

What is a tax and why is it levied? "Tax" is defined as a compulsory contribution levied upon persons, property, or businesses for the support of government. This basic definition makes no implication that taxes are imposed to resolve all the nation's financial and social problems. The tax laws were not intended to legalize social engineering as a government business. In a July 8, 1982 Wall Street Journal articles by Christopher Conte, the following quotation from Senator Hatfield was given; "By attempting to solve every social and economic problem through the tax code, we have put a greater burden on the average taxpayer." Taxes are not defined as a vehicle to be used to subsidize special interest groups regardless of their merits. The meaning is clear and simple. Taxes are collected to pay the necessary military and civil expenses that provide goods, services and order without stifling economic growth or human ingenuity.

HISTORY OF AMERICAN TAXATION

Chief Justice John Marshall stated in 1819 during the famous case of McCulloch v. Maryland "the power to tax is the power to destroy." The power to tell the citizenry how much money they must pay to make their government work must be jealously guarded. The writers of the Constitution were very much aware of this fact. They knew one of the major causes of the War of Independence was the imposition of taxes by the British Parliament on the colonies without their consent.

In the United States, the first income tax was enacted in 1861 to help finance the Civil War. It allowed a $600.00 exemption and levied a 3% charge on incomes below $10,000 and a 5% charge on incomes above that level. In 1864, the rates were increased to 5% and 10%. Tax receipts peaked in 1866 when income tax accounted for about 25% of federal revenue. In 1871, Representatives Dennis McCarthy of New York expressed the view of the income tax opponents in these words, "unequal, perjury-provoking, and crime-encouraging, because it is at war with the right of a person to keep private and regulate his business affairs and financial matters." Senator John Sherman of Ohio responded with these remarks: "When you come to examine the income tax you will find that it applies, it is true, to only about 60 thousand people; but they do not pay their proper share of other taxes. Why? Can a rich man with an overflowing revenue consumer more sugar or coffee or tea, or drink more beer or whiskey, or chew more tobacco, than a poor man? You tax tobacco at the same rate per pound, whether it is the tobacco for the wealthiest or the poorest. . . . But when in a system of taxation you are compelled to reach out to many objects, you must endeavor to equalize your general results. . . . Therefore, when it is complained that the tax on an article consumed is unjust upon the poor, because the poor have to consume a greater proportion of their income in its purchase than the rich, we answer that to countervail that we have levied a reasonable income tax upon such incomes as are above the wants and necessities of life. That is the answer and it is a complete answer; because, if you leave your system of taxation to rest solely upon consumption, without any tax upon property or income, you do make an unequal and unjust system." These words of Sherman and other supporters of an income tax failed to gain a renewal of the tax. Thus, the income tax law expired in 1872 because it was considered an invasion of privacy with socialistic tendencies.

Between 1873 and 1893, members of Congress introduced 68 different income tax bills. In 1894, a 2% income tax on incomes over $4,000 was finally passed with much controversy. But the U.S. Supreme Court declared the tax unconstitutional and in violation of Article 1, Section 2, Paragraph 3 which says that all direct taxes must be levied among the states in proportion to their population. Congress circumvented the Supreme Court's decision by proposing a constitutional amendment on July 12, 1909. The well-known sixteenth amendment was ratified on February 29, 1913 by 42 states. This removed the constitutional hurdle and gave Congress the authority to tax incomes from whatever source derived; without apportionment among the several states and without regard to any census or enumeration."

After more than 40 years from the expiration of the Civil War income tax, the first legal income tax was enacted under the leadership of President Woodrow Wilson. It granted a $3,000 exemption for single persons and a $4,000 exemption for married couples. The graduated rate began at 1% on the first $20,000 of taxable income and ranged to a top rate of 7% on taxable incomes over $500,000. Net profits of corporations were taxed at a flat rate of 1%. Only about 0.4% of the population filed tax returns in 1913. All federal receipts amounted to abut 2.6% of GNP.

The next 40 years was just as stormy for the income tax. From 1913 to 1954 the income tax was part of America's struggle for survival through war and depression. By the time WWI had ended, three separate tax bills had increased tax rates nearly tenfold and exemptions had dropped significantly. But only 8% of the population paid taxes. President Warren G. Harding's Secretary of Treasury, Andrew Mellon, argued persuasively for tax reduction to foster economic growth. He stated: "Any man of energy and initiative in this country can get what he wants out of life. But when that initiative is crippled by legislation or by a tax system which denies him the right to receive a reasonable share of his earnings, then he will no longer exert himself and the country will be deprived of the energy on which its continued greatness depends. . . . On the other hand, a decrease of taxes causes an inspiration to trade and commerce which increases the prosperity of the country. . . .

With a large part of the population tired of war and taxes, Mellon's proposals gained ground. In 1921, the maximum tax rate was cut from 77% to 58% and in 1926 it was finally cut to 25%. Credit is given to Mellon and his support for tax cuts that spurred the economic boom of the 1920's. A get-rich-quick attitude pervaded the scene and many people had their shirts riding on the stock market. This speculative fever prevented sound financial decisions and resulted in a rocky financial structure. Frantic transactions were prevalent. "Even the professional analyst of financial properties was sometimes bewildered when he found Co A holding a 20% interest in Co B, and Co B an interest in Co C, while C in turn invested in A, and D held shares in each of the others. But few investors seemed to care about actual worth. . . ."

Until the Great Depression of the 1930's, Americans practiced the notion of a limited role for federal government with correspondingly low taxes. Except for periods of war or recession, revenues from excises and customs were sufficient to finance those activities widely regarded as federal functions. But when the Great Depression took hold, President Herbert Hoover sponsored tax increases in a vain effort to balance the budget that reduced personal allowances and pushed the top tax bracket from 25% to 63%. The economy was too weak to provide sufficient revenue. Increased rates just made matters worse. Taxes were now spent on human needs as well as national defense. When World War II broke out, millions of Americans went back to work and taxes were increased. Before the war was over, rates exceeded 90% and three-fourths of the population had to pay income taxes. A "class tax" had been replaced by a "mass tax." After World War II, rates were not greatly reduced. This was the first time marginal peacetime rates, even for the middle classes and corporate businesses, exceeded 40% and even 50%. The role of government had become more involved creating a much larger establishment requiring continuously larger revenue for its ever-increasing expenditures. With the acceptance of a larger government establishment, people realized high tax rates were inevitable. The Internal Revenue Code of 1954 preserved high tax rates ranging from 20% to 91%. It laid the foundation for the slow downhill slide to our current complicated, unfair tax system.

The end of the 1950's ushered in a new business term "tax planning" (a euphemism for tax avoidance) and a new profession appeared on the scene—"tax consultant." A reform introduced by President Kennedy lowered the top rate to 70%. Another tax cut, in 1969, lowered the top rate for salary income to 50%. In 1981, legislation was passed to enact President Reagan's three-year 25% across the board tax cut that reduced the range to 11%-50% for all types of income and introduced inflation indexing. These reductions only slightly modified the progressivity of the income tax system and preserved the unfair tax expenditures and loopholes.

Tax revenue from federal, state, and local governments amounts to approximately one-third of the Gross National Product. About 35% of all government revenues is collected by the state and local levels. It is in the form of individual income taxes, corporated income taxes, sales taxes, property taxes, and various fees and charges. Recent dramatic events such as Proposition 13 in California and Proposition 2½ in Massachusetts have brought some needed reform. Although reforming state and local government taxes is an important controversial subject, this paper will focus on the federal tax policies that generate about 65% of all government receipts.

What are the sources of federal revenue? Nearly one-half is derived from individual income taxes. This category amounted to 49% of all federal receipts in 1982. This percentage has been as low as 12% in 1940 and stayed around 45% during the 1960's and 1970's. The fastest growing category in the federal system is the social security taxes that provided about 34% of the total revenue in 1982. Corporate income taxes as a share of federal receipts steadily dropped throughout the 1970's. In 1982, this category generated about 8% of the revenue. Excises provided approximately 5%; estate and gift taxes brought in barely over 1% and other miscellaneous charges were just under 3% of the total receipts.

Federal income taxes for individuals have increased from about $120 billion in 1974 to about $300 billion in 1982. During this same period, corporate income taxes stayed relatively flat at about $50 billion causing a decline in their share of overall federal receipts. To provide sufficient revenue for the current level of government operations, a simplified tax system would have to be capable of generating approximately $350 billion if both the individual and corporate income tax structure were overhauled.

The proposal that will be recommended in this paper would replace the existing individual and corporate income taxes leaving the other aspects of the federal tax structure intact.

Why is a tax reform needed? The answer to this question could easily exceed 2,000 pages which is approximate length of the Internal Revenue Code. Only the main indictments against the current income tax system will be covered in this paper. The four main dimensions to the inefficiency of the present system encompass economic barriers, complexity, stiffled intangibles and administrative difficulty.

Going back to the basic definition of taxation, we are reminded that the reason for the collection of taxes is to support the government as it provides necessary goods, services, and order without stiffling economic growth or human ingenuity. Our current income tax system fails to meet the fundamental purpose of its existence. It produces too little revenue. The United States government spends more on defense and domestic programs than it collects in tax revenue. Federal taxes went from a level of 3% of the Gross National Product in 1929 to about 19% in 1982. However, government spending amounted to approximately 24% of the Gross National Product in 1982. Chronic deficits over the last two decades not only offend the notion of good fiscal housekeeping, but also injure the economy and create unnecessary distortions. In fiscal year 1982, after the enactment of a large budget reduction, the federal budget still had a deficit for the 13th straight year and for the 19th time in the last 20 years. Deficits have grown in recent years at such a rate that three-fourths of the 486 billion dollars in deficit accumulated from 1962-1982 resulted since 1974. From fiscal year 1946 through 1960, deficits as a percent of Gross National Product averaged about 0.4%. Over the next ten years the deficit equivalent averaged 0.8% of the Gross National Product. But over the next eleven years, the average magnitude of the deifcit rose to 2.4% of the Gross National Product.

Budget deficits reduce the growth of productive capacity when the economy is operating at a high level of employment. Deficits absorb over one-half of national savings leaving less savings available for investments in productive expansions. To maintain high levels of investment, the United States must borrow from abroad. If present trends continue, the United States could easily become a net debtor to the rest of the world.

Because deficits force the government to complete for available saving, interest rates remain artificially high. These high rates discourage purchases of long-term assets such as housing. They also overvalue the dollar causing a competitive disadvantage for the United States in the world market.

Closely tied to the problem of persistent, chronic deficits is the accusation that the federal government has become bloated, disorganized, wasteful, and inefficient. Is the federal government too big? Donald Lambro, Washington correspondent for the United Press International, would shout an emphatic "yes"! Mr. Lambro concludes, "Americans have more government than they need, more than they want, and more than they can afford. Like a riderless locomotive whose throttle has been pulled wide open, the federal government is running out of control. This paper will not attempt to address the issue concerning the excessiveness of the federal government. An organized and efficient use of income taxes directly relates to the amount of revenue needed and the existence of a balanced budget.

Another economic indictment against the current tax system is that increased earnings with progressive rates cause "Bracket Creep." Inflation pushes income into higher marginal tax rates making the overall effect of "Bracket Creep" worse. Millions of Americans face high marginal tax rates that were intended for those with much higher incomes. The Treasury Department reported that in 1965 a family of four earning a median income had a tax rate of 17% which increased to 24% in 1980. For families with twice the median income the rate almost doubled from 22% to 43%. This increase was due to the progressive rate structure and inflation. "Bracket Creep" is leaving many families with less real purchasing power after taxes.

For the last 20 years, each time family income rose by 10%, government receipts increased approximately 15%. High marginal tax rates affect people's incentive to produce additional earnings. It impacts upon the worker's decision to work overtime or to go play tennis. The higher the marginal rate, the cheaper the price of leisure. High rates reduce capital formation and economic growth. Professor Arthur Laffer illustrates the relation between taxes and incentives with the "Laffer Curve." He restates the concept of diminishing returns. "At some point, additional taxes so discourage the activity being taxed, such as working or investing, that they yield less revenue rather than more. There are two rates that yield the same amount of revenue: high taxes on low production; or low taxes on high production. . . . There is, however, at any one time, some rate that allows the government maximum revenue and yet does not discourage maximum production. Congressman Jack Kemp in his book entitled, An American Renaissance, gave the following illustration: "Consider the baker who is taxed 20% on the first loaf of bread, 40% on the second load, 60% on the third, 80% on the fourth, and 100% on the fifth and who can produce only one loaf per day. His objective would be to increase his output and increase his income. His rewards for pushing forward on the frontiers of baking technology are reduced again and again for each additional loaf he bakes. When he is at the level of four loaves—or at the margin, the 100% tax rate—all incentive to increase his baking productivity ends because if the baker were to produce a fifth loaf of bread, it would be taxed entirely away.

A fourth economic indictment against the present tax system is that loopholes and taxshelters are allowing many Americans to avoid their fair share of the tax burden. Since 1979, there has been a rapid increase in the number of tax preferences and in their revenue loss. According to the Joint Committee on Taxation and the Congressional Budget Office, there were 104 tax preferences in effect in the fiscal year 1982. These preferences caused the tax base to shrink to less than one-half of the 1982 national income. In 1981, these 104 preferences cost $229 billion in lost revenue. According to the IRS publication, Statistics of Income for 1981, the category of itemized deductions alone reduced adjusted gross income by 24% that year or by $254.4 billion. Interest expense was the single largest itemized deduction claimed in 1981 amounting to $108.7 billion. Senator Bill Bradley of New Jersey gave an example of the largest syndicated tax shelter in history. He included it in his book entitled, The Fair Tax, Chapter 3 appropriately subtitled, "True Tales of Amazing Tax Shelters." The example follows: "The largest syndicated tax shelters in history allows the partners to purchase 45,000 old billboards for $485 million and depreciate them over the 15-year write-off period for real estate. When the billboards are sold, they will generate a long-term capital gain taxed at preferential rates. Each investor must put up $150,000, so this shelter is only available to the big hitters. However, each was promised net tax benefits over a six-year period worth $181,950; that is the tax benefits exceeded the original investment. Is this what the President meant by supply-side economics? Obviously not. No economic growth results from simple reshuffling the ownership of 45,000 existing billboards." With this example it is easy to see how families who reported income in 1981 of more than $1 million paid an effective rate of only 17.7% through the use of tax shelters.

In order to manipulate transactions to avoid tax, some keen minds had to connive the schemes. Out of the approximate 46,000 active tax professionals needed to interpret the complex tax law, several thousand specialize in tax shelters. Think of the talent and time expended in this tax shelter industry. It is sad to admit but our income tax system has created an industry devoted to the inefficient use of investment capital. Our tax system encourages people to lose money for tax purposes and it encourages special interests to lobby for more and more selective relief.

To better understand the existence of tax preferences, we must recall the squeeze of inflation and the pain of high tax rates. Many groups have lobbied for selective relief before their elected representatives. The most powerful and influential got an exclusion, deduction, or credit to suit their special interest. Legislators keep succumbing to the pressures of the lobbyists who keep repeating the "little ditty" made famous by Senator Russell Long of Louisiana; "Don't tax you, don't tax me, tax that fellow behind the tree." President Reagan even abandoned his "clean bill" principles to join the crowd supporting special interests before the passage of the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981. A New York Times editorial said; "Greed and politics are running wild on Capitol Hill, and the Nation's great economic difficulties, which were supposed to be the object of budget and tax reductions, are recklessly ignored." Once again the well-being and prosperity of the nation lost out to the flawed logic of special interest groups. When will the legislators stop playing Santa Claus to influential lobbyists?

Evidenced by a newspaper article as recent as June 7, 1986, the Senate Finance Committee still insists on playing Santa Claus. The Greensboro News and Record article stated the Committee was proposing to give away more than 170 "toys" to special interest beneficiaries, such as "cellular telephones," "strawberry square," and "Chanel." Senator Howard Metzenbaum of Ohio said, "There is blatant concealment in this bill. . . . We're still trying to find all the special provisions that are hidden in those 2,847 pages." Senator Metzenbaum listed 16 specific provisions that warranted further study. What about the remaining 154 special interest provisions? Another article, one week later in the same newspaper, gave some specifics on one of the loopholes that had been proposed by the Senate. Unocal of Los Angeles was to forego paying up to $50 million of federal taxes because they had incurred a $4.4 billion debt fighting off an attempted takeover. This loophole was killed by Senator Metzenbaum's amendment but what about the remaining loopholes? The whole legislative process seems to "degenerate into a scramble to see who can get the largest slices of a shrinking pie." Nobody wins in this sport of mutual plunder. Real economic expansion through fair and simple tax reform is the surest remedy for this divisive sport.

Taking into consideration the high tax rates of our progressive structure, the high level of inflation, and the large number of unfair tax preferences, is it any surprise that the underground economy in the United States is growing so rapidly? A fifth indictment against the present tax system is that it encourages tax evasion. "Sheep may stand still while they are sheared, but taxpayers do not." An estimated 25 million working Americans engage in both legal and illegal activities to hide all or a portion of their income from taxation. The magnitude of this problem is described by Sylvia Porter in the following manner: "A veiled economy more vast in scope than most of the individual economies of most other countries on this globe lies underneath the in-the-open economy in which tens of millions of us in the United States live. An immense proportion of all the transactions that occur in our country take place in this underground—but they are untraced in any fashion, thus uncounted, unreported and most significant, untaxed. You yourself may well be a part of it, without even being aware that you are." The Internal Revenue Service estimated the 1981 loss of revenue from legal activities to be $81.5 billion. In addition, the Internal Revenue Service estimated a $9 billion tax evasion from illegal activities such as drug traffic and prostitution. Some experts think the legal and illegal sources of income that do not appear in the Gross National Product is much higher than these Internal Revenue estimates. Some analysts claim that unreported income in the United States is close to a trillion dollars. For every four dollars of legal income reported, there is another one hidden from view.

Why is tax cheating so prevalent? People are very dissatisfied with unfair loopholes that favor special interest, poor fiscal policies that contribute to inflation, steep graduated rates that cause "Bracket Creep" during inflationary times, government waste, and the unresponsiveness of the tax legislators to the national interest. The cure for these ills is not cheating. The solution is a complete overhaul of the federal income tax system. This would not only boost the Gross National Product but remove some of the incentives to join the underground economy. Less participation in the underground economy would increase the tax base already riddled with unfair, excessive loopholes, and reduce the burden on taxpayers.

A sixth economic indictment against the current system of taxation is the disincentives and distortions it causes on saving, investing, working, and prices. High marginal tax rates discourage every productive activity. The incentives to take a risk, accept added responsibilities, and expand our Gross National Product, are dulled when a big hunk of the prize goes to somebody else. "When individuals bear the full cost of their actions and are able to reap fully the gains that occur from their activities, they use resources wisely. When I bear the full cost of food, clothing, telephone service, recreation facilities and thousands of other items, you can be reasonably sure that I will conserve on my use of these items. I will not consume them unless I value the services that they provide more than the cost of the provision. Similarly, when I am able to reap the full benefits of my productive activities, you can be sure that I will undertake even unpleasant tasks when the benefits (usually personal income) exceed the costs. When individuals bear the full cost and reap the full benefits, they will use resources in a wealth-creating manner. They will engage in positive-sum economic activity. . . . Problems arise when a sizeable share of the benefits or costs emanating from economic activity accrues to nonparticipating parties. High marginal tax rates make it possible for individuals to enjoy tax deductible items at a fraction of their cost to our economy. . . . However, deductibility does not reduce the cost to society of the valuable resources used to produce these commodities." The marketplace is far more efficient in allocating resources and setting prices than the Internal Revenue Code. The present system makes us less competitive in the world economy and prevents us from reaching our economic potential as a nation. A tax deduction is of little benefit if there is no income to subtract is from.

The tax laws interfere with business decisions in an unwise, haphazard way. High marginal tax rates make consumption cheap and encourage debt instead of equity. This causes saving to decline and in turn reduces investment which is the foundation for furture economic growth. This disincentive is aggravated by inflation which pushes people into higher marginal tax brackets even though their real pre-tax income does not change. Tax policy distorts income during real economic growth and inflationary periods causing consumption to become cheaper and saving more expensive. "The current tax code distorts investment decisions so that economically desirable investments often appear less attractive than those where tax incentives inflate profitability. Section after seciton tells new investor what lines of business to enter, tells existing corporations how to go about their work, and puts a heavy tax on the profits of successful and productive corporations. The whole system makes no economic sense." To improve incentives and reduce investment distortions, a tax system is needed with a much broader base that permits a low tax rate.

The second main dimension to the inefficiency of the current tax system is the complexity of the Internal Revenue Code. The legal complexity makes comprehension, compliance, and administration difficult. Transactional complexity encourages individuals and businesses to engage in complicated maneuvers to avoid taxes. The lack of simplicity makes the uniform application of the tax laws difficult to achieve. It also imposes a high cost of taxation.

"It was a bizarre trial, a tax protest case. The defense lawyer didn't have a chance, but his closing argument was a humdinger. It went like this: The lawyer hefted the Internal Revenue Code and leaned on the jury box. 'I wish this book could talk,' he said plaintively. 'I wish this book could talk because it would crawl over this rail, it would crawl up into your laps, it would look up at you and it would cry, 'Nobody understands me.' "

The above segment was taken from a May 13, 1983 Wall Street Journal article by Caryl Conner, who was a speechwriter in the Carter White House. In her article entitled "Offering Incentives to Tax Evaders," she realizes the essential function of the Internal Revenue Code is to raise revenue but it creates tax evasion by its complexity and "revenue hemorrhage." She is critical of the Code's ambiguity, chaos, loopholes, social engineering, and unenforceability. Let's not take Ms. Conner's word for it, let's go right to the source—section 1302. "Definition of Averageable Income; Related Definitions" states:

(1) Average Income.—

(1) In general.—For purposes of this part, the term "averageable income" means the amount by which income for the computation year (reduced as provided in paragraph 2) exceeds 120% of average base period income.

(2) Reduction.—The taxable income for the computation year shall be reduced by—

(A) The amount (if any) to which section 72(m)(5) applies—and

(B) The amounts included in the income of a beneficiary of a trust under section 667(a)

(b) Average Base Period Income.—For purposes of this part—

(1) In general.—The term "average base period income" means one-fourth of the sum of the base period incomes for the base period.

Is it surprising less than one-third of those eligible to reduce their tax computation by income averaging actually do so? In short, section 1301 means that if a person has a lot more income in 1984 than he (she) had in the past four years, the income averaging may lower the tax amount. Phrases such as "averageable income" and "base period income" are contained in this Code Section. The word "income" is also used. Nowhere in the two thousand pages of the Internal Revenue Code is the word "income" defined. Since tax is imposed on "income," it would be logical to expect a definition in the beginning of the Code. Congress threw darts all around the bullseye with definitions of "gross income," "adjusted gross income," "taxable income," "earned income," "unearned income," "ordinary income," "averageable income" and others.

Tax law terminology is difficult to understand but the problem is aggravated by the use of such long sentences. A sentence in section 170(b)(i)(A) contains 379 words; another sentence in section 7701(a)(19) has 506 words. The Connecticut statute forbids the use of sentences longer than an average of 22 words and no sentence can be longer than 50 words. To comprehend the exact meaning of some of these long Code sentences, the reader would need to construct flow charts. What kind of grade would the English high school teacher of those tax legislators give her ex-students on clarity and sentence structure?

The application of tax law is not uniform. In an attempt to understand and fairly apply the more than 2,000 pages of basic tax law, there are about 10,000 pages of tax regulations and thousands of pages of interpretations and judicial opinions. Even with all this research material available, most taxpayers do not understand the tax laws. Judges do not interpret the laws uniformly. Consider the two separate cases of a Minnesota state trooper and a New Hamsphire state trooper. The argument was that since the state was his employer, all the highways were the "premises" of his employer. Since he was required to eat at restaurants on the highway, the meals were "furnished for the employer's convenience on his premises." The Minnesota state trooper won the court case. Unfortunately, the state trooper in New Hampshire fared worse. The court there stated that it did not go along with this "metaphysical concept" concerning the state's territory being the "premises" of the employer. The court further stated that the meals must be "furnished in kind." With the same facts, two different states had two different rulings.

Former Commissioner of the Internal Revenue Service, Jerome Kurtz, stated the Service was aware of 3.8 million taxpayers who underreported their 1979 income but an astonishing 2 million overstated their income. In addition to the confusing, verbose language of the Code, the taxpayer has to contend with complicated, lengthy forms. People turn to commercial tax preparers, IRS employees, and certified public accountants for help. Facing up to the complexity of the Code, it is understandable that these assistors and preparers do not always get the right tax amounts. Certified Public Accountants have the best record for accuracy but they are a very expensive source of help. In 1981, about 41% of all filers had their returns prepared by tax professionals with a price tag of over $1 billion. To obtain a true picture of the cost of taxation, the time spent collecting and recording data must be considered as well as the time spent filling out the various forms. Taxpayers must also fund the operations of the Internal Revenue Service. Its budget grew from about $2 billion in 1978 to approximately $3 billion for 1983. Lumping all these direct and indirect costs together, taxpayers bear between $9 and $10 billion for preparing and verifying their taxes, above what they pay in income taxes.

The tax laws are complex and ambiguous. They need to be reformed to impose a low flat rate on a much broader base. The laws could be simple if there were no exceptions.

The third dimension to the inefficiency of the present tax system is the negative impact upon human intangibles. In some way, all the previously discussed indictments have a stiffling effect upon those precious intangibles. When disincentives and dissatisfaction are high, morale and initiative are low. This puts a damper on human ingenuity which is one of the greatest sources of improved productivity. History has proven reward, not deprivation, to be the best method for motivating people to be aspiring, risk-taking, and enterprising. Congressman Jack Kemp, in his book entitled An American Renaissance, summarizes the way our current tax system operates. Human ingenuity "isn't just amazing inventors like Edison or dramatic managerial innovators like Henry Ford. Improvements in efficiency spring from millions of creative workers, supervisors, and managers whose intimate knowledge of their tasks leads to new methods of improving products or saving costs. From this vast pool of dispersed knowledge, a market economy draws people who gamble that they have a better idea about how to provide more or better goods with fewer or cheaper resources. But they won't take those risks unless they will be rewarded if they succeed. By continually removing the incentives which reward achievement, we have created a system which taxes the imagination, ingenuity, and enterprise of the American people.

The last dimension to the inefficiency of the present system of taxation is administrative difficulty. The economic barriers, excess burdens, unfair rules and repressed intangibles pose problems in collection and enforcement. Complexity, combined with inflation and high marginal rates, encourage tax avoidance and evasion. These factors increase the administrative burdens. The Internal Revenue Service employed about 85,000 people in 1983, which was about the same number as in 1979. During this same period, returns being audited because of tax shelter issues increased from 183,000 to 335,000. The proportion of returns examined in 1984 was only 1.3%. Administrative expenditures of the Internal Revenue Service dropped from 0.54% of revenue collected in 1975 to 0.41% in 1981 before reaching 0.48% in 1984. Over this same period, the ratio of IRS employees to total returns filed declined by 19%. With taxpayers devoting more time and resources in avoidance techniques, administrative costs must increase to ensure proper compliance.

An income tax reform removing special deductions, credits and allowances would simplify enforcement. Compliance costs could be utilized more effectively if the tax system had a broad base with a low flat rate. Internal Revenue Service could concentrate on unreported income without being bogged down with verifying a proliferation of credits, exclusions, allowances and deductions. With understandable rules and low rates, a sense of fairness would be present that would foster voluntary compliance.

Having reviewed the numerous inefficiencies of the American income tax system, it is refreshing to present some workable recommendations for sound tax reform. The simplification proposals set forth in this paper will suggest fundamental changes in tax laws, forms, and procedures for the individual and corporation income taxes.

Tax legislators, accountants, administrators, most other taxpayers, and even some of the guilty tax evaders want tax reform. They just can not seem to agree on how to reform the tax laws. Some people have even developed a strong dislike for the phrase "tax reform. The cannot help but recall the numerous changes made in prior years that started out as tax simplification measures but resulted in another lost battle for efficiency and fairness.

An Internal Revenue employee shared her astonishment at the size of one estate tax return that was about two inches thick, complete with index tabs. The next day she realized that estate return was not so long compared to other tax returns that were filled in the Greensboro District of the Internal Revenue Service. Tax returns had been received that individually filled the contents of a cardboard box one foot deep. It is time to raise the confidence of all taxpayers in the income tax system. True tax reform without loopholes, steep rates, and complicated rules is urgently needed.

How could true federal income tax reform be achieved? The basic steps to true reform follow:

a. Abolish loopholes
b. Broaden the tax base
c. Change to a low, flat rate
d. Deduct a personal allowance
e. Exempt an amount for each dependent
f. File simplified forms 1040 and 1120

What are the goals of sound tax policy? After implementation of the above tax simplification, the following would result:

a. Administrative ease
b. Boosted intangible
c. Conserved resources
d. Dynamic economy
e. Efficiency
f. Fairness

To achieve these goals for individual income taxes, the following tax law changes are recommended:

1. Repeal all individual adjustments to income, exclusions, deductions, and credits (except withholding and excess FICA credits). Depreciation would be allowed at a rate that provides an adequate cushion for inflation but would not favor one asset over another.

2. Include employee compensation, such as wages, salaries, tips, pensions, bonuses, prizes, fringe benefits, workman compensation and the market value of non-cash items.

3. Exclude employee reimbursements for business expenses and employer provided medical benefits.

4. Include income (loss) from business activities and any other income sources.

5. Allow a personal allowance of $6,000.00 for married taxpayers; $4,500.00 for head of household status, and $3,000,00 for single status.

6. Allow dependent allowances of $1,000.00 each.

7. Apply a low, flat rate against taxable income.

8. File on simplified form 1040.

9. Require residential leasor information. (Space is provided on form 1040).l

10. Require withholding at the source whenever possible.

The individual income tax return, form 1040, would be used primarily to report employee compensation, dividends, interest, capital gains (losses), and the net income (loss) from sole proprietorships, partnerships, and small business corporations. Rents, royalties, and other sources of individual income would be included on form 1040. The personal and dependent allowances would provide a floor so that the poorer families would pay little or no income tax. After combining all sources of income and subtracting the allowance(s), taxable income would remain. If the amount was positive, then the flat rate would be applied to arrive at a total income tax.

The goals previously listed could be achieved by implementing the following major revisions to the corporate income tax structure:

1. Gross revenue would be reduced by ordinary and necessary business expenses provided such items were included in receipts.

2. Business expenses would include the cost of purchases of goods and services used for business purposes during the tax year.

3. Dividends paid to shareholders and reported on their returns would be excluded on the corporate return. Federal income tax would be withheld on dividends which would be reflected on the 1099-DIV forms sent to shareholders.

4. Depreciation and amortization would be allowed at a rate that provides an adequate cushion for inflation but would not favor one asset over another.

5. Exemptions and exclusions, such as the capital gain exclusion, would no longer be allowed.

6. Tax credits would be repealed. This includes investment tax credit, jobs credit, research and development credit, and business energy credit.

7. Tax would be computed on the simplified form 1120 using the same low, flat rate assessed on the individual income tax return.

8. If negative income resulted, the loss would be carried forward and interest income allowed. There would be no limit to the amount of the loss of the number of years carried forward.

The underlying foundation for income tax reform for individual and corporate incomes is a much broader base with a low flat rate. The most unfair aspect of our current system is the large array of complicated loopholes that haphazardly and uneconomically grant selective relief. A wise economist commented several years ago, "Taxpayers using loopholes are a lot like a crowd of people standing tip-toed watching a parade. They are all very uncomfortable on their toes, but no one can stand flat on his feet because he would lose his view. Yet, if they all could agree to get off their toes together, they all would see just as well, and they would feel much better too." Loopholes must be abolished in order to restore a sense of fairness and to encourage economic growth.

The flat rate income tax system would be fine tuned for maximum efficiency. The lowest possible rate would be applied against a broad tax base to provide sufficient revenue to fund the fiscal budget. (A temporary source of revenue to pay off the accumulated deficits will be discussed later.) A low flat rate of 10% on a very broad base has been proposed by Senator Jesse Helms. Robert Hall and Alvin Rabushka first published in the Wall Street Journal their proposal for a flat tax that closely fits the consumption tax concept. They are confident that a low, flat rate of 19% on individual and corporate incomes would generate more revenue than the current system and would, thus, take less time to balance the federal budget. The recommendations outlined in this paper conform to the rules of comprehensive income taxation instead of consumption taxation. The flat rate would be lower than 19% because the base would be broader. The flat rate could hoover around 10% and generate sufficient revenue to fund an efficient federal government operation.

To clean up some of the results of poor fiscal housekeeping, the flat rate could be increased. But to interfere as little as possible with saving, investing, and working decisions, a temporary source of revenue could be implemented. A national retail sales tax on nonessential, luxury goods could supplement the income taxes collected. These funds would be earmarked for paying off the accumulated deficits. Implementation would be faster and more efficient if the states were used as administrative agents. The rates should be set high enough to cover existing state retail sales taxes. This supplemental tax system could be a powerful tool to wipe out the accumulated deficits. The importance of previously discussed problems, such as reduced investments, economic distortions, and high interest rates have serious repercussions on the entire nation. Whether these deficits are funded by a slightly higher flat tax or a national retail sales tax is not as important a decision as the need to pay them off.

With simpler and fairer laws, the costs that taxpayers bear to prepare, verify, and pay their income taxes would be greatly reduced. The removal of loopholes and the expansion of the tax base would also reduce administrative costs. A low, flat tax would restore a sense of fairness that would make administration much easier. It would improve the intergrity of the administrators which is the heart of voluntary compliance.

One of the key concepts to efficient tax administration is withholding at the source. Wages, pension, interest, dividends, etc., would be subject to the low flat rate. Using a withholding chart, the payer would retain and remit the income tax to the Internal Revenue Service via the quarterly employment tax return (form 941). The recipient would be issued an information document such as W-2 or 1099 showing the total income and withholdings. If the recipients had only wage and salary income, it could be possible that they would have the correct amount remitted to IRS and would not have to file a 1040 form. They would, however, be required to claim the correct filing status and number of dependents on their withholding certification (form W-4). This form would be updated annually and could require copies of birth certificates for each dependent. Annual wage statements, forms W-2, would still be issued.

Former IRS Commissioner Mortimer Chaplin estimated the following percentages of income types go unreported:

1. 35-50 percent of royality and rental income

2. 30-40 percent all self-employed income

3. 17-22 percent of capital gains

4. 8-16 percent dividend interest income.

The flat proposals would help compliance in the last category by requiring withholding at the source. Payers of royalty income would also be required to withhold at the source. Payers of residential rental income would submit an information form stating the amount and recipient of the rental income. Individual payers would be provided space on their form 1040 to give this information. A large amount of capital gain income results from real estate and stock transactions. Consideration could be given to the collection at the local government level for the income tax on real estate sales at the time the deeds are recorded. The seller could present documentation of the basis. It could be compared to the sales price to obtain the withholding amount for income taxes. When corporations sell stock, they could also compare the basis to the selling price and withhold the appropriate amount of income taxes at the flat rate. Withholding at the source and better utilization of information documents, would improve compliance.

With the repeal of loopholes, IRS would no longer utilize resources to verify a mass of deductions, exclusions, and credits. They could concentrate on sources of unreported income, the proper filing of returns, and the prompt payments of all taxes. With the implementation of the flat tax supplemented by a national retail sales tax on a temporary basis, the folks at IRS would find the laws easier to understand and enforce. Tax simplification would also improve public understanding of the tax laws and boost public confidence. Tax administrators would smile as they noticed the taxpaying public moving toward a model state of voluntary self-assessment.

The proposed tax simplification set forth in this paper would establish a fair and efficient income tax system. A redirection of efforts and capital would produce real growth. A growing, efficient economy would raise national output, stimulate human intangibles, and increase the standard of living. The American dream is not a scramble for a larger piece of a shrinking pie. In the words of Congressman Jack Kemp, "We must have economic growth . . ., which means we must press ahead to gain the necessary tax . . . reforms that will permit growth. We want to excite the elusive but vital qualities of human ingenuity and effort. Qualities important not only to an economy increasingly dominated by sophisticated services, but to the well-being and happiness of our nation's people. Ingenuity is discovered only through effort, an intangible substance which certainly means more, much more, than putting in hours. After all some people manage to retire on the job. Effort encompasses such things as a continual eagerness to acquire new knowledge and skills, a willingness to accept new responsibilities, to take the risk of initiating change. Effort can only be measured indirectly, by results, and the results are not only measured by personal prosperity but by the enrichment of community life as well.

GOODWIN AND PAGE,
CERTIFIED PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS,
Wilmington, NC, December 6, 1988.

Senator JESSE A. HELMS,
Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR HELMS: This is my second letter to your office during this year concerning the federal tax law as we know it today. I say "know it" with a great deal of reservation, as I do not believe anyone knows the current tax law. My earlier letter this year was a personal comment on the TRA '86, and the complexities and impractical aspects of this law.

Since the TRA '86, I believe we have had at least three more tax acts, two of them supposedly labeled Technical Corrections Act. I do not mind telling you, I am becoming very disappointed with my profession. I have been a practicing CPA since 1958, and feel like I should be pretty competent in the area of taxation, since I have had considerable experience regarding these matters.

The Internal Revenue Code as it stands today, is a very complex and unworkable mass of confusion. How are taxpayers, or for that matter, tax practitioners, going to prepare correct tax returns if they cannot understand the tax law. Whenever we do get to the point we feel we have some understanding of certain parts of the tax code, it is changed on us and we have to relearn it all over again. I know of no other profession, that is subject to the whims of Congress as the CPA profession. Sometimes I feel like giving up, walking out of my office, and not preparing another tax return at any time.

This is a bad feeling, when your profession is your means of livelihood, and you have tried to do a good job for many years, in servicing your clients and advising them properly in tax matters.

I also feel sorry for the IRS agents who have to audit tax returns. They are going to be just as confused, if not more so, than I am.

I realize the necessity of changing the tax act occasionally because it needs improving, or additional revenue needs to be generated. But, there is no sensible reason for passing tax acts like the ones Congress has done recently.

Once these acts are passed and the IRS starts working on them, they generate the most complex regulations that anyone can imagine. I have found it necessary to attend a great many tax seminars in the last several years, not to learn more about taxation, or to become more proficient, but just to keep my head above water. These sessions are usually conducted by well informed, tax professionals, who are some of the best in the country. I believe every session leader, without fail, makes vary lengthy comments on the disservice that Congress is doing to the American taxpayer, by passing such ridiculous and difficult legislation.

I could continue for quite a while, telling you of my frustration with the current tax laws, my adverse feelings towards elected representatives who would saddle us with such legislation. I do not know what can be done at this stage, but I feel something must be done, or our tax problems will become so bad, no one will be able to manage them.

Yours very truly,

R.A. GOODWIN.

FIFTY TAX PROS GIVE FIFTY DIFFERENT ANSWERS ON TEST

WASHINGTON.—Those still confused about the new federal tax law shouldn't feel as if they are alone. Fifty professionals who advertise themselves as experts calculated a mythical family's taxes and came up with 50 different answers.

Even worse, according to a survey by Money magazine, the experts' figure for the family's tax bill varied from $12,539 to $35,813. The correct answer, according to the accountant who devised the test, was $23,393.

"The abundance of mistakes our test turned up suggests that pros are nowhere near as knowledgeable about the tax law as they are supposed to be," Money says in its March issue. "After all, we were sampling highly regarded preparers who willingly accepted our challenge to calculate the model return."

The experts actually did worse than in a similar Money test a year ago when taxpayers were facing effects of the landmark 1986 tax law for the first time.

In last year's survey, the professionals also came up with 50 different answers but the gap between the highest and lowest was about 50 percent; this year, the gap was nearly 300 percent.

"I was completely surprised by the results," said Wesley R. Fitzpatrick of the Portland, Ore., office of Grant Thornton accountants, who made up this year's test.

"When the tax reform law was new, you could understand the confusion, but now it's hard to explain all the mistakes about fundamental rules," Mr. Fitzpatrick said.

The hypothetical family's tax return was tackled by 30 independent certified public accountants, 12 representatives of franchise return-preparation outlets, three certified public accountants from national accounting companies and five enrolled agents, who are tested and licensed by the Internal Revenue Service. Their fees range from $325 to $2,500.

According to Money, the only preparers who made no major goofs were five independent accountants, one enrolled agent, four franchised preparers and Mr. Fitzpatrick, who devised the test.

For the test, Mr. Fitzpatrick conjured up a three-member family whose tax problems are unlikely to be faced by most taxpayers. However, Money said, the experts made mistakes on basic tax provisions that could affect taxpayers at almost any income level.

For example, the family's 13-year-old son earned $600 mowing lawns but 16 of the professionals failed to note that he would have to file a return. Twelve of the experts made the wrong choice on the tax treatment of inherited U.S. savings bonds.

The family had salaries of $56,400 but both spouses quit their jobs during the year and took big lump-sum withdrawals from their pensions. The wife set up her own business; the husband was negotiating to buy his own company. The couple had several investments, owned two homes and inherited a third from the wife's mother.

The biggest problem for the experts—although it had a relatively minor impact on the family's taxes—was calculating the deduction for interest. The 1986 law made major changes on this deduction.

Ten preparers were wrong in claiming the husband's mother, who lived with the family all year, as a dependent. Nineteen experts claimed three times too much depreciation on equipment used in the wife's new business.

S. 419. A bill to provide for the collection of data about crimes motivated by race, religion, ethnicity, or sexual orientation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HATE CRIME STATISTICS ACT

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Hate Crimes Statistics Act. I am very pleased that 29 of my colleagues, including seven members of the Judiciary Committee, have joined me as original cosponsors of the Act. I want to extend my special thanks to Senators HATCH, METZENBAUM, CRANSTON, and KERRY whose leadership on the issue has ensured its continued progress. I am also particularly pleased to note that the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Senator BIDEN, has added his name to the list of original cosponsors.

Since my introduction of the Hate Crimes Statistics Act in the 100th Congress, I have spoken on the floor and in the Judiciary Committee about incidents of hatred and violence which continue to plague our country. Unfortunately, once again, I must report that hate-related violence appears to be on the rise. Just a few examples demonstrate the extent of the problem. In November, a 28-year-old Ethiopian man was beaten to death with a baseball bat as he was walking down the street in Oregon. Three members of the largest, most violent skinhead group in Oregon have been accused of the murder. Also in November, the Tifereth Israel Synagogue in San Diego, CA, was extensively spray-painted with antisemitic graffiti. Swastikas and other hate-related messages like "Adolf lives" were painted on the synagogue walls and stained glass windows. Also, this fall, the house of our colleague, Rep. MIKE ESPY, the first black Congressman from Mississippi since reconstruction, was maliciously vandalized.

These stories are just a small sample of the many incidents which occurred in 1988 alone. Indeed the limited data available suggests that 1988 may have been one of the worst years for hate-related activity. The Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith [ADL] reported that incidents of antisemitic behavior in 1988 rose to a 5-year high. Klanwatch of the Southern Poverty Law Center, which tracks the activities of the white supremacist groups, reported that white supremacist violence appeared to surge in 1988.

While there is little doubt that hate-motivated crimes exist and appear to be on the rise, there is no national data base to monitor the real extent of the problem. Without this information, many questions remain unanswered. These questions include whether the attacks that we read about are isolated events or symptoms of a more pervasive problem; whether hate-related violence is more prevalent in particular sections of the country or in particular kinds of communities; whether certain groups are more frequently victimized than others and whether we are experiencing a resurgence of racism and other types of bias.

The Hate Crime Statistics Act addresses this problem by directing the Attorney General to acquire data about serious crimes which manifest prejudice based on race, religion, sexual orientation, or ethnicity. We have worked with the Justice Department to ensure conformity with their existing programs for data collection. The bill specifically authorizes the Attorney General to establish guidelines for the collection of data. It also ensures that the privacy of crime victims will be protected by limiting the use of data to research or statistical purposes. The bill is virtually identical to S. 702, which unanimously passed the Senate Judiciary Committee last summer. It is also similar to H.R. 3193, which overwhelmingly passed the House last spring.

Collecting data will not erase bigotry. However, as Elie Weisel so dramatically portrayed in his book Night and as Attorney General Thornburgh wrote in the introduction to ADL's audit of antisemitic incidents, "unblinking exposure is the first step in prevention and reform."

It is my intention to move the bill as quickly as possible. I urge my colleagues to join the cosponsors of the bill in this effort and work with us for its prompt enactment. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill and statements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) this Act may be cited as the "Hate Crime Statistics Act".

(b)(1) Under the authority of Section 534 of title 28, United States Code, the Attorney General shall acquire data, for the calendar year 1990 and each of the succeeding 4 calendar years, about crimes that manifest evidence of prejudice based on race, religion, sexual orientation, or ethnicity, including where appropriate the crimes of murder, non-negligent manslaughter; forcible rape; aggravated assault, simple assault, intimidation; arson; and destruction, damage or vandalism of property.

(2) The Attorney General shall establish guidelines for the collection of such data including the necessary evidence and criteria that must be present for a finding of manifest prejudice and procedures for carrying out the purposes of this section.

(3) Nothing in this section creates a cause of action or a right to bring an action, including an action based on discrimination due to sexual orientation. As used in this section, the term "sexual orientation" means consensual homosexuality or heterosexuality. This subsection does not limit any existing cause of action or right to bring an action, including any action under the Administrative Procedure Act or the All Writs Act.

(4) Data acquired under this section shall be used only for research or statistical purposes and may not contain any information that may reveal the indentity of an individual victim of a crime.

(5) The Attorney General shall publish an annual summary of the data acquired under this section.

(c) There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section through fiscal year 1994.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senator PAUL SIMON and others in cosponsoring the Hate Crimes Statistics Act. This act requires the Attorney General to acquire data for the next 5 calendar years "about crimes that manifest evidence of prejudice based on race, religion, sexual orientation, or ethnicity, including where appropriate the crimes of murder, nonnegligent manslaughter, forcible rape, aggravated assault, simple assault, intimidation, arson and destruction, damage or vandalism of property."

Under the act, the Attorney General must establish guidelines for the collection of this data to ensure that the incidents reported truly reflect prejudice based on the characteristics delineated in the bill.

This bill is virtually identical to one which was reported favorably by the Judiciary Committee on a voice vote, August 10, 1988.

I stress that this act is only about Federal data collection. It creates no substantive rights or causes of action, as made clear by section 2(c). Moreover, it does not direct any State or local government or police agency to take any particular action. I hope, however, that the data collected under the act will be useful to state and local law enforcement agencies in deploying their resources and addressing hate crimes in their jurisdictions.

Mr. President, this act serves a vital purpose. While the Federal Bureau of Investigation, through its Unform Crime Reporting [UCR] Program, collects national crime statistics, there is no Federal recordkeeping concerning the occurrence of hate crimes.

Hate crimes are among the most heinous of all crimes because they strike so deeply at their victims' individuality and self-esteem. Differences in the race, religion, and ethnicity of our citizens should be a source of national strength, cultural diversity, and celebration of our Nation's pluralism. Hate crimes present a particular threat to the fabric of our free society because they use characteristics such as race, religion, and ethnicity to foster a sense of division and fear among citizens.

For persons who are members of minority groups with a history of mistreatment or persecution, these crimes understandably create anxiety, unease, and concern about the security of their place as Americans in their own land or as persons striving to become citizens. Emotional and psychological scars can result from these crimes. For Jewish people, who have suffered terribly from persecution, the desecration, vandalism, burning of synagogues and stores, defacing of cemeteries and property with Swastikas and Nazi slogans, and physical intimidation are horrible reminders of such persecution and the bigotry they still must sometimes face. For black Americans, who have endured slavery, lynchings, Jim Crow laws, and continuing discrimination, and for other racial and ethnic minorities with a history of ill treatment and discrimination by others, physican violence because of their race or ethnicity is a particularly brutal manifestation of hatred. For Catholics, who have faced religious prejudice, a cross-burning is an act meant to deny the legitimacy of their faith. All of these crimes are intended to deny persons a sense of their own worth and their place in their native or adopted land.

Such crimes must never be tolerated. The Federal Government can help by compiling reliable data on the incidence of hate crimes. Through the use of such data, law enforcement agencies can better address—and seek to prevent—these crimes in their communities. We currently have no uniform method of determining if these crimes are on the rise and where they are taking place. This bill is aimed at rectifying that information gap.

We do know that hate crimes occur across our country. Not long ago, a black teenager was killed in Howard Beach, NY, in a crime of racial hatred. In July 1987, a black woman in San Jose, CA, was terrorized by white supremacists making racial threats. These hate mongers also denied her access to a public park. During the winter of 1982-83, the White Knights of Liberty conducted nighttime cross burnings in front of interracial couples in North Carolina. In February, 1982, a member of the Social Nationalist Aryan People's Party murdered two blacks and a white person he erroneously believed to be a Jewish professor and seriously wounded a fourth person at Cleveland State University in Cleveland, OH. In 1981, members of the United Klans of America murdered a black teenager in Mobile, AL. In 1980, a former member of the American Nazi Party murdered two black men jogging with two white women in Salt Lake City, UT, in a sniper attack. This same individual was later also convicted of the 1977 bombing of a synagogue in Chattanooga, TN.

Crimes of violence and vandalism have been directed against Asian immigrants.

A Chinese-American was chased through the streets of Detroit by a white man and his stepson after a dispute at a nighclub. The two whites were upset about the impact of Japanese car imports on American jobs and beat the Chinese-American to death with a baseball bat.

Last September 17, on the Jewish Sabbath, two teenage boys desecrated a Brooklyn, NY, synagogue. Swastikas were sprayed on the walls. Six precious Torah scrolls were ripped and burned, and the synagogue itself suffered heavy damage from fire.

Last year the Yeshiva High School in Doraville, GA, was vandalized and spray-painted with anti-Semitic and racist slogans, such as "Niggers and Jews, we're coming for you."

In the mid-1980's, Hispanic residents of Cedartown, GA, were subjected to violence because of their ethnicity and resentment about the jobs they were taking in the community. The cars owned by Hispanics were rammed by Klansmen in pickup trucks. The trailers and homes of Hispanic workers were shot at in the evening hours.

According to the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith in its 1988 audit of anti-Semitic incidents, "During 1988, 823 episodes of vandalism and desecration, and 658 acts of harrassment, threat, and assault against Jewish individuals, their property and their institutions resulted in the highest number of anti-Semitic incidents reported in more than 5 years. * * * The 1988 vandalism figure represents an 18.5 percent increase over 1987. * * * This is the second straight year of substantial increase in anti-Semitic vandalism after a general 4-year downward trend."

Some hate groups, loosely connected to each other, operate in all parts of the country. Neo-Nazi "Skinheads" or "Skins" are youthful gangs which sprout neo-Nazi rhetoric and preach hatred and violence toward blacks, Hispanics, Jews, Asians, and homosexuals. These hate groups can be found all over the Nation, particularly in the Pacific Northwest, the Southwest, the Midwest, and the Southeast. Other white supremacists groups similarly operate in more than one region of the country. See Hate Groups in America, Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, 1988. The Justice Department has vigorously prosecuted these groups. The victims of racial violence in cases brought by the Department include black homeowners and college students, Asian homeowners and restaurant patrons, Jewish workers and Hispanic travelers.

Thus, hate crimes are a national concern and affect citizens who belong to a variety of groups targeted by the hatemongers.

In consideration of this problem, I believe it should be clearly understood that our democratic institutions are strong. The overwhelming majority of our citizens are intolerant of hate crimes and those who perpetrate them. Local, State, and Federal law enforcement agencies have been on the job. For example, the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith cited the Justice Department's superb job in prosecuting the hate groups in its 1987 report, "The Hate Movement Today." Most, if not all, of the incidents I have mentioned earlier resulted in the apprehension and conviction of the criminals involved. Frequently, there is a public outcry about these crimes, and local citizens have often rallied to the support of their neighbors who are the victims of these crimes.

While I do not feel we face an epidemic of these crimes, we do face too many of them. This act will provide a useful tool to law enforcement agencies to identify those areas where resources can be deployed and this problem better attacked.

I want to address two further points. Some of my colleagues may be concerned that this Act provides an imprimatur for homosexual rights legislation. It does not. As I mentioned earlier, it creates no substantive rights or cause of action, "including an action based on discrimination due to sexual orientation." Section 2(c). Violence or other illegal criminal activity specified in the act directed at a person because of sexual orientation, however, is as much a local or State criminal offense as it is when directed to a person because of race, religion, or ethnicity. Obviously, no one favors the commission of the crimes listed in the act for any reason. If violence or other hate crime activity directed toward persons because of their sexual orientation is a problem that is identifiable through this kind of data collection, law enforcement agencies can benefit from the collection of such information. The Attorney General, of course, must take care that the data collection is reliable and truly reflects criminal activity based on prejudice. In short, this data collection measure regarding the commission of crimes is no precedent for asserting protected status under our civil rights laws.

Finally, there is one omission in this act which I hope we can correct in committee or on the floor. The act does not require statistics to be kept on crimes that manifest prejudice based on membership or nonmembership in a labor organization. An amendment offered in the committee last year by Senator GRASSLEY, which I supported, failed by a 7-to-5 vote. I will support the inclusion of such language in the act in this Congress.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I am very glad to join my good friend from Illinois, Senator SIMON, in introducing this important legislation which would direct the Attorney General to collect data on the incidence of crimes that manifest prejudice based on race, religion, sexual orientation, or ethnicity. This bill is similar to legislation I introduced in the 100th Congress, S. 2000, that was incorporated into S. 702 which unanimously passed the Senate Judiciary Committee last summer. While this is a very simple bill, it represents a significant step toward addressing the serious problem of the incidence of hate crimes in the United States.

Unfortunately, Mr. President, the need for this legislation is obvious. Across the country there are reports that hate crimes motivated by prejudice are on the increase. The Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith recently reported that anti-Semitic incidents rose to a 5-year high in 1988, with harassment up 41 percent and vandalism up 19 percent from 1987. In June of 1988, the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force reported that hate crimes directed at gay and lesbian individuals increased by 42 percent from 1986 to 1987. Additionally, the Klanwatch project of the Southern Poverty Law Center notes that the seriousness of the problem is reflected in the increased number of Federal prosecutions involving hate crimes during late 1988. According to Klanwatch, the U.S. Justice Department brought cases against 16 defendants in 10 cases of racially motivated violence in the last 4 months of 1988, compared to 13 cases brought in the entire year preceding September 1988. Additionally, during 1988, Klanwatch received reports of hate crime incidents in 35 States and the District of Columbia; of the reported hate crimes, 27 percent were directed at Jews, 56 percent directed at blacks, and 17 percent directed at others.

In spite of this evidence, Mr. President, there is no national system for collecting data on the severity, pattern, and location of these hate crimes. With this information, law enforcement officials and prosecutors will be better able to utilize their resources and to target specific neighborhoods or organizations for special attention. Some States have already recognized that this data is a valuable law enforcement tool and have adopted their own system for tracking the incidence of hate crimes. But these individual efforts are not enough. Racism and bigotry are clearly national problems, and we need a national solution.

For these reasons, I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

By Mr. FORD:

S. 421. A bill to amend the Petroleum Marketing Practices Act; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

PETROLEUM MARKETING PRACTICES ACT AMENDMENTS

● Mr. FORD. Mr. President, today I am again introducing the Petroleum Marketing Practices Act amendments, making minor modifications to the act consistent with the original congressional intent. Last year, on March 16, I introduced identical legislation, and hearings were held on October 4 before the Senate Energy Subcommittee on Energy Regulation and Conservation. A similar measure, H.R. 1842, passed the House Energy and Commerce Committee on October 20.

The Petroleum Marketing Practices Act was enacted in 1978 to assure fairness and equalize the bargaining positions between franchisors and franchisees during the renewal or renegotiation of their agreements. The act attempted to promote fair competition, prevent unreasonable terminations and nonrenewals, and enhance stability in the marketing of gasoline at the retail level.

This legislation modifies the original act in three important ways to more fully realize its intended purposes. First, it requires any changes proposed at the time of renewal of a franchise agreement to be "fair and reasonable." Present law allows franchise nonrenewals based on a failure to agree to changes or additions to the underlying franchise agreement, so long as such changes or additions are made "in good faith" and not "for the purpose of preventing the renewal of the franchise relationship". This standard poses the danger of requiring overly subjective assessments of the motivation underlying changes or additions to the franchise agreement. And it is inconsistent with other areas of the act where the "reasonableness" standard is followed.

For instance, Mr. President, termination or nonrenewal of a franchise is permissible upon the occurrence of a relevant event, categories of which are delineated in the act, which makes such termination or nonrenewal "reasonable." In addition, termination or nonrenewal is allowed where the franchisee fails to comply with any provision of the franchise which is both "reasonable" and of "material significance." And the act allows nonrenewal where the franchisor determines, in good faith, that the continuation of the relationship would be uneconomical despite any "reasonable" changes or additions which might be made to the agreement. I believe the "fair and reasonable" standard will enable changes or additions to be viewed in a much more objective manner, consistent with the purposes and other provisions of the act.

Second, the legislation clarifies the definition of "franchise" to make clear that all contracts "economically necessary to the operation of the franchise" will be considered part of the franchise agreement, so that the termination of such contracts between a franchisor and franchisee which are closely related to the operation of a retail gasoline facility will also be subject to the PMPA. In this light, cancellation of contracts which would make the operation of the franchise uneconomical for the franchisee must be done in accordance with the permissible grounds under the act.

Third, Mr. President, the legislation protects franchisees from being terminated in situations where the retail gasoline facility is operated pursuant to a lease negotiated between the franchisor and the owner of the property, and the franchisor allows the lease to expire. Under this proposal, if the franchisor intends to let the lease expire and the franchisee is able to negotiate its own lease agreement with the owner of the property, then the franchisee may continue to operate.

Mr. President, I believe these changes are straightforward and necessary, and will go a long way toward assuring that the PMPA is being implemented as initially intended. I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this measure and securing its swift passage.●

By Mr. FORD:

S. 422. A bill to require the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Commerce to conduct a joint study of commodities and products that may be produced and marketed in conjunction with the production of tobacco; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

STUDY OF COMPLEMENTARY COMMODITIES AND PRODUCTS OF TOBACCO PRODUCERS

● Mr. FORD. Mr. President, today I am reintroducing legislation to require a study identifying commodities and agricultural products with production and marketing requirements complementary to those of tobacco. Given the cyclical, labor-intensive nature of tobacco production and marketing, such a study would be helpful in demonstrating to farmers the manner in which they can get the most from their resources.

Tobacco remains the mainstay of Kentucky agriculture. It is the very nature of tobacco, yielding a gross return of $3,500 per acre, that has enabled Kentucky agriculture to diversify. Kentucky ranks 12th among States in corn production, and ranks in the top 20 in the production of soybeans, hay, winter wheat, and sorghum. Its livestock operations are equally diverse, ranking 12th in the number of cattle and calves used in beef and dairy production, and 14th in hog production.

There are 99,000 farms in Kentucky, and nearly all are involved in some form of tobacco production. Despite the appearance of diversity in Kentucky agriculture, it is tobacco that makes up 20 percent of the total farm receipts and more than half of all crop receipts, all on just over 1 percent of the farmed land. The average farm in Kentucky is just about 146 acres, compared to the national average of over 460 acres. Kentucky farms are small, family operations. The average farm in Kentucky will raise a few head of cattle and some grain for feed, selling the rest. It is tobacco, however, which pays the bills, allowing a Kentucky farmer to operate on a unit one-third the size of the national average.

I am bullish on tobacco. I know of no other commodity in which a 1-percent loss of output could mean 545 lost jobs, or $19.4 million in lost income. No other crop of which I am aware is so labor and capital intensive, yet requiring such a small amount of tillable soil, which can produce such great returns to Kentucky farmers.

However, I am concerned for the crop. The overall condition of agriculture is such that extreme pressure has been placed on this commodity to shoulder the whole load of farm profitability. Debt to asset rations have risen dramatically in recent years, in large part because of falling farmland values. In Kentucky, the average value of farm land and buildings has declined more than 25 percent over the past 6 years. We are just beginning to stabilize. Individual farmers, farm communities, and our States are just beginning to rebound from declining farm profitability.

The cries for help ring out and, all too often, the reply is to diversify and reduce your debt load. However, if one farmer tries to diversify, it usually increases investment, which only compounds debt problems.

Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill for all of agriculture. A broad-based change in a single farm philosophy will not solve all our problems. What we must do is key on specialities, or niche farming, and find a whole range of alternatives to allow a farmer to choose what is right for his or her own operation. The bill I am introducing today will focus on tobacco.

Allow me to highlight some of the practices unique to the tobacco industry and how they can be helpful in promoting complementary products.

LABOR

The average farmer will spend some 35 cents per pound in outside labor costs to produce his or her tobacco. One of the objectives of this bill should be to identify complementary production practices requiring labor either right before or right after peak periods in tobacco production. Normally, a tobacco farmer must hire additional temporary labor as these peak periods arise. Ideally, complementary production practices would allow more full-time labor, improving efficiency and quality. Quality would improve with a stable labor supply so that when tobacco work was called for, the supply of labor would be there. In addition, a steady labor force would generally take more pride in its endeavors. A 5-cent-per-pound reduction in labor costs would save burley farmers over $23 million annually. Labor requirements for U.S. burley production and time of year called for are as follows:

Operation	Time of year	Labor hours per acre
Plant bed preparation	March and April	16
Field preparation	do	6
Transplanting	Late May/early June	26
Growth (sidedressing)	July	39
Harvesting	August/September	26
Transport and housing	do	39
Curing	do	3
Stripping and marketing	Late October thru January.	72
Total		227

Those of my colleagues unfamiliar with tobacco production will find it interesting to note that each acre has about 8,000 plants, each handled individually twice before transplanting and several more times each before harvest, at which time bending, straightening, and spearing the plants on 1,300 sticks is required before placing them in the barn. On average, an individual farmer will bend over 10,000 times in harvesting a single acre of tobacco. I believe my colleagues can appreciate the skill and back-breaking labor required to produce this commodity.

EQUIPMENT

Surprisingly enough, a farmer can easily have $58,000 invested in equipment required to produce just 1 acre of tobacco. Obviously, finding another use for this equipment will lower overhead costs and allow the farmer the advantage of using equipment with which he or she is already familiar. The study should examine those practices for which use of some of the more unique types of tobacco equipment is suitable. For example, the tobacco transplanter is used but a few days a year, yet costs $625. These unique machines transplant tender seedlings produced in a seedbed into the ground in a row. This machine is capable of transplanting tomato plants, tree seedlings and any other transplantable items.

A special unit for cultivating close to the tobacco plants, removing weeds, and permeating the soil is required for "sidedressing." Sidedressers are used to apply fertilizer and/or nitrogen directly onto the plant at crucial times in the growing season without the wasted expense of broadbase application. The total cost is $1,600.

BUILDINGS

At a minimum, a two-bent, four-tier barn with 14 foot eaves is required for an acre of tobacco. A barn of this type will easily cost $7,000, but is used only about 60 days a year. Specialty herbs and spices requiring a well-ventilated curing area would be ideal for the use of these structures. In addition, I have heard of studies to adapt these structures to greenhouses. I also know of many farmers who shelter livestock, cure our famous Kentucky hams or board horses in other months for additional income. The study should focus on other uses for such facilities during low demand periods.

CASH FLOW

I pointed out that seedbed preparation for tobacco begins in March. Many farmers may not market their tobacco until January or February. Thus, special emphasis should be placed in the study on identifying those crops which can provide a source of income during the year, especially at periods of peak cash requirements for tobacco such as cutting and housing time, which requires over $300 per acre. Providing an influx of cash at crucial times of the year could easily save the farmer some 2 cents per pound in interest on operating costs—or $9 million annually in the eight State burley belt.

MARKETING STRUCTURE

The marketing of burley tobacco begins in November of each year and runs through early February. Tobacco is brought to warehouse floors, where it is displayed under countless skylights. These warehouses are generally located in populous areas and have loading and unloading facilities, but are usually not used for the better part of the year. Currently, there are over 200 warehouses in 74 separate markets in an 8 burley State area, representing literally millions of square feet of display, receiving, packaging, and shipping opportunities. These markets include Louisville, Lexington, Knoxville, and Covington. I have long felt that these facilities could well be used by cooperatives, or for direct marketing outlets of farmer goods in major areas.

PROCESSING FACILITIES

Tobacco, after it has been purchased by a manufacturer or dealer, must be processed for shipping and storage prior to use. This process, commonly referred to as "redrying," is a complex operation requiring large numbers of employees, assembly line type sorting and use of high-pressure steam. Here again, I am convinced that these facilities, generally used no more than 6 months per year, are adaptable to other uses, especially given that the peak periods are during the winter months. I am aware of a farmer cooperative already using one such facility for sorting and packaging green peppers.

THE STUDY

The bill which I am introducing today calls for a joint study, to be carried out by the Department of Agriculture and Commerce, of the existing infrastructure of tobacco, from seedbed to sales counter, and to identify potential crops that are complementary to the production of tobacco, including its cultivation practices, use of equipment and know-how, as well as the marketing structure unique to tobacco. The USDA should be a part of this study because it has the necessary expertise in agricultural production.

The Commerce Department is included in this study in order to avoid one of the most serious pitfalls in American agriculture—lack of marketing expertise. I do not want Kentucky farmers, among the best producers in the world, to spend money and put forth the effort of producing a complementary crop and not find a market for that commodity.

The Commerce portion of the study would recommend how best the States, cooperative markets, and individuals can promote, sell, and distribute the identified commodities. Special emphasis should be placed on the benefits of cooperative organizations versus corporations or subchapter S corporations, especially as it relates to acquiring financing, insurance, and staff. Strong emphasis should also be placed on the hiring of recognized consultants in the field.

The Commerce Department should identify potential markets, by segmentation—income, age, buying patterns, et cetera. The method of purchase preferred by segment, such as whether or not health conscious Americans spend extra time to purchase fresher, locally grown foods at a central cooperative location, or through supermarkets, should be addressed.

Further, the Commerce Department should make recommendations on the efficient distribution of a product; the laws of interstate and intrastate transportation and any licenses required; how best to sell to regional supermarket chains; packaging required; and how best to distribute to other identified market outlets.

In essence, the study will identify the existing infrastructure of tobacco, both in marketing and production and those practices and commodities which would avail themselves of that infrastructure. Such a study should result in the determination of a capable marketing plan with specific suggestions to the State agencies, farm cooperatives, and extension services. Included in the plan should be points of reference to government and private programs available to provide both monetary and information assistance.

I would hope the study would not limit itself to just food production. We must also look upon nonfood options, looking at fiber and resource production for such uses as energy, pharmaceuticals, additives, and any other enterprises outside the realm of traditional food production. I would also hope the study would focus on those special foods finding favor in our changing diets, and on changes in livestock production practices to cater to the restaurant industry.

The purpose of this study is twofold. First and foremost, it is designed to identify sources of additional income to tobacco producing States. Second, by utilizing the existing infrastructure of tobacco, production costs in the crop should decline, thus increasing profits, while making the U.S. producer more competitive in the world marketplace.

I recognize the large scope of such a study. I am also aware of similar studies currently underway or under consideration. The intention of this bill is to provide purpose and direction, to serve as a focal point for all studies. I urge my colleagues to allow this bill to be given proper committee hearings to draw together all the leaders in their respective fields, to coordinate the activities currently underway, and to initiate further thought to achieve the results I have outlined.

In closing, let me say that the tobacco industry has been a blessing to my State of Kentucky, and will continue to be. However, strong as the crop might be, it cannot save the farmer alone during these times. By taking advantage of the existing knowledge and know-how of tobacco, I am convinced we can use tobacco to grow and profit in other areas.

I urge my colleagues and members of the tobacco community to join me in concentrating our efforts on this particular measure.●

By Mr. THURMOND:

S. 424. A bill to provide a minimum monthly annuity for the surviving spouses of certain deceased members of the uniformed services; to the Committee on Armed Services.

FORGOTTEN WIDOWS AND SURVIVORS BENEFITS IMPROVEMENTS ACT

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, today, for the seventh time, I am introducing survivor benefit plan [SBP] legislation to rectify a longstanding and most unfortunate and inequitable situation involving the aged widows of certain deceased military retirees. My proposal will cost less than half as much as most of my previous proposals.

The inequity this legislation is aimed at correcting involves the so-called forgotten widows. These are the widows of military retirees who died prior to establishment of the survivor benefit plan. Also, included in this heading is another group of widows of retired military personnel who died without having had an opportunity to convert over from the previous retired serviceman's family protection plan to the more generous survivor benefit plan.

ORIGIN OF THE INEQUITY

Mr. President, a full understanding and appreciation of how the inequity I will refer to came about requires a review of the two principal Government-sponsored benefit plans that have been available to military personnel for the protection of their families in their postretirement years.

Prior to 1972, we had the contingency option plan [COP], later renamed the retired serviceman's family protection plan [RSFPP]. While created with good intentions, there were many problems associated with this program. First of all, the plan was simply not a bargain. The premiums charged for coverage under the RSFPP were excessively high. In some instances, the premiums were 2½ to 5 times as great as those charged contemporary civilians for the protection coverage.

The high cost of participating in the RSFPP relative to the level of benefits provided, coupled with the low rates of pay received by the military at the time, resulted in a poor rate of participation among military personnel. It was mainly due to these problems, Mr. President, that we abolished the RSFPP and established instead, the current survivor benefit plan [SBP]. While the SBP is a great improvement over its predecessors, there remains today an inequity that dates back to the creation of SBP.

ESTABLISHEMENT OF SBP

Mr. President, with the enactment of Public Law 92-425, which established the SBP on September 21, 1972, both active and retired military personnel were given the opportunity to participate in the new SBP Program. The opportunity to participate in the SBP was afforded retirees whether or not they had formerly participated in the RSFPP. However, this opportunity was extended to retirees only, and was not extended to the widows of retirees who died prior to September 21, 1972. Thus the widows of retirees who had formerly participated in the RSFPP, as well as the widows of retirees who could not afford the high cost of the RSFPP and, therefore, did not participate in it, were excluded from participation in the SBP.

While it is true that there was an 18 month SBP open enrollment season in 1982-83, whereby both RSFPP and non-RSFPP, or living retirees, were given an opportunity to obtain or convert to SBP coverage, the opportunity was again limited solely to living retirees and did not include the widows of deceased retirees.

Quite frankly, Mr. President, I believe it was wrong for these widows to have been excluded from participating in the SBP in the first place, and grossly unfair for this inequity to have been allowed to continue these many years. Except for the fact that their husbands passed away prior to September 21, 1972, these widows would in all likelihood be covered by the SBP today.

REMOVE THE INEQUITY

While there is no way to make amends for the years these widows have endured being excluded from coverage of SBP, the legislation I am introducing would begin to close this unfortunate chapter in the history of our treatment of military widows. Under the provisions of my bill, the forgotten widows group would be afforded the long awaited and overdue benefit of the SBP.

The measure I am introducing would provide an SBP annuity at the minimum level of only $165 per month. In addition, the bill would limit offsets in these minimum payments and would provide for these benefits to be increased in the future through cost-of-living adjustments. Still this annuity would be well below the poverty level.

OVERCOME PREVIOUS OBJECTIONS

Mr. President, in the past, objections have been raised regarding the cost of my proposals. The cost of this new approach is much less than my previous proposals. However, these previous objections were not based on accurate information as to the number of forgotten widows.

For example, Department of Defense [DOD] estimates of several years ago put the number of forgotten widows at close to 39,000. Other estimates in recent years range from 3,845 to 24,288, not including RSFPP annuitants. If there are only about 4,000 of these widows, my measure would cost about $8 million annually. In addition, the total number has been reduced because some of the widows are now covered if their retired husbands died before November 1953.

The Department of Defense cannot provide a reliable estimate. This is because the only source of calculation is widows who have defense ID cards, and many do not use, or renew their ID cards, especially those living great distances from military hospitals.

Fortunately, with implementation of the Defense Enrollment Eligibility Report System [DEERS], which is now the data base of military health care, a more accurate assessment of the number of forgotten widows is available. One recent estimate by DEERS projected the number of forgotten widows to be only 3,845. This significantly lowers the estimate of the projected cost of providing an SBP annuity to these widows.

By including the relatively few RSFPP widows who currently receive small annuities, this proposal would avoid creating an annuity gap between RSFPP widows and the forgotten widows which this legislation is designed to help. In so doing, a major objection of my previous forgotten widows would be nominal, since this legislation would only allow a nominal increase in these widows' current annuity and there are a small number of them. Also, the election is optional.

The main reason cost has been significantly reduced is because the level of benefits offered in the bill are dramatically reduced compared to previous proposals. Some say the benefit level is now much too low. However, as a matter of equity, it would provide the minimum optional benefit currently paid to beneficiaries of an SBP annuity. The annuity is only $1,980 per year, but the proposal contains provisions to preclude offsets and provides for cost-of-living adjustments.

Mr. President, I am mindful of the fact that the cost of any new program is a grave concern for all Senators. This is particularly true in a time when we are faced with massive budget deficits and an even larger outstanding national debt. However, the national debt is not the only debt this Nation owes. We owe a debt to these forgotten widows, and the similarly situated RSFPP annuitants. It is a debt that has gone unpaid for over a decade.

RAPID DECLINING COSTS

In addition, what I am proposing is not a permanent expansion of the SBP. The widows I have been talking about are not young, and they are not getting any younger. Their number grows smaller with each passing year. In fact, if we continue to let this problem go unaddressed 15 more years, it may well be too late. By the year 2000, it is possible that many of these widows will no longer be alive. It will be too late for the Congress to correct a gross inequity. Failure to act would be an unconscionable mark on the Congress well into the next century.

CIVIL SERVICE PRECEDENT

Mr. President, I think there are two things that one should keep in mind during consideration of this legislation. First, my proposal is not without precedent. In 1948, when the Civil Service survivor benefit plan was established, it, too, created an inequity very similar to the one I have been talking about today. However, in 1958, 10 years later, the act establishing the plan was amended and made retroactive to include all pre-1948 widows. It has now been over 16 years since establishment of the SBP to replace the RSFPP Program, and the inequity created then remains with us today.

WIDOWS' SACRIFICES

The second factor for my colleagues to bear in mind in their consideration of this measure is the sacrifices and hardships these widows have endured.

Most of these women functioned in traditional family roles as wife, homemaker, and mother in the context of military service. During long periods, they supported the military work of their husbands, while also contributing to the economic and emotional well-being of the family unit.

In most cases, of course, the servicemen's inadequate pay and transitory lifestyle made a normal home and savings program impossible.

WIDOWS' TRUST IN GOVERNMENT MISPLACED

Additionally, few military widows were aware of the ramifications of their husbands' deaths. Survivor benefits were assumed by these women who trusted that the military would not simply lose the file and forget them after the deaths of their husbands. Their blind trust was misplaced. In many cases, upon the death of the serviceman, all monetary benefits ceased.

It was not until the passage of the SBP Program that it became mandatory under law that the spouse be notified in writing if the serviceman chose not to participate in the SBP Program.

Mr. President, most of these forgotten widows are very elderly women of diminishing means. Some of them, whose husbands were covered by Social Security after 1957, rely solely on that source of income for their subsistence. Those whose husbands retired prior to 1956 are not covered by Social Security as a result of their husband's military earnings.

VICTIMS OF MILITARY SERVICE

Mr. President, these military widows are victims of long periods with low pay, and many find themselves today existing in poverty. As economic captives, their current problems include dependence on welfare, evictions from apartments as buildings are converted to condominiums, skyrocketing health care costs, and unaffordable nursing home charges.

These women are generally the widows of men who fought in World War II and were recalled for the Korean war. In some cases, their husbands served in Vietnam as well. They served during a time when military compensation was extraordinarily low. Due to frequent moves or remote duty stations, their wives could seldom find work and when they did, it was at low paying, entry level wages.

While their husbands were overseas, these women held the families together. If on accompanied tours, they established and maintained homes, often under primitive, difficult conditions.

These military families served selflessly and willingly as a team without regard for their future. Now, in their declining years, the Nation must not desert these widows. They are proud, self-reliant women, many of whom have worked into their seventies and eighties at the minimum wage to survive.

Although this bill will not begin to provide a level of compensation equal to their contribution to our Nation, it will help. One hundred sixty-five dollars per month will not bring a widow living alone up to the poverty level. As one widow, 84 years of age put it, "I am living on less than $300 per month. I can no longer work. An additional $165 would be a Godsend. It will help me live my remaining years with some degree of independence and dignity."

Last year we provided an increased annuity for a limited number of military widows who were eligible for the Department of Defense minimum income widow payment and whose husbands died prior to November 1, 1953. This legislation today will provide a benefit for the remaining widows whose husbands never had the opportunity to enroll in the current survivor benefit plan.

Mr. President, the commonly stated objection to including pre-March 31, 1974, widows because servicemembers could have enrolled in earlier plans suggests that the older plans provided an adequate survivor program. This is not supported by the facts. The participation rate in the earliest plan, the contingency option plan [COP] enacted in 1953, was about 11 percent of those eligible. When compared with over 90 percent participation rate in the civil service survivor plan, it is clear that the program was a failure. There are several reasons why this plan was not successful.

GROSS INEQUITY IN PREVIOUS SBP'S

Service members had to elect to participate prior to the 18th year of service, 2 to 12 years before retirement. The election was irrevocable and even if the spouse predeceased the service member, the pay reduction continued. Can you imagine any company selling an insurance policy which required a lifetime payment of premiums even though no death benefit would ever be paid? Yet that is the case with the earlier survivor benefit programs.

The plans offered no inflation protection, therefore, their future worth could not be determined.

Member participation cost, unlike the Civil Service plan, was subject to taxation requiring the payment of taxes on money not received.

Again, unlike the Civil Service plan, there was no employer contribution. As a result, individual participation costs were more than 22 cents per dollar of monthly coverage. The retired serviceman's family protection plan [RSFPP] passed in 1961, along with subsequent changes, resulted in some improvements but raised the participation cost to 42.9 cents per dollar of coverage. Both COP and RSFPP were poorly conceived that no more than 15 percent of those eligible ever elected to participate. If offered by a private insurer today, the plans would probably be against the law in some States.

To suggest that either of these plans offered service members viable spouse protection is clearly not supported by the facts. To use this as a basis for excluding military widows from the SBP Program simply continues a longstanding injustice.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this badly needed legislation, so that the Nation may satisfy this long neglected indebtedness to these courageous, dedicated women. Equity demands that we help the forgotten military widows.

Over the past 15 years, I have received many hundreds of pleading letters from these elderly widows from all across our country. Many of them are barely surviving. Nevertheless, most, I am proud to say, have managed to keep their pride and dignity, even in poverty.

Mr. President, it is time to give the forgotten widows equitable consideration. No only have we ignored their plight for these many years, but we have failed to acknowledge their cause. Understandably, they feel rejected, and some feel bitter. It is as if our Nation has turned its back on their courageous husbands who gave 20, 30, and in some cases 40 years of the most productive years of their lives for our country. We must now give these forgotten widows the recognition and compensation they deserve.

RESTORE FAITH

Mr. President, the passage of my bill would be a milestone for these elderly widows who, in support of their husbands, gave the best years of their lives for our country.

It is inconceivable that we have deserted them for so long, and it is high time we face up to the responsibilities we owe these widows and restore the faith which has not been maintained for our military community.

I urge my distinguished colleagues to act favorably and with compassion on this vital legislation, and to join me in working for its early enactment.

By Mr. DOMENICI:

S. 425. A bill to restore the tight sands tax credit by amending the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to clarify the rules concerning the nonconventional fuels credit with respect to gas produced from a tight formation, and to restore the application of such credit to the alternative minimum tax; to the Committee on Finance.

TIGHT FORMATIONS TAX CREDIT RESTORATION ACT

● Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I rise today to reintroduce a bill I introduced in the last session of Congress. It is similar to S. 383, which I introduced earlier this month with some technical changes.

This legislation would reinstate the tight-formations tax credit for income tax and the alternative minimum tax. This credit is technically referred to in the Tax Code as the nonconventional fuels credit. This is a credit that encourages natural gas producers to drill for hard-to-get natural gas found in geological formation that are known as "tight formations." Some of these are tight sands, others are carbonate formations.

We need to reinstate the credit because, very simply, what the bold print giveth, the fine print taketh away.

Every member of this body knows that the Tax Code is a very complex law. While one code provision may establish a tax incentive, another code provision may inadvertently take that incentive away.

In the area of natural gas, it becomes more complicated because qualifying for the tight-formations credit requires a taxpayer not only to meet provisions of the Tax Code, but also to comply with certain Natural Gas Policy Act requirements as well as to comply with FERC orders and court interpretations on those orders.

Until recently, qualifying for the tight-formations credit was, if you will pardon me, a tight-rope act. But it worked. It was a sound incentive.

For the tight-formation credit to be available, the Tax Code and the Natural Gas Policy Act had to be consistently interpreted. Unfortunately, recent events have effectively eliminated the credit. Congress didn't change the law. Rather, an order by FERC and subsequent Supreme Court decision produced a conflict.

The bill I am introducing today would straighten out the unintended consequences.

Section 29 of the Internal Revenue Code allows a tax credit for nonconventional fuels, such as tight-formations, coal seam gas, devonian shale, provided the price of crude oil drops below a certain level and provided the gas price was "regulated." That price level was reached in 1984, and a tax credit of 52 cents per million cubic feet of gas was provided.

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, in its dual-category regulation rule, provided that tight-sands, or section 107, gas is automatically deregulated when it has dual classification with another NGPA classification. Prior to this ruling the producers were entitled to choose the category they wished to qualify a particular gas.

If a producer chose a "regulated" category, it was entitled to the tight-formation credit. If it chose deregulated," the Tax Code did not provide a credit.

In the case Martin Exploration Management Co. against FERC, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 10th Circuit decided that FERC had misinterpreted the statute, that producers were clearly presented with this choice of categories, and FERC could not deny this choice. At this point in the proceedings the tight-formations credit was still in tact.

However, the Supreme Court disagreed and reversed this order last May on a basis other than the tight-formations credit. The opinion dealt with the appropriate interpretation of the Natural Gas Policy Act.

The Court in essence said: "If the gas could be regulated or deregulated, treat it as deregulated." The opinion's policy was that we should maximize deregulation. The Court did not deal with the Tax Code. The credit wasn't an issue before the Supreme Court. It wasn't even a factor. But, as a result of this ruling, the credit has been unavailable since January 1, 1985.

Mr. President, the FERC's purported deregulation has been particularly harmful to the gas producers in New Mexico, and to those in other gas producing States that depend upon this credit.

As you will recall, the original purpose of the Nonconventional Fuels Credit was to serve as an incentive to drill and as a partial compensation to producers that drilled expensive tight-formation wells, in the event of a price drop. The worst case scenario has happened: The price drop has occurred and the tax credit was abolished by the FERC order.

Mr. President, I played an active role in passing the Natural Gas Policy Act, and I am very familiar with the legislative history of section 107.

The intent of Congress in this case was clear. The Unconventional Fuels Credit provides that any wells drilled up to January 1, 1990, would be eligible for the credit during low crude oil price periods and that it would be allowed until January 1, 2001, or until the prices rose to the former levels.

The oil and gas industry have been facing tremendous difficulties for the past 4 years.

We thought the oil industry had hit bottom in 1986, but it continued to decline in 1987. The number of wells drilled in the State of New Mexico dropped 24 percent from 1986 to 1987. During that same time, oil production declined 4.5 percent and natural gas prices fell 12 percent.

I have heard from many producers in my State who have explained to me the difficulties they are facing as a result of the low natural gas prices. The reinstatement of the tight-formations credit would help avoid premature abandonment of many New Mexico natural gas wells.

There are 4,850 wells throughout New Mexico that produce 200 million mcf per month. These operators have had tremendous difficulty because of a commitment made in the legislation for special pricing on 107 gas, and they have had to adjust to the substantially lower prices they have been realizing in recent years. I am told the most influential factors in deciding to continue production at that field has been the tight-formations credit.

Several producers in my State say they will be unable to produce without this incentive, one they had relied upon. Certainly, they will not be able to drill the remaining wells.

This is not just a problem in New Mexico. This affects tight-formations producers in Texas, West Virginia, Oklahoma, and Kansas, as well. I urge my colleagues to act quickly to correct this grave error.

The bill I am introducing is very simple, it merely reinstates the tight-formations credit for income tax and the alternative minimum tax, notwithstanding the FERC order and the Supreme Court case.

I have said on many occasions on the Senate floor that the United States needs to reevaluate its energy policy to take into account low price scenarios that can be expected for the next 5 to 10 years. Congress needs to enact additional incentives for exploration and development. Congress needs to intervene when the Supreme Court inadvertently abolishes an incentive.

Canada has already put into place a package of tax incentives to combat low price scenarios. Reinstating the tight-formations credit doesn't go far enough. It doesn't look to the future, but it does set the present record straight.

The industry desperately needs the credit. Well completions went from 1,243 in 1986 to 938 in 1987, the lowest number in 16 years. Oil production fell from 75.7 million to 72.3 million barrels per year, and the average field price of natural gas dropped from $1.92 to $1.69 per thousand cubic feet.

Depressed oil prices are harming much of the Southwest. New Mexico ranks fourth among the States in natural gas production and seventh in crude oil.

Mr. President, about 1 out of every 3 dollars going into New Mexico's General Fund comes from oil and gas related taxes, royalties, and permanent fund earnings. It is fair to say the petroleum industry is the State's No. 1 taxpayer.

Every county in my State benefits from assessments on the oil and gas industry. Four of the 33 counties in New Mexico account for 95 percent of all oil and gas produced in the State.

The State revenues derived directly or indirectly from oil and gas sources totaled $750.7 million in 1987. That was only a 1 percent improvement over the 1986 figure of $743.5 million, but provided an extra $7.2 million for the general fund. These revenues include production taxes, State and Federal royalties, lease sales, rentals, and earnings from two State permanent funds financed primarily by assessments on oil and gas production.

In the 1986-87 school year, education's share of the oil and gas revenues in New Mexico amounted to about $404 million. These revenues are crucial to the public schools, colleges, and other educational institutions and agencies.

I have included these statistics to highlight the important contribution the oil and gas industry makes. In reinstating the tight-sands credit, we are acting in the national interest because it would contribute to America's energy independence. We are also acting in the various States' interest, because the oil and gas industry supports many vital State programs.

I hope my colleagues will support reinstating the tight-formations credit.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill, a short summary of the bill, and a list of designated tight formations be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

Thank you, Mr. President.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 425

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be referred to as the "Tight Formations Tax Credit Restoration Act of 1989".

SECTION 1. RESTORE NONCONVENTIONAL FUELS CREDIT TO GAS PRODUCED FROM TIGHT FORMATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (2) of section 29(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (defining qualified fuels) is amended to read as follows:

(2) GAS FROM GEOPRESSURED BRINE, ETC.—The determination of whether any gas is produced from geopressured brine, Devonian shale, coal seams, or a tight formation shall be made in accordance with section 503 of the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE; SPECIAL RULE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1984.

(2) WAIVER OF STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.—If on the date of the enactment of this Act (or at any time within 1 year after such date of enactment) refund or credit of any overpayment of tax resulting from the application of the amendment made by subsection (a) is barred by any law or rule of law, refund or credit of such overpayment shall, nevertheless, be made or allowed if claim therefore is filed before the date 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 2. RESTORE APPLICATION OF NONCONVENTIONAL FUELS CREDIT TO ALTERNATIVE MINIMUM TAX.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (5) of section 29(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to limitations and adjustments) is amended to read as follows:

"(5) LIMITATION BASED ON AMOUNT OF TAX.—

"(A) LIABILITY FOR TAX.—The credit allowable under subsection (a) for any taxable year shall not exceed the excess (if any) of—

"(i) the sum of—

"(I) the taxpayer's tentative minimum tax liability under section 55(b) for such taxable year determined without regard to this section, plus

"(II) the taxpayer's regular tax liability for such taxable year (as defined in section 26(b)), over

"(ii) the sum of the credits allowable against the taxpayer's regular tax liability under subpart A and sections 27 and 28.

"(B) APPLICATION OF THE CREDIT.—Each of the following amounts shall be reduced by the full amount of the credit determined under subparagraph (A):

"(i) the taxpayer's tentative minimum tax under section 55(b) for the taxable year, and

"(ii) the taxpayer's regular tax liability (as defined in section 26(b)) reduced by the sum of the credits allowable under subpart A and sections 27 and 28.

If the amount of credit determined under subparagraph (A) exceeds the amount described in clause (ii) of subparagraph (B), then the excess shall be deemed to be the adjusted net minimum tax for such taxable year for purposes of section 53.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1986.

TIGHT SANDS TAX CREDIT

PURPOSE

Restore NCF credit for gas produced from a tight formation by clarifying that the treatment of such gas as deregulated gas does not disqualify it for the credit.

CURRENT LAW

Tight formation gas qualifies for the NCF credit only where its price is regulated and where its maximum lawful price under the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978 is at least 150 percent of the applicable price under section 103 of such act. When certain new gas under such section 103 was deregulated effective January 1, 1985, tight formation gas in that category thus fell into both a regulated and deregulated category. The IRS ruled based in part on FERC rulings that such dual category tight gas was to be treated as deregulated gas thus disqualifying it for the NCF credit. Subsequent court decisions ultimately upheld these IRS and FERC rulings.

OPERATION

Deletes the regulated price requirement of current law to quality tight formation gas for the NCF credit.

Applies retroactively to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1984 and extends the statute of limitations on statute barred refunds to one year after date of enactment.

RATIONALE

Encourages higher cost tight gas production in order to give effect to the incentive enacted in 1980 for this alternative source of gas production. Retroactivity is appropriate due to the regulatory confusion and conflicting court cases that ensued after the deregulation of certain new gas, which includes tight gas, under the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978 and FERC rules thereunder.

By Mr. BENTSEN:

S. 426. A bill to direct the Secretary of State to construct, operate, and maintain an extension of the American Canal at El Paso, TX; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

RIO GRANDE AMERICAN CANAL EXTENSION ACT

● Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I introduce today the Rio Grande American Canal Extension Act of 1989. It is a bill I introduced last year. This bill would allow the International Boundary and Water Commission to construct an extension of the Rio Grande American Canal. The extension would lie wholly within the United States, and it would enable the canal to continue to provide meaningful assistance to farmers and to water experts in the border region. Extending the canal would result in the following benefits to the United States:

Recapture of 12,000 to 22,000 acre feet of water that is lost to seepage and piracy every year;

Create badly needed jobs in the area;

Increase environmental and health benefits through proper use and regulation of water;

Serve as a conveyance channel for water to the city of El Paso; and Provide optimal control over water belonging to the United States under a 1906 treaty with Mexico.

In sum, Mr. President, this bill is helpful in many important respects. One of its chief purposes is to avoid potentially disruptive international issues that might arise from the commingling of United States and Mexico waters in this reach of the Rio Grande. That issue has been perennial down in the border area, and it is time for us to solve the problem once and for all.

I urge my colleagues to support this needed legislation.●

S. 427. A bill to designate the Federal building located at 1801 Gulf Breeze Parkway, Gulf Breeze, FL, as the "Bob Sikes Visitor Center"; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

BOB SIKES VISITOR CENTER

● Mr. MACK. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation which will designate the new headquarters for the Gulf Islands National Seashore located in Gulf Breeze, FL, as the "Bob Sikes Visitor Center" in honor of the former Florida Congressman Robert L.F. Sikes.

During my service in the House of Representatives I had the privilege of getting to know Congressman Sikes. In my recent travels in the panhandle of Florida I have found Bob's name to be legendary. He is truly one of the most highly regarded leaders in the State of Florida.

Congressman Sikes was known for his ability to balance the economic growth and development in the Pensacola region with the protection of the area's sensitive natural resources and historic landmarks. His efforts to establish a national seashore along the northwest Florida and Mississippi gulf coast yielded one of only two specially designated seashores along the Gulf of Mexico. The mainland area of the park features spectacular bayous, beaches and historic military forts and the Gulf Islands National Seashore now attracts over 5 million visitors a year.

The new facility will serve as the administrative headquarters for the entire park and will have a visitor information center and a theater. Congressman Sikes' contributions in bringing national attention to Gulf Islands National Seashore makes it most appropriate that the headquarters be named after him.●

S. 428. A bill to modernize U.S. circulating coin designs, of which one reverse will have a theme of the Bicentennial of the Constitution; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

COIN REDESIGN ACT

● Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, today, I am pleased to join with my colleague from California, Mr. CRANSTON, and 54 other Senators in reintroducing legislation to modernize the design of U.S. coins. In the last Congress, we were very successful in moving this legislation through the Senate; 67 Senators joined in sponsoring the bill. This legislation passed as a freestanding bill once, and as an amendment to other legislation twice. It stalled in the House of Representatives, but we are confident that it will succeed in the 101st Congress.

There were 200 cosponsors of the bill in the House last year; 100 House Members have already cosponsored the House bill this year. In addition, hearings were held by the House Banking Committee last September on the coin redesign bill. So, there is a great deal of support in the House as well.

This is a very simple bill. It requires new designs on the reverse sides of our five circulating coins, the cent through the half dollar. The new designs are to be phased in over 6 years. The first design will mark the 200th anniversary of the Constitution. The other designs on the reverse sides will be emblematic of themes from the Bill of Rights. After 2 years, the first reverse changed will also contain a theme from the Bill of Rights. The Presidents will be retained on the obverse sides. All inscriptions, "E Pluribus Unum," the "United States of America," "Liberty", and "In God We Trust," will be retained on the coins. The size, shape, weight, color, and metallic content of the coins will remain the same.

The concept of changing coin designs is not new. Coin designs have been changed 33 times in the history of our country. The design change we advocate is most appropriate at this time as we celebrate the bicentennial of the ratification of our Constitution. It also recognizes the role of our Bill of Rights in preserving freedom. The coin redesign is a simple reminder of our precious liberties.

There is also a useful monetary benefit from the coin redesign. It will provide a profit to the Government. In both House and Senate hearings last year, the Congressional Budget Office, the Office of Management and Budget, and the Treasury testified that this bill will provide a profit to the Government. It is quite remarkable when all three agencies agree on a fiscal matter, and even more noticeable when they predict some action will actually make money.

According to the Treasury estimate, the extra demand for these new coins from collectors and souvenir hunters will yield an additional $256 million in seigniorage during the initial 6-year phase in period. Seigniorage is the profit left over after the Government subtracts its manufacturing costs from the value of the coins produced. In addition, the Treasury estimates an extra $18 million in profit on special sets sold to coin collectors. Because of this extra revenue, the Government will pay approximately $100 million less in interest during those 6 years because the extra revenue means less borrowing. The Treasury will not have to sell as many bills, bonds, and notes to the public to finance Government debts. The sum total of these figures is $374 million. Subtract from this sum the $8.15 million in Treasury-estimated extra minting charges. The net figure is $366 million net profit to the Government without increased taxation.

This bill makes money while making money.

The legislation is very popular among the 10 million coin collectors in the United States who are most likely to notice the change. Two recent polls by the two leading weekly hobby newspapers, Coin World and Numismatic News show overwhelming support.

It is a good bill, it serves a useful purpose, it makes money for the U.S. Treasury. I hope we can enact this legislation in the near future.●

By Mr. BOREN:

S. 429. A bill to establish a National Foundation for Excellence for outstanding students who are committed to careers in teaching in public education, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

NATIONAL FOUNDATION FOR EXCELLENCE ACT

● Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, as we begin a new Congress and a new administration, one committed to building a reputation in the area of education for this Nation, I am pleased to rise to introduce a bill to give a renewed support to the field of teaching.

I truly believe that the bill which I am introducing today deals with the single most important challenge facing this generation of Americans: the critical need to restore excellence to our system of public education.

If we deal successfully with every other major policy area facing us and fail to rebuild our educational system, we will eventually undermine our progress in all other areas. The plain truth is that a nation with a second or third rate educational system will ultimately be in the second or third rank of nations.

Our public education system is the cornerstone of a strong and vital democratic system. The people cannot fully participate in a society if they are not sufficiently educated about themselves, their own past, and the nature of the problems which they confront.

Excellence in public education is fundamental to our commitment to equality of opportunity without regard to race, creed, or economic status. If we allow two standards of educational opportunity to develop, excellence in private schools for the affluent and mediocrity in public schools for the masses, we will soon find that we live in a country in which true equality of opportunity has ceased to exist.

We will also find that our economic strength and our ability to compete in the world marketplace will continue to erode and a nation that loses its economic strength will soon lose its political, diplomatic, and military strength as well.

No longer can we pay Americans $10 or $20 an hour to perform tasks requiring no advanced training when people in other parts of the world are willing to do the same task using the same machinery or the same assembly lines for far less. The only way for the United States to retain the highest standard of living in the world in a century in which human resource development has become the key element is to have the best educated work force in the world.

We are learning that the failure of our educational system to adequately prepare workers can greatly increase the cost of production in the private sector and make American companies less competitive. Private companies are now close to spending roughly as much retraining and providing remedial education for their workers as we as taxpayers spend educating all of the children in the Nation in elementary and secondary schools.

The key to rebuilding our educational system is the attraction of qualified young people into the teaching profession and retention of the best teachers already in the classroom. Fine physical facilities will only produce mediocre educational experiences if they are staffed with mediocre teachers.

As more and more career options have opened to young people and especially to young women who might have considered teaching as a career in the last generation, and as the salary gap between outstanding members of other professions and our very best teachers has widened even further, we have begun to see an alarming loss of our best and brightest men and women from the classroom.

Recent studies have shown that of those in college who plan to enter the teaching profession, very few, only 2 percent, rank in the top quarter of their class academically while over 50 percent come from the bottom quarter of their classes. If we populate our classrooms with teachers for the next generation who do not even measure up to the average level of academic performance, the result will be disastrous.

There is no single solution to the problem and no simple way to attract a fair portion of the best and brightest in our society to the teaching profession and keep them in it. Compensation is a major part of the problem, and the failure to recognize the importance of teaching and grant it the community status which it deserves is another.

In my home State, through the Oklahoma Foundation for Excellence which I chair, we have started an annual ceremony carried on statewide television in which the business and political leaders of the State honor four outstanding public school and college educators each year with a medal of excellence and a $5,000 prize. Likewise, 100 high school seniors are selected as academic all-staters and receive $1,000 prizes.

Symbols are important. Through them we indicate to the next generation what it really means to be successful. For far too long our actions, as opposed to our words, have failed to convey upon teaching the status which it deserves.

How do we break the cycle of taxpayers who are unwilling to raise teachers' salaries as long as they feel that we are bringing too many mediocre people into the profession? A part of the answer is to ask taxpayers to invest in what they know is an excellent product. That is what this bill seeks to do. It is not a total solution to the problem. It does not deal with the need to retain good teachers already in the profession, but it does take a step in the right direction of bringing more of our most talented people into teaching.

When I was Governor, we had a shortage of doctors in rural areas and small towns. We developed a Rural Medical Scholarship Program under which we paid the full educational cost of medical students who promised to practice in these underserved areas for a least 5 years after graduation or be forced to pay back all of the educational costs plus a large penalty payment. The program made a major reduction in the shortage of rural medical manpower.

It is time to act on a major scale to do the same thing for the teaching profession—on a national scale. This bill seeks to do exactly that. It bears the title, "The National Foundation for Excellence Act." It establishes a national foundation ultimately funded by a public and private partnership to fund the full educational costs for our very best students who desire to enter the teaching profession in public schools for up to 6 years. It provides for governance by a board of distinguished citizens and is patterned somewhat after the Harry S Truman Scholarship Foundation which awards scholarships to students interested in careers in public service.

A student, to apply for the educational package, would have to have tested in the top 10 percent of the Scholastic Aptitude Test or the American College Test; must have graduated in the top 10 percent from high school; must maintain a 3.2-grade point average in college; and, must commit to teaching in public schools after graduation.

The amount of available financial aid would depend on the student's commitment to teaching postgraduation. A ceiling of $20,000 would be available for individuals who will teach for a minimum of 2 years: $28,000 for 3 years, $36,000 for 4 years, $50,000 for 5 years, and $70,000 for 6 years.

A penalty for failing to teach in public schools after graduation would be the principal amount of the scholarship plus interest equal to the T-bill rate plus 20 percent.

The Foundation would be funded by a permanent endowment. The funding would come from a one-time $200 million appropriation and an additional $200 million available for matching to private gifts, for a period of 5 years. Further, $5 million would be appropriated for each of the first 5 years for administrative and operating costs of the Board.

I would envision that this Foundation have a highly visible and energetic board chairman and membership, whose job would be to actively solicit private and corporate contributions to utilize the matching funds provisions of the legislation. This is an important element not only for the practical need of private funds, but for the public relations value in having such an effort lead on a Federal level with support of the White House and Congress. Incidentally, such a Foundation could serve as a host committee for an annual meeting to recognize outstanding teachers nationally. This was a campaign proposal of our new President and an idea of great merit recently discussed in other forums.

The goal is to have at least 100 students per State participating in the program and States could enter into agreements with the Foundation to help pay part of the scholarship in return for the student's agreement to teach in that State.

The Board would consist of 15 members including an executive director as an ex officio, nonvoting member.

Eleven members would be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the President—six of whom must have 10 years experience in education. Two of those six must have been classroom teachers.

Further, two would be appointed by the House—one each by the Speaker and the minority leader—and two appointed by the Senate. One each by the majority leader and minority leader. One of the eleven would be designated by the President as the chairman of the board.

If we fail to rebuild our system of public education by attracting well qualified people into the profession, our generation will justly be held accountable for placing the future of our Nation in peril. This bill is not offered as a complete answer to the problem. It is, I believe, a source of an important constructive step that should be taken as soon as possible. I hope for the active support of my colleagues in the Senate as well as our President.

I ask unanimous consent that a summary of the bill and the text of the bill appear in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUMMARY OF SENATOR BOREN'S NATIONAL FOUNDATION FOR EXCELLENCE ACT

The bill establishes a nationally prestigious board whose goal is to administer a scholarship program to attract & retain academically gifted students into the teaching profession and enhance the image of teaching.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

15 Members plus an Executive Director as ex-officio, non-voting member.

11 Members Presidentially appointed with advice & consent of the Senate, 6 must have 10 years experience in education, not more than 3 of whom shall be of the same political party. At least 2 of the 6 must have had education experience as classroom teachers.

2 Members of the Senate & 2 Members of the House—1 each appointed by the respective Majority Leader and Minority Leadership of each House.

SCHOLARSHIPS

Eligibility: College individual who has graduated from secondary school in the top 10%; who has scored in the top 10% of the American College Test (ACT) or Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT); maintains a 3.2 grade point average in college; AND who certifies he/she will enter a teaching career after graduation.

Award: Students would receive up to a full annual scholarship grant to be used for tuition, fees, and housing in college, so long as they maintain the requirements of eligibility. They would be able to receive the grant for a maximum of 4 undergraduate years and/or 2 years of graduate study with a total cap of $70,000.

Teaching Commitment: Individual must agree to teach in a public elementary or secondary school for a minimum of 2 years and maximum requirement of 6 years. The total amount of grants would determine the teaching commitment. {e.g. 2 years / $20,000 or less; 3 years / $20,000 to $28,000; 4 years / $28,000 to $36,000; 5 years / $36,000 to $50,000; 6 years / $50,000 to $70,000.

Penalty Payback: Those not completing the program would pay back the amount of the grants plus interest equal to T-bill rate plus 20 percent to accrue when found in noncompliance.

Exceptions to Payback: Individuals will not be found to be in violation in case of required military service; disability sworn by a physician and other unusual circumstances.

STATE PARTICIPATION

States are encouraged to help fund part of the costs of the program through a partnership with the Foundation. The Board of Directors would have the discretion to make state/foundation agreements whereby a state, with either public funds or private donations could share ¼ or more of the cost, in return, requiring participating students to commit to teaching in that state.

The Board would be directed that as funds are available, it is the intent of Congress that both aggregate financial disbursement and number of scholarships, should be distributed to students in the fifty states proportionally.

FUNDS

$200 million would be authorized for deposit in the "National Foundation for Excellence Fund" to be invested by the Secretary of the Treasury.

It doesn't have to be "matched" but would be authorized to receive private donations and the government would match private donations dollar for dollar up to an additional $200 million above to the $200 million with funds contributed, credited to the home state matching fund of the donor if the donor desires.

$5 million would be authorized to be appropriated for operating and administrative expenses with any excess to remain in the fund for endowment for 5 fiscal years after which time the Foundation would be fully self-supporting.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "National Foundation for Excellence Act".

PURPOSE

SEC. 2. The purpose of this Act is to establish a National Foundation for Excellence to carry out a scholarship program for outstanding students who are committed to careers in teaching in public education.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. As used in this Act, the term—

(1) "Board" means the Board of Directors of the National Foundation for Excellence;

(2) "Foundation" means the National Foundation for Excellence established pursuant to section 4(a);

(3) "fund" means the National Foundation for Excellence Fund established pursuant to section 4(b);

(4) "institution of higher education" means any such institution as defined by section 1201(a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965;

(5) "State" means each of the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and considered as a single entity, Guam, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands; and

(6) "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Treasury.

ESTABLISHMENT OF THE NATIONAL FOUNDATION FOR EXCELLENCE

SEC. 4. (a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established, as an independent establishment of the executive branch of the United States Government, the National Foundation for Excellence.

(b) BOARD OF DIRECTORS.—(1) The Foundation shall be subject to the supervision and direction of a Board of Directors. The Board shall be composed of—

(A) 11 members to be appointed by the President, one of whom shall serve as Chairman, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate;

(B) 2 members of the Senate;

(C) 2 members of the House of Representatives; and

(D) the Executive Director of the Foundation, who shall serve ex officio as a member of the Board, but shall not be eligible to vote.

(2)(A) In carrying out the provisions of paragraph (1)(A), the President shall appoint at least 6 individuals with 10 years experience as educators, not more than 3 of whom shall be of the same political party. Two of the six individuals must have been classroom teachers.

(B) In carrying out the provisions of paragraph (1)(B), the Majority Leader of the Senate shall appoint 1 member of the Board and the Minority Leader shall appoint 1 member of the Board.

(C) In carrying out the provisions of paragraph (1)(C), the Speaker of the House shall appoint 1 member of the Board and the Minority Leader shall appoint 1 member of the Board.

(c) COMPENSATION OF THE BOARD.—Members of the Board shall serve without pay, but shall be entitled to reimbursement for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred in the performance of their duties.

SCHOLARSHIPS

SEC. 5. (a) IN GENERAL.—The Foundation is authorized, in accordance with the provisions of this Act, to award scholarships to outstanding students who are committed to careers in teaching in public education.

(b) COURSE OF STUDY RULE.—A student awarded a scholarship under this Act may attend any institution of higher education offering courses of study, training, or other educational activities designed to prepare a recipient for a career in teaching in public education determined pursuant to criteria established by the Foundation in consultation with the Secretary.

(c) DURATION OF SCHOLARSHIP ASSISTANCE.—Scholarship assistance under this Act shall be awarded for such periods as the Foundation may prescribe but not to exceed 4 academic years. In the case of graduate study, scholarship assistance may be awarded for a period of study not to exceed 2 academic years.

ELIGIBILITY AND SELECTION OF FOUNDATION SCHOLARS

SEC. 6. (a) ELIGIBILITY.—An individual is eligible to receive Foundation scholarships if the individual—

(1) ranks in the top 10 percent of the graduating class of the secondary school of the individual;

(2) scores in the top 10 percent of students taking the Scholastic Aptitude Test or the American College Test;

(3) maintains a 3.2 grade point average in an institution of higher education; and

(4) enters into an agreement with the Foundation, pursuant to section 8(c), that the student will pursue a teaching career after graduation from an institution of higher education.

(b) SELECTION OF FOUNDATION SCHOLARS.—(1) The Foundation is authorized, either directly or by contract, to provide for the conduct of a nationwide competition for selecting Foundation scholars.

(2) The Foundation shall adopt selection procedures which assure that at least 1 Foundation scholar shall be selected each year from each State in which there are at least 50 resident applicants who meet the minimum criteria established by the Foundation.

(3) The Board shall attempt to award scholarships to students in the 50 States proportionately, on the relative basis of the number of secondary school students in a State compared to the total number of secondary school students in the United States.

STIPENDS

SEC. 7. (a) IN GENERAL.—Each student awarded a scholarship under this Act shall receive a stipend which shall not exceed the cost of attendance to such student at the institution of higher education for tuition, fees, books, and room and board. Such cost of attendance shall be adjusted annually to reflect increases, if any, in the Consumer Price Index for All Urban Consumers, published by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

(b) LIMITATION.—In no event shall the total amount of scholarship assistance awarded to any recipient exceed $70,000.

SCHOLARSHIP CONDITIONS

SEC. 8. (a) IN GENERAL.—A student awarded a scholarship under the provisions of this Act shall continue to receive the payments provided in this Act only during such periods as the Foundation finds that the student is—

(1) maintaining a 3.2 grade point average;

(2) maintaining a class rank in the top 10 percent of the class; and

(3) devoting full time to study or research designed to prepare the student for a career in teaching in public education and is not otherwise engaging in gainful employment other than employment approved by the Foundation pursuant to regulation.

(b) REPORTS.—The Foundation is authorized to require reports containing such information in such form and to be filed at such times as the Foundation determines to be necessary from any student awarded a scholarship under this Act. Each such report shall be accompanied by a certificate from any appropriate official at the institution of higher education, approved by the Foundation, stating that such student is making satisfactory progress in, and is devoting essentially full time to, study or research, except as otherwise provided in subsection (a).

(c) STUDENT AGREEMENT.—(1) A student awarded a scholarship under the provisions of this Act shall enter into an agreement with the Foundation to teach in a public elementary or secondary school for the period required under paragraph (2).

(2) For the purpose of determining the duration of the teaching commitment required in paragraph (1), the following schedule shall apply:

Total Amount of Scholarship Awarded	Teaching Commitment
$20,000 or less	2 years
$20,000 to $28,000	3 years
$28,000 to $36,000	4 years
36,000 to $50,000	5 years
$50,000 to $70,000	6 years

SCHOLARSHIP REPAYMENT PROVISIONS

SEC. 9. Each Foundation scholar found by the Foundation to be in noncompliance with the provisions of this Act shall be required to repay—

(1) the total amount of scholarships awarded under this Act plus interest equal to the sum of the rate of interest of 91-day Treasury bills auctioned for the 3-month period for which the determination of noncompliance is made;

(2) 20 percent of the total amount calculated under paragraph (1); and

(3) where applicable, reasonable collection fees.

EXCEPTIONS TO REPAYMENT PROVISIONS

SEC. 10. (a) DEFERRAL DURING CERTAIN PERIODS.—A Foundation scholar shall not be considered to be in violation of the provisions of this Act during any period in which the Foundation scholar—

(1) is serving, not in excess of 3 years, as a member of the armed services of the United States;

(2) is temporarily totally disabled for a period of time not to exceed 3 years as established by the sworn affidavit of a qualified physician;

(3) is unable to secure employment for a period not to exceed 12 months by reason of the care required by a spouse who is disabled;

(4) is seeking and unable to find full-time employment as a teacher in a public elementary or secondary school for a single period not to exceed 12 months; or

(5) satisfies the provisions of additional repayment exceptions that may be prescribed by the Secretary in regulations issued pursuant to this Act.

GRANTS TO STATES FOR FOUNDATION SCHOLARS

SEC. 11. (a) STATE GRANTS AUTHORIZED.—The Foundation is authorized to make grants to States to pay the Federal share of scholarship programs conducted by the States in accordance with the provisions of this Act.

(b) APPLICATION.—Each State desiring to participate in the scholarship program authorized by this section shall submit an application to the Foundation, at such time, in such manner, and containing or accompanied by such information as the Foundation may reasonably require. Each such application shall contain—

(1) assurances that the State will conduct the State program substantially in compliance with this Act;

(2) assurances that the State will pay the non-Federal share of the activities for which assistance is sought from non-Federal sources;

(3) a description of any additional teaching commitment to which a student may be subject upon graduation from an institution of higher education under the State program; and

(4) such additional assurances as the Foundation determines essential to ensure compliance with the requirements of this Act.

(c) FEDERAL SHARE.—The Federal share of the cost of the program established under this section shall be 50 percent.

NATIONAL FOUNDATION FOR EXCELLENCE FUND

SEC. 12. (a) ESTABLISHMENT.—

(1) There is established in the Treasury of the United States a trust fund to be known as the National Foundation for Excellence Trust Fund.

(2) The fund shall consist of amounts appropriated to it by section 16 of this Act. Amounts raised from non-Federal sources by the Foundation shall be credited to and form part of the fund.

(b) INVESTMENT AUTHORITY.—It shall be the duty of the Secretary to invest in full amounts appropriated to the fund. Such investments may be made only in interest-bearing obligations of the United States or in obligations guaranteed as to both principal and interest by the United States. For such purpose, such obligations may be acquired (1) on original issue at the issue price, or (2) by purchase of outstanding obligations at the market place. The purposes for which obligations of the United States may be issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, are hereby extended to authorize the issuance at par of special obligations exclusively to the fund. Such special obligations shall bear interest at a rate equal to the average rate of interest, computed as to the end of the calendar month next preceding the date of such issue, borne by all marketable interest-bearing obligations of the United States then forming a part of the public debt; except that where such average rate is not a multiple of one-eighth of 1 per centum, the rate of interest of such special obligations shall be the multiple of one-eighth of 1 per centum next lower than such average rate. Such special obligations shall be issued only if the Secretary determines that the purchase of other interest-bearing obligations of the United States, or of obligations guaranteed as to both principal and interest by the United States or original issue or at the market price, is not in the public interest.

(c) SALE AND REDEMPTION.—Any obligation acquired by the fund (except special obligations issued exclusively to the fund) may be sold by the Secretary at the market price, and such special obligations may be redeemed at par plus accrued interest.

(d) INTEREST AND PROCEEDS.—The interest on, and the proceeds from the sale or redemption of, any obligations held in the fund shall be credited to and form a part of the fund.

EXPENDITURES FROM THE FUND

SEC. 13. (a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary is authorized to pay to the Foundation from the interest and earnings of the fund such sums as the Board determines are necessary and appropriate to enable the Foundation to carry out the provisions of the Act.

(b) AUDIT.—The activities of the Foundation under this Act may be audited by the General Accounting Office under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Comptroller General of the United States. The representatives of the General Accounting Office shall have access to all books, accounts, records, reports, and files and all other papers, things, or property belonging to or in use by the Foundation, pertaining to such activities as necessary to facilitate the audit.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

SEC. 14. (a) IN GENERAL.—In order to carry out the provisions of this Act, the Foundation is authorized to—

(1) appoint and fix the compensation of such personnel as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act, except that in no case shall employees other than the Executive Director be compensated at a rate to exceed the rate provided for employees in grade 15 of the General Schedule set forth in section 5332 of title 5, United States Code;

(2) procure temporary and intermittent services of experts and consultants as are necessary to the extent authorized by section 3109 of title 5, United States Code, but at rates not to exceed the rate specified at the time of such service for grade GS-18 in section 5332 of such title;

(3) prescribe such regulations as it deems necessary governing the manner in which its functions shall be carried out;

(4) receive money and other property donated, bequeathed, or devised, without condition or restriction other than it be used for the purposes of the Foundation; and to use, sell, or otherwise dispose of such property for the purpose of carrying out its functions;

(5) accept and utilize the services of voluntary and noncompensated personnel and reimburse them for travel expenses, including per diem, as authorized by section 5703 of title 5, United States Code;

(6) enter into contracts, grants, or other arrangements, or modifications thereof, to carry out the provisions of this Act, and such contracts or modifications thereof may, with the concurrence of two-thirds of the members of the Board, be entered into without performance or other bonds, and without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (41 U.S.C. 5);

(7) make advances, progress, and other payments which the Board deems necessary under this Act without regard to the provisions of section 3648 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (31 U.S.C. 3324);

(8) rent office space in the District of Columbia; and

(9) make other necessary expenditures.

(b) EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR.—(1) There shall be an Executive Director of the Foundation who shall be appointed by the Board. The Executive Director shall be the chief executive officer of the Foundation and shall carry out the functions of the Foundation subject to the supervision and direction of the Board. The Executive Director shall carry out such other functions consistent with the provisions of this Act as the Board shall delegate.

(2) The Executive Director of the Foundation shall be compensated at the rate specified for employees in grade 18 of the General Schedule set forth in section 5332 of title 5, United States Code.

ANNUAL REPORT

SEC. 15. The Board shall make an annual report of its operations under this Act to the Congress not later than April 1 of each year. Each such report shall include—

(1) an analysis of the administration of the Foundation;

(2) a description of the services provided by the Foundation;

(3) a statement of the finances of the Foundation;

(4) a description of the plan and goals of the Foundation for disbursing $500,000 per year in States with a population of fewer than 2,000,000;

(5) a description of the plan and goals of the Foundation for disbursing $1,000,000 per year in States with a population greater than 2,000,000; and

(6) a description of the plan and goals of the Foundation to award scholarships to at least 100 students in every State.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 16. (a) IN GENERAL.—(1) There are authorized to be appropriated $200,000,000 to the fund.

(2) There are authorized to be appropriated $5,000,000 to the Foundation for each of the fiscal years 1988 through 1993 for operating and administrative expenses with remaining monies left in the fund.

(b) MATCHING FUNDS.—Subject to subsection (c), there are authorized to be appropriated $200,000,000 to the fund for the period beginning October 1, 1988, and ending September 30, 1993.

(c) AVAILABILITY.—The amount authorized pursuant to subsection (b) shall be available in each fiscal year in an amount equal to the amount raised from non-Federal sources by the Foundation in each such fiscal year.●

S. 430. A bill to amend title XIX of the Social Security Act to provide coverage for certain outreach activities undertaken at the option of a State for the purpose of identifying pregnant women and children who are eligible for medical assistance and assisting them in applying for and receiving such assistance, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

COVERAGE OF CERTAIN OUTREACH ACTIVITIES FOR PREGNANT WOMEN AND CHILDREN

● Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Medicaid Enrollment Improvement Act of 1989. This bill would offer States financial incentives to seek out Medicaid-eligible pregnant women, infants, and children, inform them of the benefits of health services available to them, and assist them in enrolling in the Medicaid Program. The ultimate goal of this measure is to assure that each and every baby born in the United States has the best chance possible of surviving and living a healthy, productive life.

We have all heard the dismal facts and figures related to infant mortality and childhood illnesses: over 40,000 infants in the United States each year do not live to celebrate their first birthday; over one-third of pregnant women receive little or no prenatal care; and a child born in Singapore, Hong Kong, Ireland, Australia, Canada, or Japan has a better chance of surviving his or her first year than a child born in the United States.

Put simply, too many infants in this country are born too small, too many are born premature, and too many mothers get little or no prenatal care while they are pregnant. Unless we act to reverse this situation, in the next decade, we will lose more American infants than we have lost soldiers in all the wars we have fought in this century. This is a shameful condition, given our wealth and advanced medical technology.

But unlike most other social problems whose solutions have baffled policymakers for years, we know the key to conquering infant mortality and childhood illness. In fact, it can be summed up in three words: preventive health care.

The cost-effectiveness and positive results of preventive care are indisputable. A single baby born with low birthweight, the factor most commonly associated with death of newborns, costs society between $14,000 and $30,000, and the lifetime costs of caring for these infants can reach $400,000. On the other hand, care that might prevent the low birthweight condition in the first place can cost as little as $400. Overall, every $1 spent on prenatal care for high-risk women saves our Nation over $3—an impressive return on our investment.

Unfortunately, the barriers poor pregnant women and their children face in pursuit of preventive health care services are monumental. Recognizing these barriers, Congress over the last several years has enacted a series of important bills that have expanded pregnant women and children's access to the Medicaid Program. I am also encouraged by President Bush's emphasis on the health status of pregnant women and children, and his proposals to expand health coverage for this group. I applaud these measures.

However, as important and promising as these initiatives are, they are only a first step. For a simple broadening of income levels does not guarantee that women will take advantage of the opportunity to receive early prenatal care. Nor does it ensure that children will seek crucial well-child care checkups that prevent future illnesses.

In fact, evidence indicates that States' efforts to identify and enroll newly eligible children and pregnant women have not kept pace with eligibility expansions. Without changes in the administration of this benefit designed to facilitate enrollment in the program, the full potential of expanded opportunities will never be met.

One reason for the low enrollment levels in the Medicaid program among pregnant women and children is that eligible people simply are not aware that they are entitled to Medicaid benefits. Consequently, they often delay seeking medical services and then needlessly struggle to pay for services out-of-pocket when they fall ill.

Lack of transportation is another problem; many applicants cannot easily get a ride to the benefits office. In a sparsely populated, rural State like South Dakota, this problem is particularly acute. And for women and children who are eligible for Medicaid but do not receive AFDC, there is no reason to go to the county welfare office and little chance of encountering eligibility workers at all.

These barriers to application have led some observers to conclude that the process seems to be set up to deny people benefits.

These problems are particularly acute in rural America, where infant mortality rates have been consistently higher than in urban areas. The rural poor often fall through the cracks because they have difficulty connecting with health asssistance programs often designed with the urban poor in mind. This point was confirmed during a recent rural health care tour I conducted in my home State of South Dakota, where I learned that over one-fourth of babies in the State are born to mothers who did not receive any prenatal care during the first trimester of their pregnancy. The difficulty of enrolling in the Medicaid program and the long distances one must travel to apply for benefits was often cited as the reason for not obtaining prenatal care.

It simply defeats efforts to boost people's access to health care if we cannot get the benefits to them. That is why I am introducing this bill, a measure that attempts to break down some of the barriers to enrollment in the Medicaid program.

My bill would offer States a 75-percent Federal matching rate to engage in efforts designed to educate women and children about the preventive health services available to them, and help them to apply for these benefits.

Numerous studies have shown that current efforts to inform women and children about their eligibility for Medicaid and help them through the application process are sparse and uneven. My bill addresses this problem by offering an enhanced matching rate to States that "outstation" eligibility workers and engage in outreach efforts.

Outstationing means placing eligibility workers outside of the county welfare office and in locations more accessible to Medicaid-eligible patients—places like public health clinics, courthouses, and hospitals. This addresses one key weakness in the eligibility process by moving eligibility workers to sites where pregnant women and their children are likely to go.

Outreach means systematically seeking out eligible children and expectant mothers and informing them of the health benefits available to them. With more outreach efforts, we can urge eligible people to get into the Medicaid Program before problems develop.

Finally, providing a higher matching rate gives States an immediate return for their enrollment efforts. Only by encouraging these kinds of efforts can we hope to improve our record in the area of infant mortality and morbidity.

I believe that we must make the health and well-being of mothers and infants a national priority and give them the public attention and resources that they deserve. After all, maternity and infant care are matters of life and death.

I urge my colleagues to support this innovative approach to improving the health of our young ones.●

S. 431. A bill to authorize funding for the Martin Luther King, Jr., Federal Holiday Commission; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MARTIN LUTHER KING, JR., FEDERAL HOLIDAY COMMISSION EXTENSION ACT

● Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I am reintroducing, along with 28 of my colleagues, legislation today to reauthorize and to provide Federal funds for the Martin Luther King, Jr., Federal Holiday Commission. The Commission was established in 1984 to encourage appropriate ceremonies and activities throughout the United States relating to the first observance of the Federal legal holiday honoring Martin Luther King, Jr. It was also directed to provide advice and assistance to Federal, State, and local governments and to private organizations with respect to the observance of the holiday.

The Commission was reauthorized in 1986 and is due to expire in April 1989. The bill we have introduced would extend the Commission for 5 years.

We feel that this legislation will serve an important service for our Nation. The celebration of Dr. King's birthday serves as a time for Americans to reflect on the principles of racial equality and nonviolent social change espoused by Martin Luther King, Jr. The Commission performs a vital, congressionally recognized service to promote the teachings of Dr. King by coordinating special commemorative events in the 50 States and in more than 140 nations around the globe.

The Commission has been instrumental in instructing our young people on the importance of educational excellence, of community service, and of peace and justice in our contemporary global society. In the past 2 years, significant progress has been made in supporting efforts to formalize such instruction and curriculum in all American schools, both public and private.

The Commission's Education Committee has responded to thousands of requests from school districts, principals and classroom teachers for "Learn-a-bration" packets containing literature, information, and bibliographies on Dr. King and his important philosophy of nonviolence. Many of these schools, both public and private, have conducted special "teach-ins" each year during the week of the holiday.

There are also other Commissions that receive Federal funds to carry out their programs. They include the Christopher Columbus Quincentenary Jubilee Commission, the Franklin Delano Roosevelt Memorial Commission, and the Commission on the Bicentennial of the United States Constitution to name a few. We believe that the Martin Luther King, Jr., Federal Holiday Commission is also deserving of Federal funds to carry out its congressional mandate to promote the holiday and the dream of Dr. King.

The Commission has been successful in carrying out its mandate as set forth by Congress. However, it is now in a critical stage of its development and needs Federal financial support that would help it complete its important work. Federal assistance would also help in establishing a solid base for financial support from the private sector. This bill would authorize an annual appropriation of $300,000 for 5 years that would enable the Commission and its committees to devote their time to the promotion of the holiday and the dream of Dr. King.

Representative CONYERS plans to reintroduce his companion measure to this bill later this week. We both hope the Congress can enact this legislation prior to the expiration of the Commission in April.●

By Mr. ROCKEFELLER (for himself and Mr. MOYNIHAN):

S. 432. A bill to direct the Secretary of Transportation to identify scenic and historic roads and to develop methods of designating, promoting, protecting, and enhancing roads as scenic and historic roads; to the Committee on the Environment and Public Works.

SCENIC BYWAYS STUDY ACT OF 1989

● Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, today, I am pleased to introduce the National Scenic Byways Study Act of 1989. This measure requires the Secretary of Transportation to develop a plan for a National Scenic Byways Program for inclusion in the 1991 highway bill. It also asks the Secretary of Transportation, in coordination with other Federal agencies, to examine the potential benefits of a scenic byways system on our Nation's travel and tourism industry.

A 1986 study for the President's Commission on Americans Outdoors found that almost 80 percent of American adults drive for pleasure and to sightsee. Driving for pleasure is second in popularity only to walking as a recreational pursuit for Americans. Based on its findings, the President's Commission recommended creation of a national system of scenic byways—the designation of existing quiet roads which would highlight for travelers the aesthetic, cultural, and historical values of an area. The report recommended that State and local governments create a network of scenic byways and take action to protect these resources.

Nearly three decades ago, the United States started construction of our vast Interstate Highway System. Now these transportation routes are almost completed. The purpose of the interstates was to allow safe and rapid travel between two points. By and large, we succeeded. The interstates are quick and efficient—they get you where you need to go. But relatively few segments of the interstates are scenic.

Many Americans prefer roads that offer a variety of sights and experiences—rushing streams, giant mountains, peaceful river valleys, unfettered wildlife, small towns and farms, and unspoiled rural America. These roads are what I would like to see designated as scenic byways.

Preserving scenic beauty for future generations is an important reason for designating and protecting our scenic roads. But there's a huge economic incentive as well. With travel and tourism a booming segment of the U.S. economy—tourism is America's second largest employer and third largest retail industry—scenic byways are in every State's best financial interest.

Studies show that our population is getting older, increasingly urban—80 percent live in urban areas—and are choosing 3-day weekends instead of entire weeks or longer for their vacations. In 1987, 82 percent of summer vacation travel was by motor vehicle. Yet vacation nights away from home dropped 3 percent. In other words, the trend is toward shorter, more frequent vacation travel by motor vehicle.

Scenic roads satisfy the urban family's desire to see rural America. A scenic road trip provides a short 3-day vacation for the working family. Under a scenic byways program, the roads themselves could become the destination. For example, America's most visited national park is the Blue Ridge Parkway, with some 23 million visitors touring this scenic road annually.

Scenic roads abound in West Virginia and the rest of our Nation. For instance, projects currently on the drawing board, including the New River Parkway and Coalways, show the diversity of opportunities that scenic byways present in my State. The National Forest Service has seized on this opportunity by starting up their National Scenic Byway Program and I am very pleased that they have chosen West Virginia's Highland Scenic Highway in the Monongahela Forest for scenic byway status. But that's just a start. There are many scenic roads in West Virginia and in our Nation that are largely unknown to travelers.

Only about 30 States have recognized the importance of scenic byways by establishing official scenic road programs or enacting legislation to create scenic routes. For travelers to know and take advantage of scenic roads, these roads must be publicized, marked, preserved, and made safe and accessible.

The intent of the legislation that I'm introducing today is to lay the groundwork for designating a National Scenic Byways Program that will identify, protect, and enhance our Nation's scenic roads. To accomplish this, the bill requests that the Secretary of Transportation develop a long-range plan for a scenic byways program, including guidelines and criteria for designating scenic byways. It also asks the Secretary to prepare a nationwide inventory of scenic roads within 12 months of passage of the act. Also requested in the measure is a study of the economic impact of scenic byways on travel and tourism, which may be undertaken with the Secretary of Commerce, and case studies of those States that already have scenic byways programs in place.

This scenic byways bill has the support of a broad coalition of tourism, recreation, environmental, preservation, and transportation organizations. A companion measure will be introduced in the House of Representatives by Congressman JAMES OBERSTAR.

Mr. President, a National Scenic Byways Program is not a new idea. The Kennedy, Johnson, Nixon, and Reagan administrations all issued recreation reports calling for a national system of scenic byways. Unfortunately, the time was never ripe and there were always—and still will be—competing budgetary and policy demands. However, the time may have arrived, at last, for a scenic byways program. The Interstate System is virtually complete. The highway bill will be revisited in 1990. And maybe most importantly, there is a broad-based understanding of the economic benefits of travel and tourism to the States and a growing recognition that a system of scenic roads can attract or retain welcomed visitors.

I urge my colleagues to support the Scenic Byways Study Act of 1989. This bill is negligible in cost but is a critical first step.●

By Mr. ARMSTRONG, along with Mr. BOSCHWITZ, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. COATS, Mr. CONRAD, Mr. DOLE, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. NUNN, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. PELL, and Mr. METZENBAUM:

S.J. Res. 62. Joint resolution designating May 1989 as "National Stroke Awareness Month;" to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL STROKE AWARENESS MONTH

● Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, this year, some 500,000-600,000 Americans will have a stroke. One-third of those afflicted die within 1 month; of the survivors, two-thirds will suffer some degree of permanent disability.

Today, there are approximately 2-3 million persons living with stroke aftereffects in the United States. Reports indicate that 90 percent of stroke survivors can benefit from rehabilitation therapy, while only a minority of them receive it. Strokes affect not just the individual, but the entire family, because the family unit becomes the primary caregiver for the survivor. Worst of all, strokes are the third leading cause of death in our country.

To help reduce the risk of having a stroke, there are several precautionary measures we can take. One is to make Americans more aware of the problem, symptoms, and risk factors. That is the reason I am introducing legislation declaring the month of May 1989, as "National Stroke Awareness Month." I hope my colleagues will join me in cosponsoring this legislation.

I ask unanimous consent to print the joint resolution in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 62

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

Whereas stroke is the third leading cause of death in the United States;

Whereas stroke is the leading cause of adult disability in the United States;

Whereas stroke is a distinct disease of the brain and nervous system, causing paralysis and speech, perceptual, emotional, and cognitive impairment;

Whereas there is insufficient public knowledge of stroke prevention, treatment, and rehabilitation;

Whereas between 500,000 and 600,000 Americans are affected by a stroke each year;

Whereas between 2,000,000 and 3,000,000 American stroke survivors have not fully regained their physical and mental abilities and remain significantly disabled;

Whereas stroke is a sudden catastrophe that devastates families and routinely robs survivors and family caregivers of the most rewarding years of their lives;

Whereas stroke costs the United States between $12 and $13 billion annually in medical treatment, rehabilitation, and lost potential economic output;

Whereas the National Stroke Association's mission is to provide the means to reduce the incidence and effects of stroke through public and professional education, community service, and research; and

Whereas increased national awareness of stroke may stimulate greater interest, concern, and participation by the American people and may lead to increased research and to reducing the overall impact of stroke in the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That May 1989 is designated as "National Stroke Awareness Month" and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such month with appropriate ceremonies and activities.●

S.J. Res. 64. Joint resolution to designate March 25, 1989, as "Greek Independence Day: A National Day of Celebration of Greek and American Democracy;" to the Committee on the Judiciary.

GREEK INDEPENDENCE DAY

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I rise to introduce a joint resolution to designate March 25, 1989, as "Greek Independence Day: A National Day of Celebration of Greek and American Democracy." The resolution also asks the President to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe the designated day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

This resolution is identical to one that Senator SPECTER and I introduced in the last Congress, Senate Joint Resolution 346. That resolution, which had 60 cosponsors, was approved unanimously by the Senate. Unfortunately, the House of Representatives did not act on the companion resolution so it did not become law. That is why we are reintroducing the resolution today in the Senate. The companion will also be reintroduced in the House of Representatives.

March 25, 1989, marks the 168th anniversary of the beginning of the revolution which freed the Greek people from the Ottoman Empire. It is fitting that we celebrate this day together with Greece in order to reaffirm the common democratic heritage of Americans and Greeks.

The ancient Greeks forged the very notion of democracy, placing the ultimate power to govern in the people. As Aristotle said:

If liberty and equality, as is thought by some, are chiefly to be found in democracy, they will best be attained when all persons alike share in the government to the utmost.

Because the concept of democracy was born in the age of the ancient Greeks, all Americans, whether or not of Greek ancestry, are kinsmen of a kind to the ancient Greeks. America's Founding Fathers drew heavily upon the political and philosophical experience of ancient Greece in forming our Government. For that contribution alone, we owe a heavy debt to the Greeks.

The common heritage which we share has forged a close bond between Greece and the United States, and between our peoples. And it is reflected in the numerous contributions made by present-day Greek Americans in New Jersey and across the country to our American culture.

I ask unanimous consent that the names of the Senators that cosponsored this resolution in the last Congress be printed in the RECORD. I urge my colleagues to support this resolution as a tribute to these contributions, past and present, which have greatly enriched American life.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COSPONSORS OF SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 346 DESIGNATING MARCH 25, 1989 AS GREEK INDEPENDENCE DAY

SENATE RESOLUTION 62—REQUESTING A REPORT ON UNITED STATES ASSISTANCE TO SOVIET ARMENIA

Mr. SIMON (for himself, Mr. PRESSLER, Mr. PELL, Mr. DOLE, and Mr. MITCHELL) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 62

Whereas on December 7, 1988, the worst earthquake in modern times devastated the Soviet Socialist Republic of Armenia in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics (hereafter in this resolution referred to as "Armenia"), leaving tens of thousands dead and seriously injured;

Whereas the earthquake completely destroyed housing, schools, and other buildings in more than one hundred cities, towns, and villeges in Armenia;

Whereas the earthquake has literally wiped out the homes and families of hundreds of thousands of Armenians;

Whereas the United States has historically supported the Armenians' struggle to survive through immeasurable adversities during this century;

Whereas the American people have overwhelmingly reaffirmed this tradition of support by their generous assistance to the earthquake's survivors;

Whereas the Agency for International Development, the Department of State, the Department of Defense, the United States Geological Survey, the Department of Energy, and the National Guard have performed admirably in delivering the first phases of emergency relief to Armenia;

Whereas the United States Government should continue as a leader among the nations of the world who have offered assistance to Armenia as it did in response to the earthquakes in Italy in 1980 and Mexico in 1985;

Whereas the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics has allowed unprecedented foreign relief efforts into Armenia; and

Whereas the United States encourages the delivery of additional resources as a part of the continuing reflief efforts; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that, not later than April 1, 1989, the Secretary of State or his designee should prepare and transmit to the Congress a report describing—

(1) all United States private and public assistance delivered to Armenia;

(2) the prospects for expeditious delivery of future United States private assistance to, and United States trade with, Armenia;

(3) the existence of United States Government experts in housing, transportation, management, medicine, geology, economic development, and other fields relevant to reconstruction efforts in Armenia;

(4) the feasibility of establishing a joint public-private task force to assist in the long-term reconstruction of Armenia;

(5) the feasibility and wisdom of undertaking a diplomatic initiative encouraging the international community to continue supporting Armenia;

(6) any other humanitarian efforts which could facilitate the recovery and rehabilitation of the areas stricken; and

(7) the United States foreign policy implications, if any, of assisting Armenia.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Senate shall transmit a copy of this resolution to the Secretary of State.

SENATE RESOLUTION 63—RELATING TO FEDERAL EXCISE TAXES ON GASOLINE

Mr. SYMMS submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

S. RES. 63

Whereas Federal excise taxes are regressive in that a lower income individual must use a higher percentage of his income to pay the taxes than a higher income individual;

Whereas adding 10 cents or more per gallon to the cost of fuel will have a devastating effect on the Nation's economy in that such an increase would—

(1) reduce the gross national product by $10 billion in the 1st year,

(2) reduce automobile production by 1.3 percent,

(3) reduce housing construction by 0.9 percent,

(4) increase unemployment by 80,000 in the 1st year and 130,000 by the third year,

(5) reduce petroleum refinery output by 1.2 percent,

(6) reduce income tax revenues by almost $1 billion annually,

(7) reduce personal savings by nearly 3 percent, and

(8) increase the Consumer Price Index by 0.3 percent;

Whereas it would be discriminatory for one portion of the Nation's population, highway users, to pay an additional tax in order to reduce the Federal deficit, thereby forcing this segment to shoulder a greater share of our Nation's financial burden;

Whereas it would be inequitable for individuals to contribute to Federal deficit reduction based on the number of miles driven per year;

Whereas Federal highway and public transit programs are funded at levels significantly lower than documented needs requiring States to provide funds to fill that shortfall;

Whereas an increase in the Federal tax on gasoline and diesel fuel—

(1) inhibits the ability of State and local governments to raise revenues to fund transportation projects, and

(2) reduces the revenues for State and local government fuel taxes unless State and local governments increase their taxes; and

Whereas total motor fuel taxes (including State and local taxes) account for nearly 25 percent of the retail price of gasoline and about 29 percent of the retail price of diesel fuel making motor fuel among the most heavily taxed essential items in the Nation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the Federal excise taxes on gasoline and diesel fuel shall not be increased in order to reduce the Federal deficit.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I am pleased to submit a resolution expressing the sense of the Senate that Federal fuel taxes should not be raised to reduce the deficit. The resolution is identical to a House resolution introduced by GLENN ANDERSON, chairman of the House Public Works and Transportation Committee, and cosponsored by more than 140 of our House colleagues as of this morning.

While Congress and the administration continue to wrangle over how to handle the budget deficit, there remains strong concern among transportation users and officials responsible for maintaining the Nation's transportation infrastructure that Federal fuel taxes will be seen as a relatively easy way out of the deficit crunch. While it is not legally binding, this resolution offers Members a chance to say clearly that a fuel tax increase will not be easy to achieve and should not be viewed as the course of least resistance.

For my own part, no tax increase of any kind can be justified on the basis of our budget deficit problems. As I have said many times previously, U.S. budget deficits are not the result of too little revenue accuring to the Federal Treasury. They are, instead, the direct result of too much Federal spending. To preserve economic growth, we cannot take an ever-growing percentage of private wealth to be redirected into public activities which generally constitute a far less efficient or productive use of the wealth.

Notwithstanding the salient arguments of President Bush, many Members of Congress, and leading economists to the contrary, some national leaders—mostly inside the Beltway—continue to argue that a tax increase is necessary to reduce the deficit by the timetable established under Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. Some of those same tax advocates, including my friend, DANNY ROSTENKOWSKI, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, have publicly supported a fuel tax increase as the most politically palatable way to raise big bucks fast. I hope Members who support a tax increase will consider the adverse economic and political consequences of additional fuel taxes.

For more than 30 years now, Federal motor fuel and truck taxes have been used almost exclusively to finance the Federal-Aid Highway Program and, for the past 7 years, the Mass Transit Program. The pay-as-you-go, user-financed highway program serves as a model of Federalism because Congress has respected the trust our predecessors intended to impart when they established the Highway Trust Fund. Taxes paid by highway users across the Nation have accrued to the trust fund and have been reserved for use in the highway program.

That trust has been diminished in recent years as Congress reduced spending in the highway program so the trust fund's growing cash balance would help offset—hide—deficit spending in programs financed out of the general fund. There is a growing awareness among highway users that their fuel taxes were being used to hide deficit spending in other programs, and it will be difficult to restore public confidence in the trust fund concept.

The only redeeming aspect of this smoke-and-mirrors budgeting is that most Members have felt sufficient shame about the process that it has been a game of silent collusion. If Congress increases motor fuel taxes—user fees—to reduce the deficit rather than pay for highway construction and maintenance, all pretense at maintaining the fiscal integrity of the Highway Trust Fund will be eliminated. The mainstay of support for the Federal-Aid Highway Program—namely, the American taxpayers' willingness to pay for a program in direct proportion to the benefit they receive from it—will be lost forever. I hope Senators will join me as cosponsors of this resolution to ensure that such a travesty does not occur.

There are numerous additional reasons an increase in Federal fuel taxes for deficit reduction purposes would be bad economics and bad public policy. The fuel tax is a regressive tax that hits hardest at low-income, rural Americans who tend to drive further to make a living; an increase would cause financial and job losses in many industries; it would eliminate part of the tax base many States intend to use to increase State funding for highway and bridge improvements; and by hindering infrastructure improvements, new fuel taxes to reduce the deficit would make badly needed productivity increases difficult or impossible. I know interested parties who contact Members about this resolution will expound on these arguments against a fuel tax increase, and I will not do so here.

I would note that we have tremendous unmet highway and bridge needs that only grow more expensive as we delay those projects in order to increase the cash balance in the Highway Trust Fund. After the 1982 nickel gas tax increase, pavement conditions improved on all highway systems. However, statistics for the period from 1985 to 1987 show the percentage of rural interstate pavement in poor condition is increasing, and the percentage of pavements rated in good or excellent condition has decreased on almost every system.

The interstate system carries over 21 percent of all traffic and 15.9 percent of the bridges on the interstate system are now rated as deficient. There are 238,357 Federal-aid system and off-system bridges that are either structurally deficient or functionally obsolete. We will need an investment by all units of government of approximately $5 billion per year to maintain our bridges. In addition, to maintain our highways in a condition which will meet most of our transportation needs will require a capital investment by all levels of government of $30 to $35 billion per year. Compare that to the 1987 capital investment of $31 billion by all levels of government for highway and bridge improvements. We are already falling behind, without taking a cut out of the tax base for nontransportation purposes.

Mr. President, again I invite Senators to join me as cosponsors of this important resolution. I ask unanimous consent that the following documents in opposition to a fuel tax increase be printed in the RECORD following my remarks: a memorial approved by the Idaho House of Representatives, a letter from the director of the Idaho Transportation Department, and a letter from the American Association of State Highway and Transportation Officials.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF IDAHO

We, your Memorialists, the House of Representatives and the Senate of the State of Idaho assembled in the First Regular Session of the Centennial Idaho Legislature, do hereby respectfully represent that:

Whereas, the United States Congress is seeking some effective means of reducing the federal budget deficit in the immediate future; and

Whereas, several proposals being considered for budget reduction purposes would increase the existing federal gasoline tax by various sizable increments; and

Whereas, the U.S. Department of Energy has stated that "a motor fuel tax will create an economic loss which is of far greater magnitude than the possible benefits. . ."; and

Whereas, a gasoline tax for deficit reduction would be a regressive tax affecting the poor to a greater extent than other income levels; and

Whereas, states would receive no direct revenue benefits, while incurring substantial increases in public assistance costs; and

Whereas, the residents of the south, midwest and west pay more fuel taxes because they must travel greater distances by personal vehicles than residents of other regions and therefore would bear a disproportionate burden of deficit reduction; and

Whereas, since there continues to exist a great need to rehabilitate and reconstruct the nation's transportation infrastructure, motor fuel taxes should continue to be dedicated to transportation purposes; and

Whereas, the tourism industry, one of the top three employers in eighty per cent of the states, would be adversely affected; and

Whereas, the gross national product, consumer price index, and employment all would be severely and negatively affected; and

Whereas, raising the gasoline excise tax for deficit reduction purposes would not only undermine the highway trust fund, but would also fail to get to the root of the problem of federal spending exceeding federal income.

Now, therefore, be it resolved by the members of the First Regular Session of the Centennial Idaho Legislature, the House of Representatives and the Senate concurring therein, that we petition the United States Congress to oppose the use of the federal gasoline tax to reduce the federal deficit.

Be it Further Resolved that the Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and she is hereby authorized and directed to forward a copy of this Memorial to the President of the United States, the Secretary of the United States Department of Transportation, the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States Congress, the cochairmen of the National Economic Commission, and the congressional delegation representing the state of Idaho in the Congress of the United States.

STATE OF IDAHO,
TRANSPORTATION DEPARTMENT,
Boise, ID, February 3, 1989.

Hon. DREW LEWIS,
Hon. ROBERT STRAUSS,
Cochairmen, National Economic Commission, 734 Jackson Place, NW., Washington, DC.

DEAR MESSRS. LEWIS AND STRAUSS: I am writing to inform you that the Idaho Transportation Department, in concert with nearly 800 other transportation organizations, industries, and user groups, is adamantly opposed to the imposition of additional highway fuel taxes for reducing the Federal budget deficit.

Gentlemen, we are approaching a landmark event in the history of surface transportation in the United States of America—the completion of the Interstate Highway System. The unparalleled accomplishment which that system embodies was only made possible by the dedicated funds of the Highway Trust Fund. And there is no doubt that, had other additional fuel taxes been levied during that third-of-a-century Interstate era, finishing those freeways would still be many years in the future.

Gasoline and diesel fuel are already among the most heavily taxed consumer items. And analysis shows that a motor fuels tax is not an efficient way to handle the deficit because other tax revenues would decrease while federal expenditures would rise.

A far more efficient and much fairer tax would be a per-barrel oil import fee or a value-added tax. Either one would be a broad-based approach to the deficit problem which, I agree, needs to be solved as soon as possible.

In my opinion, the addition of new fuels taxes, while some alternative tax would accomplish the same effect, would be a serious error in national policy.

Sincerely,

KERMIT V. KIEBERT,
Director.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF STATE HIGHWAY AND TRANSPORTATION OFFICIALS,
Washington, DC, January 19, 1988.

Senator QUENTIN BURDICK,
Chairman, Senate Environment and Public Works Committee, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: In response to past requests from the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee regarding state views on transportation issues we would like to advise you that the AASHTO Policy Committee has identified four critical transportation issues as the Association's National Priority Issues for 1989. AASHTO considers these priorities to be of vital importance to the states, as they seek to provide safe and efficient transportation facilities throughout the nation.

In brief, the four National Priority Issues are the following:

NO USE OF THE MOTOR FUEL TAX FOR DEFICIT REDUCTION

The federal highway motor fuel taxes are collected from highway users for the sole support of transportation programs, and revenues collected are dedicated to this purpose. Motor fuel taxation should continue to be used only to support transportation, and should not be employed for deficit reduction or general government purposes.

Similarly, aviation user fees are collected from air passengers for the sole support of the nation's aviation programs, are dedicated to this purpose as defined in the aviation authorizing legislation enacted by Congress, and should not be employed for deficit reduction or general government purposes.

FUNDING LEVELS AND STABILITY

The revenues flowing into the Highway and Aviation Trust Funds should be fully expended for the purposes collected. Further, every effort should be made to fund the highway, public transportation and aviation programs up to the levels authorized by the Congress and to ensure stable funding through the life of the authorization measures.

EQUITABLE TAXATION OF ALTERNATE FUELS

Subsidization of ethanol and other alternate fuels through the Highway Trust Fund should be ended, and certainly not expanded.

NO EXTENSION OF FEDERAL LABOR PROTECTION IN RAILROAD LINE SALES

The Congress should not impose additional unemployment compensation (labor protection) as a condition to the sale of rail lines to new enterprises.

Further details on each of these National Priority Issues will be found in the attached materials, and we would note that the matter of labor protection in railroad line sales is now before the Supreme Court. We recognize that the Committee is not directly concerned with all of these Issues, but we wanted to call all of them to your attention.

You and the Committee are of course deeply involved with the issue of use of the fuel tax for deficit reduction purposes. We believe this issue is of paramount importance for the future of America's surface transportation system.

Among the reasons the member departments of ASSHTO have are opposed to the utilization of the motor fuel tax for deficit reduction are the following:

A major increase in motor fuel taxes for deficit reduction purposes would damage, not improve, the nation's economy.

A recent study by the Wharton Econometric Forecasting Associates estimates that a gasoline tax of 10 cents per gallon would reduce the Gross National Product by $10 billion in the first year alone, eliminating 80,000 jobs, and cutting automobile production and housing construction.

A motor fuel tax increase would not reduce the deficit in proportion to the size of the increased tax levy, because of the damage such a large motor fuel tax increase would do to our economy.

According to a study by Data Resources, Inc., a private consulting group, each dollar of additional fuel tax revenue will reduce the deficit by only 27 cents.

A large motor fuel tax increase for deficit reduction purposes would act to cut overall transportation funds at all levels of government, at a time when increases are needed to keep America moving.

The U.S. Department of Energy estimates that a tax increase of 25 cents per gallon on motor fuels would decrease 1990 fuel tax revenues by $416 million at the federal level, because of a drop in fuel consumption. State fuel tax revenue is estimated to decline by twice that amount, resulting in a combined loss of transportation revenues of an estimated $1.2 billion per year.

States rely heavily on highway user fees, such as motor fuel taxes, to fund state transportation programs. In 1987, highway user fees accounted for 81.2 percent of the $32.8 billion total of state highway receipts, an increase of some $1.3 billion in user fees over the 1986 level.

Use of the motor fuel tax for deficit reduction places a heavier burden on those with low incomes, who devote a larger share of their income to motor fuel purchase than do the wealthy.

As the House Public Works and Transportation Committee has reported, 78 percent of Americans earning less than $10,000 a year commute to work by private motor vehicle. These low-income gasoline users would pay more than three times as much for deficit reduction relative to their income as more affluent motorists.

Because residents in larger, more rural states must drive many more miles than those living in compact urban states, they will be unfairly called upon to pay more per person to reduce the national debt owed by all Americans.

For example, the average motorist in Hawaii uses only 568 gallons of gasoline per year, according to the U.S. Department of Transportation. An average motorist in Wyoming uses 949 gallons of gasoline per year, and would pay 2.2 times as much for deficit reduction.

The Federal-aid Highway Program has helped America construct the finest highway system in the world, on an essentially pay-as-you go basis. Key to this success has been a long standing compact between highway users and the federal and state governments, whereby motor fuel taxes are levied and collected with the pledge that revenues from the taxes will be used only for transportation purposes.

If federal motor fuel taxes should be employed for deficit reduction or other purposes, it would break this long standing compact, do harm to the nation's transportation system, and be unfair to highway users.

We at AASHTO look forward to working with you in the coming year as you consider these and other transportation issues.

Very truly yours,

FRANCIS B. FRANCOIS,
Executive Director.

SENATE RESOLUTION 64—OPPOSING FEES ON IMPORTED CRUDE OIL AND REFINED PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

Mr. PELL (for himself, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. RUDMAN, Mr. COHEN, Mr. HEINZ, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. MATSUNAGA, Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. KERRY, and Mr. METZENBAUM) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

S. RES. 64

Whereas a fee on imported crude oil and refined petroleum products would directly increase the cost of production and manufacturing for industries using petroleum products;

Whereas the increased production costs resulting from such a fee would impair the ability of industries to compete in international markets;

Whereas such fee would directly increase the costs to other users of petroleum products, including those dependent on oil and oil products to heat their homes, and those who use electricity generated from oil;

Whereas the increased costs to industry and to homeowners from such a fee would not be uniformly distributed geographically or among economic sectors, but would be borne disproportionately by those industries and regions most dependent on petroleum products: Now therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that neither the President nor the Congress should impose fees on imported crude oil and refined petroleum products.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I am today submitting a resolution expressing the sense of the Senate that neither the Congress nor the President should impose an oil import fee on imported crude oil or refined petroleum products. Joining me in sponsoring this resolution are Senators CHAFEE, MITCHELL, KENNEDY, RUDMAN, COHEN, HEINZ, LAUTENBERG, MATSUNAGA, HUMPHREY, JEFFORDS, KERRY, METZENBAUM, and LEAHY.

During the past few weeks, oil import fees have been the subject of renewed interest and serious attention by several in the administration including Office of Management and Budget Director Richard G. Darman. In addition, several measures to impose a fee on imported oil and petroleum products have been reintroduced in the 101st Congress. The oil import fee has been presented as an easy and painless way for the Government to increase revenue, reduce the Federal budget deficit, and ease concerns, regarding our domestic energy security.

The truth is that an oil import fee is not a good idea and would certainly not be painless for consumers. An oil import fee would impose heavy new costs on all who use oil and oil products in manufacturing and production. It would also impose higher energy costs on all who heat their homes with oil or use oil-generated electricity, particularly families throughout the Northeast. On the matter of energy security, there are certainly no assurances that the financial windfall collected by the oil companies as a result of an oil import fee, would be plowed back into immediate oil and gas exploration and production to ease energy dependency concerns.

In addition, and relating directly to our domestic economic security, oil import fees would increase the production costs of energy and raw materials for our domestic industries, making American manufacturers far less competitive in world markets—a situation certainly not acceptable with today's trade imbalance.

Equally important, an oil import fee would severly impact some of our most friendly and secure suppliers of imported oil—Mexico and Venezuela. Such a fee would force these nations to absorb some or all of the import fee—a matter that must merit careful attention in view of the massive debt burden carried by several of these countries.

Mr. President, as noted in a recent editorial in the Washington Post, an oil import fee would also have an unconscionable effect on families who use oil to heat their homes, particularly families throughout the Northeast. Rhode Island as well as other States of the Northeast, for example, already suffer from energy costs that are well above the national average. Compounding the problem is the fact that Rhode Island, along with most States in the Northeast in spite of vigorous conservation efforts, remains heavily dependent upon oil as the primary source of energy. Approximately 65 percent of Rhode Island's energy consumption is in the form of oil, while oil provides for the Nation as a whole just 40 percent of total energy consumption.

Without question an oil import fee would impact far more heavily on States along the east coast, especially in the Northeast, than other regions of the country that have access to natural gas, coal, and hydroelectric power. An oil import fee would further widen the gap between energy costs in the Northeast and energy costs in other regions of the country, resulting in more economic dislocations for many workers throughout this region. Clearly, an oil import fee would heavily subsidize other regions of the country at the expense of oil consuming States in the Northeast.

Mr. President, an oil import fee is just bad national policy. It is a discriminatory tax on all consumers throughout the Northeast, and it does not address the concerns over energy security that a more vigorous and sustained energy conservation effort would accomplish. Furthermore an oil import fee only encourages the growth of our Federal deficit by causing economic dislocations for American workers, increasing our trade imbalance, and adding to the massive debt burden of certain oil exporting countries.

I hope this resolution will persuade the administration and some in Congress not to press for an oil import fee. I welcome additional cosponsors to this resolution and ask unanimous consent that the recent editorial from the Washington Post on January 3, 1989, be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AN OIL IMPORT FEE?

As the Government's need for tax revenues grows more urgent, the idea of an oil import fee is (once again) turning up here and there. Because it would be levied on all imported oil, the enthusiasts say, it wouldn't hit commuters as hard as a gasoline tax would.

Watch out for the oil import tax. It's a badly flawed concept. One defect is that, while it could certainly raise a lot of money, most of it would go to domestic oil producers. Imports are now 40 percent of American oil consumption, and the price of the imports sets the price for the oil produced here. If the government were to put a tax of $1 on every barrel of imported oil, the price of every barrel of domestic oil would also rise by a dollar. Consumers would pay $6.5 billion more a year for their oil, of which something over $2 billion would go to the U.S. Treasury. The rest would go in the form of higher prices to the producers here and in Canada.

The Canadians would share this largess because of the Free Trade Agreement now going into effect. That opens up an interesting question of foreign policy. If the Canadian imports were to be exempt from the tariff, what about imports from Mexico? Surely the United States would not discriminate against one neighbor at the expense of the other. And if the Mexicans got a neighborly exemption, how about the Venezuelans, whose oil exports to this country were crucial in World War II? And if the Venezuelans were to be exempt, what about the Nigerians? In political terms, the question of discrimination is insoluble.

While a gasoline tax would hit motorists hard, it wouldn't lay a finger on other oil users—like the families that use oil to heat their homes. Many readers have written to chide us severely for our alleged lack of social conscience in supporting a stiff tax on gasoline. But the truly unconscionable effect of an oil import tax is what they should be worrying about. It would raise the cost of home heating. Oil heat is most common in New England, where the climate is not gentle at this time of year.

The oil import fee enjoys periodic bursts of popularity whenever the gasoline tax comes up. On first glance, it always seems such an appealing alternative. On more careful examination, the appeal always fades.

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

SUBCOMMITTEE ON LABOR, HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES, EDUCATION AND RELATED AGENCIES

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I am pleased to advise the Senate that the Appropriations Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services, Education and Related Agencies will hold its fiscal year 1990 public witness hearings on the following dates: May 3, 4, 5, 8, 11, and 12. The first day of hearings will include any testimony from Members of Congress.

The deadline for interested groups or individuals to submit their request to testify is Monday, March 27. All requests must be in writing and should be addressed to me in care of the Labor, Health and Human Services, Education and Related Agencies Appropriations Subcommittee, Senate Dirksen 186, Washington, DC 20510.

It should be noted that this year, because of time constraints, the number of public witnesses will be limited to 150. Therefore, I urge interested parties to respond in a timely manner.

Those first 150 persons whose requests are received by March 27 will receive a letter providing instructions for their appearance before the subcommittee. Interested groups or individuals who are not among the first 150 requests will be given the opportunity to have their written testimony published in the committee's hearing record.

The deadline for those who wish to submit statements for the hearing record will be Monday, May 15. Such statements must be no longer than five double-spaced pages, and three copies should be sent to me in care of the subcommittee.

For those Senate offices which I believe may be interested, I ask unanimous consent that the regular hearing schedule for the subcommittee be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the schedule was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HEARING SCHEDULE

Senate Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services, Education and Related Agencies:

THURSDAY, MARCH 9, 10 A.M.—SD 116

Department of Labor: Secretary of Labor; Inspector General.

COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the public that a hearing has been scheduled before the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

The hearing will take place on March 6, 1989, beginning at 9:30 a.m. in room SD-366 of the Senate Dirksen Office Building in Washington, DC.

The purpose of the hearing is to receive testimony on S. 406, a bill to authorize competitive oil and gas leasing and development on the Coastal Plain of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge in a manner consistent with protection of the environment; and three amendments to the bill, numbered 2, 3, and 4.

The Secretary of the Interior, the State of Alaska, two conservationists, and two representatives of the oil and gas industry have been invited to testify. Written comments on the legislation have been solicited from the Department of Energy, Department of Commerce, and the Environmental Protection Agency. Others wishing to submit written testimony to be included in the hearing record are welcome to do so. Those wishing to submit written testimony should send two copies to the Subcommittee on Public Lands, National Parks and Forests, SD-364, Washington, DC 20510.

For further information regarding the hearing, please contact Tom Williams of the committee staff at (202) 224-7145.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr President, I would like to announce for the public that a hearing has been scheduled before the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

The hearing will take place Wednesday, February 22, 1989, at 10 a.m. in room SD-366 of the Senate Dirksen Office Building in Washington, DC.

The purpose of the hearing is to consider the nomination of Adm. James D. Watkins to be the Secretary of Energy.

For further information, please contact Nancy Blush at (202) 224-3606.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the public that a hearing has been scheduled before the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources. The full committee hearing will take place Tuesday, March 14, 1989, at 9:30 a.m. in room SD-366 of the Senate Dirksen Office Building in Washington, DC.

The purpose of the hearing is to receive testimony on energy efficiency technologies and renewable energy resources as they relate to S. 324, the National Energy Policy Act of 1989.

For further information, please contact Leslie Black, committee staff, at (202) 224-9607 or David Harwood, Senator WIRTH's office, at (202) 224-5852.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON AGING

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the public that the Senate Special Committee on Aging, in conjunction with the Subcommittee on Long-Term Care, and the Subcommittee on Housing and Consumer Interests of the House Select Committee on Aging, has scheduled a joint hearing to receive testimony on Residential Board and Care Facilities.

The hearing will take place on Thursday, March 2, 1989, beginning at 9:30 a.m. in room 628 of the Dirksen Senate Office Building in Washington, DC.

For further information, please contact Portia Mittelman, staff director of the Senate Special Committee on Aging at (202) 224-5364.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I would like to announce that the Select Committee on Indian Affairs will be holding a hearing on Friday, February 24, beginning at 9:30 a.m., in 485 Russell Senate Office Building, on the Puyallup Land Claims Settlement Act.

Those wishing additional information should contact the Select Committee on Indian Affairs at 224-2251.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON OVERSIGHT OF GOVERNMENT MANAGEMENT

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I wish to announce that the Subcommittee on Oversight of Government Management, Committee on Governmental Affairs, will hold a hearing on Oversight of DOD's Management of Inside Information in the Acquisition Process, on February 24, 1989, at 9:30 a.m., in room 342 of the Dirksen Senate Office Building.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE, NUTRITION, AND FORESTRY

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I wish to announce that the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry will hold a hearing on Thursday, March 9, 1989, at 2 p.m., in SR-332 to receive testimony from the Commodity Futures Trading Commission on exchange trading practices in the commodity futures markets.

For further information, please contact Ken Ackerman of the Committee staff at 224-2035.

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO MEET

COMMITTEE ON ARMED SERVICES

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Armed Services be authorized to meet on Wednesday, February 22, 1989, at 2 p.m. in executive session to discuss the Tower nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON BANKING, HOUSING, AND URBAN AFFAIRS

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs be allowed to meet during the session of the Senate Wednesday, February 22, 1989, at 10 a.m. to continue its oversight hearings on the problems of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON INVESTIGATIONS OF THE SELECT

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Special Committee on Investigations of the Select Committee on Indian Affairs, be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on February 22, 1989, at 10 a.m. to hold hearings pursuant to Senate Resolution 381, section 21, agreed February 26, 1988.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full committee of the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on 10 a.m., February 22, 1989, to hold hearings to consider the nomination of Adm. James D. Watkins to be the Secretary of Energy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON LABOR AND HUMAN RESOURCES

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Labor and Human Resources be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Wednesday, February 22, 1989, at 10 a.m. to conduct hearing on "Early Education and the Future of the Skilled Workforce."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE, SCIENCE, AND TRANSPORTATION

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on February 22, 1989, at 9:30 a.m. to hold a hearing on the greenhouse effect and global change, and S. 169, the National Global Change Research Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON PRIVATE RETIREMENT PLANS AND OVERSIGHT OF THE INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Private Retirement Plans and Oversight of the Internal Revenue Service of the Committee on Finance be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on February 22, 1989, at 9:30 a.m. to hold a hearing to review the General Accounting Office report, managing IRS: actions needed to assure quality service in the future.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

LITHUANIAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

● Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, February 16, 1989, marked the 738th anniversary of the creation of the Lithuanian state and the 71st anniversary of the restoration of the Independent Democratic Republic of Lithuania. This day serves to remind us not only of the independence of the Lithuanian state, but also of the continuing struggle for freedom of the Lithuanian people. Lithuanian Independence Day recognizes the war the Lithuanian people have fought for freedom and independence throughout their history.

The Lithuanian nation began in 1251 when Mindaugas was crowned King of the united Lithuanian principalities. By the 14th century, Lithuania had expanded its borders, improved its education and granted more freedoms to its people than any of its neighboring countries. However, despite this political and cultural progress, Lithuania was annexed by Russia in 1795 during the third partition of Poland. The Lithuanian people struggled painfully against the tsarist "Russification" policies of the late 19th century, and they were ultimately successful in maintaining their own language, religion, and traditions.

During World War I, Lithuania was overrun by the Germans. The German Government was later compelled to authorize the gathering of the 200-member congress which declared the independence of a democratic Lithuania on February 16, 1918. However, as soon as the German Army had pulled out of Lithuania's capital of Vilnius, the Red Army moved in to try to establish a Communist government. With the help of the Polish Army, Lithuanian fighters not only drove out the Red Army, but also secured a treaty from Russia recognizing Lithuania as an independent nation.

Lithuania flourished as a democratic state during the 1920's and 1930's, establishing equitable labor laws, achieving land reform and improving education and the arts. However, Lithuania was to suffer heavily during World War II as it again became a pawn in the struggle between the Soviet Union and Germany. Beginning in 1940, the Russian Army occupied Lithuania. When the war ended, Lithuania did not return to independence, but was forcibly incorporated into the Soviet Union.

The United States rightly denounced the Soviets' aggression and has never recognized the illegal incorporation of Lithuania or any of the other Baltic States. I strongly support this long-standing policy. The international community also stands in solidarity with the Lithuanian people, as the Soviets' forceful subjugation of the Lithuanian people violates the internationally recognized norms of human rights set out by the U.N. Charter, the Helsinki accords, and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

The Lithuanian people are represented in the United States by a legation of officials from the former independent government. The United States policy provides inspiration to the thousands of Lithuanians who fight at great risk for freedom and democracy and the over 1 million Lithuanian-Americans who share their cause. The Lithuanian diplomatic legation serves to remind the entire world of the ultimate goal of a free and independent Lithuania.

The Lithuanian people are making progress in the fight for freedom, democracy and justice. A new, more moderate Communist Party chief has initiated many reforms which are in line with the nationalist demands of the Lithuanian people. These include making the Lithuanian flag legal again and reopening the Vilnius Cathedral which had been closed by the Russians for 30 years. The Lithuanian Government recently asked West Germany for a copy of the infamous secret protocol of the 1939 German-Soviet Treaty. Lithuanians may now learn the terrible truth of how the Nazis and Stalin planned to extinguish Lithuania's freedom.

In the last year, the congress of an organization called the Lithuanian Movement for the Support of Perestroika approved a platform calling for the curtailment of Soviet rule, wide latitude in the managing of its own economy, the creation of a Lithuanian currency, permission to maintain embassies abroad and the establishment of Lithuanian as the official language. The Lithuanian people continue to fearlessly protest the Soviet Union's policies. Last year on November 18 over 10,000 people wearing black armbands took to the streets to show their support for a declaration of national sovereignty and the supremacy of Lithuanian law over Soviet control. The Washington Post reports that on Independence Day of this year, the demand for state sovereignty was approved overwhelmingly by the leaders of the 200-member council of Sajudis, a movement that has become a powerful political force in Lithuania over the past few months.

However, despite the recent reforms and apparent openness of the Gorbachev era, Lithuania is still not free. The Soviet Union has made clear that they will not withdraw from the Baltic States nor will they allow any of them the right to secede. The Lithuanian people remain under the oppressive weight of communism and Soviet hegemony.

This week I want to join in solidarity with all Americans to salute those Lithuanians and Lithuanian-Americans who continue fighting for freedom, democracy and justice. Lithuanian Independence Day serves to remind the entire world of the struggle of these courageous people and the righteousness of their cause. In the words of Lithuanians themselves would use freely if they could, I would like to say happy independence day and let freedom return to Lithuania. Linksma neprikausombes diena. Sugryski laisve lietuvoj.

Mr. President, at this time I would like to ask that the article from the February 17 edition of the Washington Post entitled "Lithuanian Mass Movement Calls for Independence," appear in the RECORD.

The article follows:

[From the Washington Post, Feb. 17, 1989]

LITHUANIAN MASS MOVEMENT CALLS FOR INDEPENDENCE

(By Michael Dobbs)

Moscow, Feb. 16.—The largest grass-roots organization in Lithuania has broken one of the last remaining political taboos in Mikhail Gorbachev's Soviet Union by pledging to work toward the "independence" and "neutrality" of the Baltic republic.

The demand for "state sovereignty" was overwhelmingly approved at a meeting last night of leaders of the 200-member council of Sajudis, a mass movement that has emerged as a powerful political force in Lithuania over the past few months. Sajudis officials said the decision was passed with only eight opposing votes and eight abstentions.

The political goals cited in the manifesto included the restoration of Lithuania's "traditional status of neutrality in a European demilitarized zone, as well as [striving for] universally accepted human and civil freedoms, from which flows the general right of Lithuania's citizens independently to choose and develop their own forms of state-existence."

Independent mass movements and fledgling political parties in other East European countries have generally refrained from endorsing neutrality because of fears that it might exceed the bounds of Kremlin tolerance. A declaration of neutrality by the Hungarian government in 1956 was followed days later by a Soviet invasion and brutal suppression of a popular uprising.

Reflecting the dramatic change in political climate among Baltic republics over the past year, hundreds of thousands of Lithuanians today celebrated their rear nation's independence day legally for the first time in nearly 50 years.

Lithuania was absorbed into the Soviet Union in 1940 as a result of a secret pact between Nazi Germany and Joseph Stalin's regime.

The Independence Day celebrations, marking Lithuania's emergence as an independent nation after World War I, were officially endorsed by the local Communist Party, which is attempting to regain popular support. Both the party and Sajudis are putting forward candidates to contest nationwide elections for a revamped Soviet legislature on March 26.

The latest challenge from Lithuania poses new political problems for Gorbachev, who has sought to keep the lid on a resurgence of nationalist feelings in the Baltic republics over the past year. In a meeting with workers' representatives in Moscow earlier this week, the Kremlin chief said that only "extremists" or "people obsessed with personal ambition" would go so far as to demand Lithuania's secession from the Soviet Union.

Although the Sajudis manifesto did not call for the republic's immediate secession from the Soviet Union, it made clear that this was its long-term goal. It also suggested that an independent Lithuania would not remain part of the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact.

"Sajudis will follow the road to legal, political, economic and cultural independence for Lithuania, to state sovereignty, without confining itself to partial achievements," the manifesto said, citing Gorbachev's speech to the United Nations in December in which he called for all nations to be allowed to exercise "freedom of choice."

In a telephone interview from the Lithuanian capital of Vilnius tonight, Sajudis President Vytautas Landsbergis acknowledged that the manifesto marked a major "step forward" for the movement that only held its inaugural congress last October. He said that Sajudis would work toward the goals of independence and neutrality through "peaceful, legal and constitutional methods."

The manifesto goes significantly further than a controversial resolution adopted by the parliament of the nearby Baltic republic of Estonia in November that declared the republic's "sovereignty" within the framework of the Soviet Union. That resolution provoked a political showdown between Estonia and central authorities in Moscow, with Gorbachev ruling that it was "invalid" and "unconstitutional."

In private, many activists of the newly formed popular fronts that have emerged in all three Baltic republics over the last year readily concede that independence is their long-term goal. But until now, they have refrained from including this aim in official documents and resolutions.

Landsbergis said he expected Sajudis to win three-quarters of the 42 seats allocated to Lithuania in the new Congress of People's Deputies, a prediction echoed by many other political analysts. This would leave the movement in a very strong position to win a majority of seats in the Lithuanian legislature when new elections in the republics are held in the fall.

"We will be a small minority in Moscow, but we will be in a strong moral position if most Lithuanians vote for us," said Landsbergis, who is also a professor of music.

Asked whether the resolution meant that an independent Lithuania would leave the Warsaw Pact, Landsbergis said Lithuanians had never been permitted to express freely their opinion about joining a military alliance. He described the call for a neutral Lithuania as "simply a continuation" of prewar tradition when the country was a buffer between Germany and the Soviet Union.

With its relatively homogeneous population, Lithuania has a more solid base of support for an independent, nationally inspired mass movement than either Estonia or Latvia. Native Lithuanians account for about 80 percent of Lithuania's population of 3.5 million, in contrast to Latvia, where Russian and other Slav immigrants are almost as numerous as native Latvians.

During the Independence Day celebrations, about 200,000 people gathered in the prewar capital of Kaunas to mark the reopening of the Liberty Monument in the city center. The last foreign minister of independent Lithuania, Guozas Urbsys, now 92, told the crowd that he hoped that the republic would one day enjoy real independence again.●

TIME AND HISTORY ON THE HILL

● Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I would like to present to you and my Senate colleagues a speech given by David McCullough at the Bicentennial Research Council on February 10, 1989. This address, titled "Time and History on the Hill," shows keen insight and awareness about the politics and politicians that shaped this great Nation. I would like to share this perceptive essay with the American public by printing it in the RECORD.

The remarks follow:

TIME AND HISTORY ON THE HILL

(By David McCullough)

Simon Willard was never a member of Congress in the usual sense. He was never elected to anything as far as I know. Simon Willard of Roxbury, Massachusetts, was a clockmaker early in the nineteenth century and he did it all by hand and eye.

"In cutting his wheel teeth," reads an old account, "He did not mark out the spaces on the blank [brass] wheel and cut the teeth to measure, but he cut, rounded up and finished the teeth as he went along, using his eye only in spacing, and always came out even . . . It is doubtful if such a feat in mechanics was ever done before, and certainly never since."

The exact date is uncertain, but about 1837, when Simon Willard was in his eighties, he made a most important clock. I will come back to that . . .

In 1863, the year of the Battle of Gettysburg, the year the bronze statue of "Freedom Triumphant" was hoisted to the top of the new Capitol dome, a young man from Augusta, Maine, a former newspaper editor, came to Washington to begin his first term in Congress. Six years later, at age 39, he was elected Speaker of the House. He became a senator, Secretary of State, and candidate for president in 1884—and all largely by force of personality, since, being from Maine, he had none of the advantages of politicians from the big industrial states.

He was James G. Blaine, the "Plumed Knight" of the Republican Party, the most exciting political figure of his day. He was of "stalwart, well-proportioned physique," we read, and, at the peak of his career, silver-bearded with large bright eyes and great personal magnetism. As the famous Mulligan letters revealed, he was also not entirely incorruptible.

Blaine's career is like to a lens on the whole Gilded Age. His nemesis here on the Hill was Roscoe Conkling of New York, and the clash of their ambitions is one of the vivid theater pieces in the history of Congress. Conkling was gorgeous. He carried a sun umbrella, wore bright bow ties, fawn-colored vests, and shiny, pointed shoes. He had built himself up with hard exercise and walked with his chest swelled out—walked, as Blaine said, with a "majestic, supereminent, overpowering turkey-gobbler strut."

Blaine's red brick mansion still stands at DuPont Circle. But for a margin of just 600 votes in New York, he, not Grover Cleveland, would have become president.

I've been thinking what a wonderful book could be written about James G. Blaine.

I think also of the possibilities in Thomas Bracket Reed or Joseph Gurney Cannon, two more Speakers of the House, who, each in his way, ran the House with an iron hand in the decades after Blaine.

"Czar" Reed stood six-foot-three and weighed nearly 300 pounds. An observer noted, "How narrow he makes the street look." Henry Cabot Lodge, Sr., who was no easy judge of ability, called him "the greatest parliamentary leader I ever saw." His wit was famous. When he first saw his portrait by John Singer Sargent, the portrait that hangs in the Speaker's Lobby, Reed remarked, "All my enemies are avenged."

Reed disliked long speeches. He thought the purpose of legislation was to accomplish something. He had his principles. Bitterly opposed to the imperialist impulses of the day, he gave up his power and resigned from Congress, rather than "go along."

And then there was Cannon—Uncle Joe Cannon from Danville, Illinois. "I have oats in my pocket and hayseed in my hair," he liked to say. It was the new twentieth century. The talk everywhere was of reform. But Uncle Joe wanted no change. He ran the Rules Committee and the Rules Committee decided which bills were considered and which weren't.

"Every thing is all right out west and around Danville," he would say. "The country don't need any legislation."

He was a tough, cigar-chewing, profane, and exceedingly shrewd old pol. And memorable. When a bill came up to add a new function to the U.S. Commission of Fish and Fisheries, making it the U.S. Commission of Fish and Fisheries and Birds, Cannon protested because he didn't like adding "and Birds" . . . "and Birds" was new and therefore unacceptable.

Uncle Joe Cannon was the first person ever on the cover of Time magazine. He was the man for whom this building was named. The insurrection that brought him down, a revolt in the House in 1910 led by George Norris, was one of the turning points of national politics in this century.

I think how fine it would be to have substantial, up-to-date biographies of Blaine, Reed, and Cannon. And the fact that there are none. The last book about Blaine appeared more than fifty years ago.

But then there are no adequate biographies of an astonishing array from both the House and the Senate. There is no adequate biography of Justin Morrill of Vermont, author of the Land Grant College Act, the Morrill Tariff, champion of the Library of Congress and the building of the Washington Monument, who served 12 years in the House, 32 years in the Senate . . . no adequate biography of Senator Burton K. Wheeler, the Montana liberal who fought to keep America out of the Second World War . . . no biography of Congressman and Senator Jimmy Byrnes, who was widely regarded as the most skillful politician of his day and judged privately by Franklin Roosevelt as the man best equipped to replace him as President.

There is no biography of Carl Hayden, who served forty-one years in the Senate, longer than anyone ever, or of Joe Robinson, the tenacious Democratic majority leader whose sudden death in 1937, in an apartment not far from here, meant defeat for Roosevelt's court-packing scheme.

We have John Garraty's life of Henry Cabot Lodge, Sr., but none of Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr. Go to the library for a good biography of Alben Barkley or Speaker Joe Martin and you won't find one. They don't exist. The only biography of Senator Arthur Vandenberg, without whom there would have been no Marshall Plan, ends in 1945, when his career was just taking off.

The twentieth century senator who has been written about most is Joe McCarthy. There are a dozen books on McCarthy. Yet there is no biography of the extraordinary senator who had the courage to first stand up to him—Margaret Chase Smith.

"I speak as a Republican," she said on the floor of the Senate. "I speak as a woman. I speak as a United States Senator. I speak as an American. I don't want to see the Republican Party ride to political victory on the four horsemen of calumny—fear, ignorance, bigotry, and smear."

We have books on people like Theodore Bilbo and Huey Long, but no real biographies of George Aiken or Frank Church.

Richard Russell of Georgia, one of the most respected and influential figures ever to serve in the Senate, used to take home old bound copies of the Congressional Record, to read in the evenings for pleasure. He loved to read the great debates and orations of the last century and would remark to his staff how strange it made him feel to realize that those who once held such sway, and so often effected the course of American life, were entirely forgotten. . . .

And no, there isn't yet a biography of Richard Russell.

You wonder how many who stream in and out of this building every day, or its Senate counterpart, the Russell Building, have any idea who Joe Cannon or Richard Russell were?

What a shame! And what an opportunity! On this bicentennial occasion, I might better say what a golden opportunity!

Important books are waiting to be written. And not only about such singular individuals.

No historian has yet taken a look at the dominance of the Democratic Party here on the Hill over the past half century, to see what that has meant to Congress and to the nation.

The Foreign Relations Committee is another major subject that has still to be done.

The struggle in the Senate over the Panama Canal treaties is an important story and time it was told, while there are so many who can talk about what went on and why. It not only changed our policy toward Panama and the Canal, but cost several prominent senators their seats.

A great book is waiting to be written about the Senate during the momentous years of the New Deal. Think of who was in the Senate—Hugo Black, Robert Wagner, Barkley, Harry Truman, Cotton Ed Smith, Huey Long, Vandenberg, old Borah, the Lion of Idaho, George Norris.

For some strange reason, there is not even a first-rate history of the Capitol, nothing comparable to William Seale's history of the White House. The Capitol grew in stages, as America grew; it is really an assembly of different buildings, representative of different times. In a great book on the Capitol, the building would become a metaphor for the story of our national life.

The plain fact is we historians have neglected Congress. Two hundred years after the creation of Congress, we have only begun to tell the story of Congress. Maybe this occasion can help inspire a change in outlook.

The material available is surpassing. The Blaine papers, for example, include hundreds of letters, diaries, scrapbooks, notebooks, speeches, telegrams, financial records, more than 7,000 items—all in the Manuscript Division of the Library of Congress, and all on microfilm.

The Jimmy Byrnes papers are at Clemson University, the Margaret Chase Smith papers at her library in Skowhegan, Maine. The Barkley papers—an immense collection—are at the Barkley Museum at Paducah, Kentucky, and at the University of Kentucky. For the New Deal years in the Senate, there are, among other collections in the Library of Congress, the exceptionally revealing papers of Hugo Black.

Thornton Wilder once said that he wrote what he did in order to discover a new book on his shelf that he would enjoy reading, or to see a new play that would engross him.

A book I would love to read would begin in Washington at the time John Quincy Adams was elected to the House of Representatives. That was in 1830. Adams was 63, his great years behind him, supposedly. As a boy of seven, standing with his mother on a distant knoll, he had watched the Battle of Bunker Hill. At fourteen he was a diplomatic secretary at the court of Russia's Catherine II, at 28, minister to The Hague. He was minister plenipotentiary to Russia at the time of Alexander I. He saw Napoleon return to Paris from Elbe. He became Secretary of State under Monroe, then Senator, then President.

But now, as no president ever had, he returned to serve in the House and was openly thrilled about it. "No election or appointment conferred upon me ever gave me so much pleasure," he wrote in his diary. And it was in the House that he had his finest hours.

Small, fragile, fearing no one, he spoke his mind and conscience without stint. He championed scientific inquiry. To no one in Congress are we so indebted for the establishment of the Smithsonian Institution. With Congressman Lincoln of Illinois and Corwin of Ohio, he cried out against the Mexican War, and for nine long years, almost alone, he battled the infamous "gag rule" imposed by southerners to prevent any discussion of petitions against slavery. Adams hated slavery, but was fighting, he said, more for the unlimited right of citizens to have their petitions to Congress heard, no matter what the subject. It was a noble fight and in the end he won. The gag rule was permanently removed.

"To withstand multitudes is the only unerring test of decisive character," he said.

Adams' diaries stand at the forefront of our political literature. They are beyond compare. His main concerns were problems brought on by what have been two great recurring themes in the history of Congress down to our own time—the phenomenal growth of the country and civil rights. But he tells us also of his morning swims in the Potomac, the books he is reading, the poetry he is writing, of friends and family, and the tragic death of his coachman in an accident by the Capitol. We meet Charles Dickens, Davey Crockett, and Congressman James Blair of South Carolina who carried a loaded pistol with him in the House. We learn that President Van Buren is "growing inordinately fat." Of Speaker of the House James K. Polk, Adams writes: "He has no wit, no literature, no point of argument, no gracefulness of delivery, no elegance of language, no philosophy, no pathos, no felicitous impromptus; nothing that can constitute an orator, but confidence, fluency, and labor."

Congressman John Quincy Adams is a reminder that heroes can come in all shapes and sizes. This is an entry from March 29, 1841:

The world, the flesh, and all the devils in hell are arrayed against any man who now in this North American Union shall dare to join the standard of Almighty God to put down the African slave trade; and what can I, upon the verge of my seventy-fourth birthday, with a shaking hand, a darkening eye, a drowsy brain, and with all my faculties dropping from me one by one, as the teeth are dropping from my head—what can I do for the cause of God and man . . . Yet my conscience presses me on; let me but die upon the breach.

And how he loved the House of Representatives:

The forms and proceedings of the house [he wrote one February] this call of the States for petitions, the colossal emblem of the Union over the Speaker's chair, this historic Muse at the clock, the echoing pillars of the hall, the tripping Mercuries who bear the resolutions and amendments between the members and the chair, the calls of ayes and noes, with the different intonations of the answers, from different voices, the gobbling manner of the clerk in reading over the names, the tone of the Speaker in announcing the vote, and the varied shades of pleasure and pain in the countenances of the members on hearing it, would form a fine subject for a descriptive poem.

The diaries were published in the 1870's in 12 volumes. That was only part of it. The complete diaries, if published, would run to thirty volumes. And they are all in the Massachusetts Historical Society.

Some nights Adams returned to his lodgings so exhausted he could barely crawl up the stairs. In the winter of 1848, at age 80, after nearly twenty years in Congress, he collapsed at his desk in the old House chamber, present-day Statuary Hall. A brass plate in the floor marks the place.

He was carried to the Speaker's office and there, two days later, he died. At the end Henry Clay in tears was holding his hand. Congressman Lincoln helped with the funeral arrangements. Senator Daniel Webster wrote the inscription for the casket.

The story of Adams' years in the House is one of the great chapters in American history, and a book that does it justice is waiting to be written.

His replacement in the House, incidentally, was Horace Mann, whose young wife back in Massachusetts saved the long letters he wrote describing in colorful detail all that was going on in Washington. Like many intellectuals of the time, Horace Mann was keen on phrenology and would occasionally visit the Senate to pursue this interest. In one letter he writes of contemplating the large head of Daniel Webster and noting all the bad bumps.

Today is an anniversary of an important event in the annals of Congress. On February 10, 1941, forty-eight years ago today, Senator Harry Truman rose in the Senate to propose the establishment of a Special Committee to Investigate the National Defense Program. It was an historic moment in the course of the Second World War, not to say a turning point in Truman's life.

He had come to Washington six years earlier, handpicked for the Senate by Boss Tom Pendergast of Kansas City whose parting words were, "Work hard, keep your mouth shut, and answer your mail." In the Senate he was befriended by the illustrious J. Hamilton Lewis of Illinois, a Senator of the old school who still wore spats and wing collars, as well as a pink toupee to mach his pink Vandyke whiskers. Lewis told him, "Harry, don't start out with an inferiority complex. For the first six months you'll wonder how the hell you got here, and after that you'll wonder how the hell the rest of us got here."

Truman was assigned one of seven seats that had to be installed in back of the back row on the Democratic side, so disproportionately large was the Democratic majority. And as he would write, he was under a cloud, because of his background. He was spoken of as the Senator from Pendergast.

But the committee he proposed at the start of his second term, what became known as the Truman Committee, changed all that and much more. "Looks like I'll get something done," he wrote to his wife, Bess.

It was one of the best-run, hardest-working, most effective committees in the history of Congress. It looked into waste and mismanagement in the construction of army camps, investigated arms production, government contracts, the stockpiling of vital materials. What it turned up was often alarming. There was too little aluminum and copper. Standard Oil of New Jersey, through agreements with the German firm of I.G. Farben, had intentionally delayed the development of synthetic rubber plants. Testifying about contracts with the Navy, one shipyard representative said that if it weren't for taxes his company could not have handled its profits with a steam shovel.

Curtiss-Wright was discovered building faulty airplane engines for delivery to combat forces. An incredible project called Canol, for Canadian Oil, was uncovered, a scheme to build an oil pipeline from Canada to Alaska. It had been launched with little thought to the realities of terrain, climate, the views of oil experts, or whether it was even necessary. The project wound up costing $134 million, all money that need never have been spent.

It was the Truman Committee, not the Bureau of Ships, that recognized the virtues in the Higgens landing craft, the famous, hinge-prowed landing craft for amphibious assault, and saw that it was put into production.

Altogether the Committee issued more than fifty reports resulting from more than 400 hearings. Amazingly, all the reports were unanimous. Amazingly, the chairman permitted no grandstanding by members, no browbeating of witnesses, and virtually no politics.

Truman understood that his efforts, if mishandled, could delay the whole defense effort. And he knew the risks he was running politically—since many of the faults and abuses uncovered might well be traced to mismanagement at the White House.

From his reading of Civil War history, he knew the damage that could be done in a time of emergency if a President was subjected to constant congressional harassment. The powerful Joint Committee on the Conduct of the War had been a constant headache for Abraham Lincoln, causing the Union effort repeated trouble and delays. Robert E. Lee once remarked that the Committee had been worth two divisions to him, a remark Truman often quoted.

In the thousands of pages of Truman Committee testimony on file at the National Archives, there are also occasional moments of inadvertent humor.

This is an example from Entry 45 of Record Group 46, the Committee's investigations of the steel industry, a collection filling 13 boxes.

It had been found that the Carnegie-Illinois Steel Company, through various forms of trickery in their record books, was supplying the Navy with substandard steel plate for ships—a practice that had gone unnoticed until a new tanker, the Schenectady, broke up and sank at Portland, Oregon. On March 23, 1943, the chief specifications manager for Carnegie-Illinois, a man named Murray Stewart, appeared before the Committee. He was being questioned by the Committee's chief council, Hugh Fulton:

FULTON. In other words—you would make up a chemical analysis which you thought would fit what the steel should have been.

STEWART. That is right.

FULTON. And how would you deal with that in that particular record book?

STEWART. In order to keep our records so that we would know when it was an incorrect heat number, we would enter it in this book in pencil.

FULTON. How are the other entries made?

STEWART. They are made in ink.

FULTON. And did you, in addition to making them in pencil, put any prefix letter in front of them?

STEWART. It was a common practice to put an "F."

FULTON. What did "F" mean?

STEWART. Fake.

FULTON. You told our investigator originally that it meant phone.

STEWART. That is right—The investigator was a stranger to me and I was sort of pressed for something to say at the moment.

Estimates were that the Truman Committee saved the country as much as $15 billion, which is probably too high a figure. But it was a very great sum in any event. The most important "power" of the Committee was its deterrent effect. Fear of public exposure by the Committee was enough in itself to cause any number of people in industry, government, and the military to do their jobs properly, thereby saving thousands of lives.

Truman loved the Senate. He had never imagined he would rise so high, and once there, never wished for anything more. It was the highest time in his life, as he often said.

In a poll of Washington correspondents, Truman was named one of the ten men in Washington who had done the most for the war effort and he was the only one on the list from either branch of Congress.

But what if Harry Truman had never become President? How many today would ever have heard of him or know what he did? Would we care? Probably not, to judge by the attention Congress has received.

Even as it is this part of his background is little known. The common conception is that he came out of the blue, the unknown vice presidential choice in 1944. I have only learned to appreciate the full importance of what he did in the Senate because I am writing a book about him. When I say we historians have neglected Congress, I am including myself.

There are, of course, splendid books about Congress. I like especially Harry McPherson's "A Political Education" and Allen Drury's "A Senate Journal," covering the years 1943 to 1945, which, to my mind, it is better even than his famous novel, "Advise and Consent." I like Alvin Josephy's "On the Hill," a good one-volume history, and the fine recent biography of Sam Rayburn by D.B. Hardeman and Donald Bacon. Now, in this bicentennial year, comes volume one of Senator Robert Byrd's monumental history of the Senate.

But compared to what has been published about presidents and the presidency, we have hardly begun. The field is wide open. The opportunity for a new generation of outstanding congressional scholars couldn't be greater.

Important work has been done in Congressional studies in recent years thanks to Congress itself—by the Senate Historical Office under Richard Baker, and the House Office of the Bicentennial under Ray Smock. The Senate biographical directory has been updated and greatly improved. The new Guide to the research collections of former members of the House is a reference of a kind never available before.

We are all of us so accustomed to seeing our history measured by the presidency that we forget the extent to which the real story of the country can be found here.

Beside Congress, the presidency seems clear and orderly. Its terms of office are nicely defined. The cast of characters is manageable in number. The protagonists take their turn one at a time.

Congress, on the other hand, rolls on like a river. Someone said you never cross the same river twice. Congress is like that—always there and always changing. Congressional terms overlap. Individuals come and go with little or no fanfare. Influences change, recede, return. The talk, the rumpus go on endlessly. The stage is always crowded and yet it's never the same crowd exactly.

And then there is all the posturing and humbug and so much that has been so overwhelmingly boring.

But let us make no mistakes. Victories have been won here, decisions of courage and vision achieved here, moments of high purpose and creativity, that are as great and inspired as any in our whole record as a people.

Congress is a representative institution. And it is as representative of our past as any institution, maybe more so.

This, as they say—this as perhaps we cannot say too often—is where the people are heard.

Asked once why he chose history for his life's work, Dumas Malone said, "I could not fathom the nature of God or the meaning of the universe. I had to settle for humanity, so I turned to history, which deals with people."

In two hundred years, 11,220 human beings have served in Congress, in the House and Senate. A large cast indeed. And while the proportions of black Americans, of women, of Hispanic and Asian Americans, and native Americans do not reflect the country at large, it is nonetheless a cast of many different faces, many voices. . . .

We need to know more about Congress because we need to know more about leadership. We need to know more about Congress because we can never know enough about human nature.

We may also pick up some ideas. It seems to me, for example, given what we know of defense spending in recent years, that this would be an excellent time to bring back the Truman Committee.

Above all, we need to know more about Congress because we are Americans. We believe in governing ourselves.

For those of us who write and research and publish history, the object should not only be more books about Congress, but better books. Our research must be more imaginative. We must go beyond surface appearances, look more closely at our subjects, see politics more in the context of American society and American culture at large. We must write better—with greater feeling for the human condition, greater empathy, remembering always that those who went before us had no more idea how it was all going to turn out than we do.

Who were those very human beings in the old bound volumes of the Congressional Record? What moved them? How were they different from us. For whom did they speak? Maybe everything really was all right around Danville. It would be interesting to know.

History, history, history. How can we know who we are or where we are heading if we don't know where we have come from?

I have decided the digital watch is a perfect symbol of much that is out of balance in our day. It tells us only what time it is now, at this instant, as if that were all anyone would wish to know, or need to know.

Which brings me back to Simon Willard.

In the years when the House of Representatives met in Statuary Hall, all deliberations were watched over by the muse of history, Clio. She is there still over the north doorway, riding the winged Car of History, as it is called, keeping note in her great book. The idea was that those who sat below would take inspiration from her. They would be reminded that they too were part of history, that their actions would face the judgment of history, that they themselves were part of a great heritage. In today's House, unfortunately, there is no such reminder. There are only the television cameras.

Clio and the Car of History are by an Italian sculptor named Carlo Franzoni of Carrara. The clock in the foreground is by Simon Willard. As I said earlier it was installed about 1837. Its inner workings, cut freehand by Simon Willard, ticked off the minutes and hours through debate over slavery, the annexation of Texas, a declaraton of war on Mexico, tariffs, postal service, the establishment of a Naval Academy, statehood for Arkansas, Michigan, Wisconsin, matters concerning immigration, the Gold Rush, statehood for California, the fateful Kansas-Nebraska Act, as well as the final hours of John Quincy Adams.

It is also a clock with two hands and an old-fashioned face, the kind that shows what time it is now . . . what time it used to be . . . and what time it will become.

And it still keeps time.

On we go . . .

RULES OF THE COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

● Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, in accordance with section 2 of Senate rule 26, I submit the Rules of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The rules of the committee follow:

RULES OF THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

GENERAL RULES

Rule 1. The Standing Rules of the Senate as supplemented by these rules, are adopted as the rules of the Committee and its Subcommittees.

MEETINGS OF THE COMMITTEE

Rule 2. (a) The Committee shall meet on the third Wednesday of each month while the Congress is in session for the purpose of conducting business, unless, for the convenience of Members, the Chairman shall set some other day for a meeting. Additional meetings may be called by the Chairman as he may deem necessary.

(b) Business meetings of any Subcommittee may be called by the Chairman of such Subcommittee, Provided, That no Subcommittee meeting or hearing other than a field hearing, shall be scheduled or held concurrently with a full Committee meeting or hearing, unless a majority of the Committee concurs in such concurrent meeting or hearing.

OPEN HEARINGS AND MEETINGS

Rule 3. (a) Hearings and business meetings of the Committee or any Subcommittee shall be open to the public except when the Committee or such Subcommittee by majority vote orders a closed hearing or meeting.

(b) A transcript shall be kept of each hearing of the Committee or any Subcommittee.

(c) A transcript shall be kept of each business meeting of the Committee or any Subcommittee unless a majority of the Committee or the Subcommittee involved agrees that some other form of permanent record is preferable.

HEARING PROCEDURE

Rule 4. (a) Public notice shall be given of the date, place, and subject matter of any hearing to be held by the Committee or any Subcommittee at least one week in advance of such hearing unless the Chairman of the full Committee or the Subcommittee involved determines that the hearing is noncontroversial or that special circumstances require expedited procedures and a majority of the Committee or the Subcommittee involved concurs. In no case shall a hearing be conducted with less than twenty-four hours notice.

(b) Each witness who is to appear before the Committee or any Subcommittee shall file with the Committee or Subcommittee, at least 24 hours in advance of the hearing, a written statement of his or her testimony in as many copies as the Chairman of the Committee or Subcommittee prescribes.

(c) Each member shall be limited to five minutes in the questioning of any witness until such time as all Members who so desire have had an opportunity to question the witness.

(d) The Chairman and ranking Minority Member or the ranking Majority and Minority Members present at the hearing may each appoint one Committee staff member to question each witness. Such staff member may question the witness only after all Members present have completed their questioning of the witness or at such other time as the Chairman and the ranking Majority and Minority Members present may agree.

BUSINESS MEETING AGENDA

Rule 5. (a) A legislative measure or subject shall be included on the agenda of the next following business meeting of the full Committee or any Subcommittee if a written request for such inclusion has been filed with the Chairman of the Committee or Subcommittee at least one week prior to such meeting. Nothing in this rule shall be construed to limit the authority of the Chairman of the Committee or Subcommittee to include legislative measures or subjects on the Committee or Subcommittee agenda in the absence of such request.

(b) The agenda for any business meeting of the Committee or any Subcommittee shall be provided to each Member and made available to the public at least three days prior to such meeting, and no new items may be added after the agenda is so published except by the approval of a majority of the Members of the Committee or Subcommittee. The Staff Director shall promptly notify absent Members of any action taken by the Committee or any Subcommittee on matters not included on the published agenda.

QUORUMS

Rule 6. (a) Except as provided in subsections (b), (c), and (d), seven Members shall constitute a quorum for the conduct of business of the Committee.

(b) No measure or matter shall be ordered reported from the Committee unless ten Members of the Committee are actually present at the time such action is taken.

(c) Except as provided in subsection (d), one-third of the Subcommittee Members shall constitute a quorum for the conduct of business of any Subcommittee.

(d) One Member shall constitute a quorum for the purpose of conducting a hearing or taking testimony on any measure or matter before the Committee or any Subcommittee.

VOTING

Rule 7. (a) A rollcall of the Members shall be taken upon the request on any Member. Any Member who does not vote on any rollcall at the time the roll is called, may vote (in person or by proxy) on that rollcall at any later time during the same business meeting.

(b) Proxy voting shall be permitted on all matters, except that proxies may not be counted for the purpose of determining the presence of a quorum. Unless further limited, a proxy shall be exercised only upon the date for which it is given and upon the items published in the agenda for that date.

(c) Each Committee report shall set forth the vote on the motion to report the measure or matter involved. Unless the Committee directs otherwise, the report will not set out any votes on amendments offered during Committee consideration. Any Member who did not vote on any rollcall shall have the opportunity to have his position recorded in the appropriate Committee record or Committee report.

(d) The Committee vote to report a measure to the Senate shall also authorize the staff of the Committee to make necessary technical and clerical corrections in the measure.

SUBCOMMITTEES

Rule 8. (a) The number of Members assigned to each Subcommittee and the division between Majority and Minority Members shall be fixed by the Chairman in consultation with the ranking Minority Member.

(b) Assignment of Members to Subcommittees shall, insofar as possible, reflect the preferences of the Members. No Member will receive assignment to a second Subcommittee until, in order of seniority, all Members of the Committee have chosen assignments to one Subcommittee, and no Member shall receive assignment to a third Subcommittee until, in order of seniority, all Members have chosen assignments to two Subcommittees.

(c) Any Member of the Committee may sit with any Subcommittee during its hearings and business meetings but shall not have the authority to vote on any matters before the Subcommittee unless he is a Member of such Subcommittee.

SWORN TESTIMONY AND FINANCIAL STATEMENTS

Rule 9. Witnesses in Committee or Subcommittee hearings may be required to give testimony under oath whenever the Chairman or ranking Minority Member of the Committee or Subcommittee deems such to be necessary. At any hearing to confirm a Presidential nomination, the testimony of the nominee and at the request of any Member, any other witness shall be under oath. Every nominee shall submit a statement of his financial interests, including those of his spouse, his minor children, and other members of his immediate household, on a form approved by the Committee, which shall be sworn to by the nominee as to its completeness and accuracy. A statement of every nominee's financial interest shall be made public on a form approved by the Committee, unless the Committee in executive session determines that special circumstances require a full or partial exception to this rule. Members of the Committee are urged to make public a statement of their financial interests in the form required in the case of Presidential nominees under this rule.

CONFIDENTIAL TESTIMONY

Rule 10. No confidential testimony taken by or confidential material presented to the Committee or any Subcommittee, or any report of the proceedings of a closed Committee or Subcommittee hearing or business meeting, shall be made public, in whole or in part or by way of summary, unless authorized by a majority of the Members of the Committee at a business meeting called for the purpose of making such a determination.

DEFAMATORY STATEMENTS

Rule 11. Any person whose name is mentioned or who is specifically identified in, or who believes that testimony or other evidence presented at, an open Committee or Subcommittee hearing tends to defame him or otherwise adversely affect his reputation may file with the Committee for its consideration and action a sworn statement of facts relevant to such testimony or evidence.

BROADCASTING OF HEARINGS OR MEETINGS

Rule 12. Any meeting or hearing by the Committee or any Subcommittee which is open to the public may be covered in whole or in part by television broadcast, radio broadcast, or still photography. Photographers and reporters using mechanical recording, filming, or broadcasting devices shall position their equipment so as not to interfere with the seating, vision, and hearing of Members and staff on the dais or with the orderly process of the meeting or hearing.

AMENDING THE RULES

Rule 13. These rules may be amended only by vote of a majority of all the Members of the Committee in a business meeting of the Committee: Provided, That no vote may be taken on any proposed amendment unless such amendment is reproduced in full in the Committee agenda for such meeting at least three days in advance of such meeting.

FULL COMMITTEE ISSUES

Jurisdiction of the Full Committee includes oversight and legislative responsibilities for strategic petroleum reserves; intergovernmental relations; Outer Continental Shelf leasing; investigation and oversight; international energy affairs; global climate change; natural gas pricing and regulation; utility policy; nuclear waste and insurance programs; territorial affairs including Commonwealths; Free Associated States; and Antarctica. [In addition, other issues are retained in the Full Committee on an ad hoc basis. Generally, these are issues which (1) require extremely expeditious handling or (2) substantially overlap two or more subcommittee jurisdictions, or (3) are of exceptional national significance in which all Members wish to participate fully.]

AIRCRAFT REPAIR

● Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I rise today to offer my support for S. 344, a bill designed to maintain high standards of airline safety and save thousands of American jobs. I would like to commend my colleague Senator NICKLES, for introducing this important legislation.

Mr. President, I support S. 344 for three compelling reasons. At a time when many American jobs are being transferred overseas, it is imperative that we do everything we can to encourage American companies to keep American jobs on American soil. It is bad public policy for the Federal Aviation Administration, after encouraging U.S. airlines to create the best aircraft maintenance facilities in the world, to go out and issue a rule that undermines these very facilities. Labor organizations and leaders in the airline industry agree; the FAA's new rules governing foreign repair stations are injurious to our own airline industry.

Mr. President, this legislation is not only about saving American jobs. The safety of the skies is also an issue. This bill will ensure that U.S. planes are maintained by the best equipped and most qualified aircraft mechanics in the world—our own. Given the awesome logistical problems presented by adding over 200 repair stations worldwide, I do not believe it is possible for the FAA to guarantee that all repairs performed at foreign repair stations are of the same quality as those performed on American soil. That is a risk we cannot afford to take.

Finally, Mr. President, I must mention a matter that makes this legislation all the more pressing: the specter of international terrorism. With every U.S. plane that is maintained overseas comes an increase in the potential for sabotage. In an age of sophisticated destruction, it is imperative that we maintain the tightest possible control over the personnel servicing U.S. aircraft.

Mr. President, S. 344 is a balanced bill that represents a logical approach to the changing world of aviation. For the sake of American jobs, our airline industry, and public safety, I urge swift action on this much needed measure.●

RULES OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON INTELLIGENCE

● Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, paragraph 2 of Senate rule XXVI requires that, not later than March 1 of each year, the rules of each committee be published in the RECORD.

In compliance with this provision, I ask that the rules of the Select Committee on Intelligence be printed in the RECORD.

The rules follow:

RULES OF PROCEDURE

RULE 1. CONVENING OF MEETINGS

1.1. The regular meeting day of the Select Committee on Intelligence for the transaction of Committee business shall be every other Wednesday of each month, unless otherwise directed by the Chairman.

1.2. The Chairman shall have authority, upon proper notice, to call such additional meetings of the Committee as he may deem necessary and may delegate such authority to any other member of the Committee.

1.3. A special meeting of the Committee may be called at any time upon the written request of five or more members of the Committee filed with the Clerk of the Committee.

1.4. In the case of any meeting of the Committee, other than a regularly scheduled meeting, the Clerk of the Committee shall notify every member of the Committee of the time and place of the meeting and shall give reasonable notice which, except in extraordinary circumstances, shall be at least 24 hours in advance of any meeting held in Washington, D.C. and at least 48 hours in the case of any meeting held outside Washington, D.C.

1.5. If five members of the Committee have made a request in writing to the Chairman to call a meeting of the Committee, and the Chairman fails to call such a meeting within seven calendar days thereafter, including the day on which the written notice is submitted, these members may call a meeting by filing a written notice with the Clerk of the Committee who shall promptly notify each member of the Committee in writing of the date and time of the meeting.

RULE 2. MEETING PROCEDURES

2.1. Meetings of the Committee shall be open to the public except as provided in S. Res. 9, 94th Congress, 1st Session.

2.2. It shall be the duty of the Staff Director to keep or cause to be kept a record of all Committee proceedings.

2.3. The Chairman of the Committee, or if the Chairman is not present the Vice Chairman, shall preside over all meetings of the Committee. In the absence of the Chairman and the Vice Chairman at any meeting the ranking majority member, or if no majority member is present the ranking minority member present shall preside.

2.4. Except as otherwise provided in these Rules, decisions of the Committee shall be by majority vote of the members present and voting. A quorum for the transaction of Committee business, including the conduct of executive sessions, shall consist of five committee members, except that for the purpose of hearing witnesses, taking sworn testimony, and receiving evidence under oath, a quorum may consist of one Senator.

2.5. A vote by any member of the Committee with respect to any measure or matter being considered by the Committee may be cast by proxy if the proxy authorization (1) is in writing; (2) designates the member of the Committee who is to exercise the proxy; and (3) is limited to a specific measure or matter and any amendments pertaining thereto. Proxies shall not be considered for the establishment of a quorum.

2.6. Whenever the Committee by roll call vote reports any measure or matter, the report of the Committee upon such measure or matter shall include a tabulation of the votes cast in favor of and the votes cast in opposition to such measure or matter by each member of the Committee.

RULE 3. SUBCOMMITTEES

Creation of subcommittees shall be by majority vote of the Committee. Subcommittees shall deal with such legislation and oversight of programs and policies as the Committee may direct. The subcommittees shall be governed by the Rules of the Committee and by such other rules they may adopt which are consistent with the Rules of the Committee.

RULE 4. REPORTING OF MEASURES OR RECOMMENDATIONS

4.1. No measures or recommendations shall be reported, favorably or unfavorably, from the Committee unless a majority of the Committee is actually present and a majority concur.

4.2. In any case in which the Committee is unable to reach a unanimous decision, separate views or reports may be presented by any member or members of the Committee.

4.3. A member of the Committee who gives notice of his intention to file supplemental, minority, or additional views at the time of final Committee approval of a measure or matter, shall be entitled to not less than three working days in which to file such views, in writing with the Clerk of the Committee. Such views shall then be included in the Committee report and printed in the same volume, as a part thereof, and their inclusion shall be noted on the cover of the report.

4.4. Routine, non-legislative actions required of the Committee may be taken in accordance with procedures that have been approved by the Committee pursuant to these Committee Rules.

RULE 5. NOMINATIONS

5.1 Unless otherwise ordered by the Committee, nominations referred to the Committee shall be held for at least 14 days before being voted on by the Committee.

5.2 Each member of the Committee shall be promptly furnished a copy of all nominations referred to the Committee.

5.3 Nominees who are invited to appear before the Committee shall be heard in public session, except as provided in Rule 2.1.

5.4 No confirmation hearing shall be held sooner than seven days after receipt of the background and financial disclosure statement unless the time limit is waived by a majority vote of the Committee.

5.5 The Committee vote on the confirmation shall not be sooner than 48 hours after the Committee has received transcripts of the confirmation hearing unless the time limit is waived by unanimous consent of the Committee.

5.6 No nomination shall be reported to the Senate unless the nominee has filed a background and financial disclosure statement with the Committee.

RULE 6. INVESTIGATIONS

No investigation shall be initiated by the Committee unless at least five members of the Committee have specifically requested the Chairman or the Vice Chairman to authorize such an investigation. Authorized investigations may be conducted by members of the Committee and/or designated Committee staff members.

RULE 7. SUBPENAS

Subpenas authorized by the Committee for the attendance of witnesses or the production of memoranda, documents, records or any other material may be issued by the Chairman, the Vice Chairman, or any member of the Committee designated by the Chairman, and may be served by any person designated by the Chairman, Vice Chairman or member issuing the subpenas. Each subpena shall have attached thereto a copy of S. Res. 400, 94th Congress, 2nd Session and a copy of these rules.

RULE 8. PROCEDURES RELATED TO THE TAKING OF TESTIMONY

8.1 Notice.—Witnesses required to appear before the Committee shall be given reasonable notice and all witnesses shall be furnished a copy of these Rules.

8.2 Oath or Affirmation.—Testimony of witnesses shall be given under oath or affirmation which may be administered by any member of the Committee.

8.3 Interrogation.—Committee interrogation shall be conducted by members of the Committee and such Committee staff as are authorized by the Chairman, Vice Chairman, or the presiding member.

8.4 Counsel for the Witness.—(a) Any witness may be accompanied by counsel. A witness who is unable to obtain counsel may inform the Committee of such fact. If the witness informs the Committee of this fact at least 24 hours prior to his or her appearance before the Committee, the Committee shall then endeavor to obtain voluntary counsel for the witness. Failure to obtain such counsel will not excuse the witness from appearing and testifying.

(b) Counsel shall conduct themselves in an ethical and professional manner. Failure to do so shall, upon a finding to that effect by a majority of the members present, subject such counsel to disciplinary action which may include warning, censure, removal, or a recommendation of contempt proceedings.

(c) There shall be no direct or cross-examination by counsel. However, counsel may submit in writing any question he wishes propounded to his client or to any other witness and may, at the conclusion of his client's testimony, suggest the presentation of other evidence or the calling of other witnesses. The Committee may use such questions and dispose of such suggestions as it deems appropriate.

8.5 Statements by Witnesses.—A witness may make a statement, which shall be brief and relevant, at the beginning and conclusion of his or her testimony. Such statements shall not exceed a reasonable period of time as determined by the Chairman, or other presiding members. Any witness desiring to make a prepared or written statement for the record of the proceedings shall file a copy with the Clerk of the Committee, and insofar as practicable and consistent with the notice given, shall do so at least 72 hours in advance of his or her appearance before the Committee.

8.6 Objections and Rulings.—Any objection raised by a witness or counsel shall be ruled upon by the Chairman or other presiding member, and such ruling shall be the ruling of the Committee unless a majority of the Committee present overrules the ruling of the chair.

8.7 Inspection and Correction.—All witnesses testifying before the Committee shall be given a reasonable opportunity to inspect, in the office of the Committee, the transcript of their testimony to determine whether such testimony was correctly transcribed. The witness may be accompanied by counsel. Any corrections the witness desires to make in the transcript shall be submitted in writing to the Committee within five days from the date when the transcript was made available to the witness. Corrections shall be limited to grammar and minor editing, and may not be made to change the substance of the testimony. Any questions arising with respect to such corrections shall be decided by the Chairman. Upon request, those parts of testimony given by a witness in executive session which are subsequently quoted or made part of a public record shall be made available to that witness at his or her expense.

8.8 Requests to Testify.—The Committee will consider requests to testify on any matter or measure pending before the Committee. A person who believes that testimony or other evidence presented at a public hearing, or any comment made by a Committee member or a member of the Committee staff may tend to affect adversely his or her reputation, may request to appear personally before the Committee to testify on his or her own behalf, or may file a sworn statement of facts relevant to the testimony, evidence, or comment, or may submit to the Chairman proposed questions in writing for the cross-examination of other witnesses. The Committee shall take such action as it deems appropriate.

8.9 Contempt Procedures.—No recommendation that a person be cited for contempt of Congress shall be forwarded to the Senate unless and until the Committee has, upon notice to all its members, met and considered the alleged contempt, afforded the person an opportunity to state in writing or in person why he or she should not be held in contempt, and agreed, by majority vote of the Committee to forward such recommendation to the Senate.

8.10 Release of Name of Witness.—Unless authorized by the Chairman, the name of any witness scheduled to be heard by the Committee shall not be released prior to, or after, his or her appearance before the Committee.

RULE 9. PROCEDURES FOR HANDLING CLASSIFIED OR SENSITIVE MATERIAL

9.1 Committee staff offices shall operate under strict precautions. At least one security guard shall be on duty at all times by the entrance to control entry. Before entering the office all persons shall identify themselves.

9.2 Sensitive or classified documents and material shall be segregated in a secure storage area. They may be examined only at secure reading facilities. Copying, duplicating, or removal from the Committee offices of such documents and other materials is prohibited except as is necessary for use in, or preparation for, interviews or Committee meetings, including the taking of testimony, and in conformity with Section 10.3 hereof. All documents or materials removed from the Committee offices for such authorized purposes must be returned to the Committee's secure storage area for overnight storage.

9.3 Each member of the Committee shall at all times have access to all papers and other material received from any source. The Staff Director shall be responsible for the maintenance, under appropriate security procedures, of a registry which will number and identify all classified papers and other classified materials in the possession of the Committee, and such registry shall be available to any member of the Committee.

9.4 Whenever the Select Committee on Intelligence makes classified material available to any other Committee of the Senate or to any member of the Senate not a member of the Committee, the Clerk of the Committee shall be notified. The Clerk of the Committee shall maintain a written record identifying the particular information transmitted and the Committee or members of the Senate receiving such information.

9.5 Access to classified information supplied to the Committee shall be limited to those Committee staff members with appropriate security clearance and a need-to-know, as determined by the Committee, and, under the Committee's direction, the Staff Director and Minority Staff Director.

9.6 No member of the Committee or of the Committee staff shall disclose, in whole or in part or by way of summary, to any person not a member of the Committee or the Committee staff for any purpose or in connection with any proceeding, judicial or otherwise, any testimony given before the Committee in executive session including the name of any witness who appeared or was called to appear before the Committee in executive session, or the contents of any papers or other materials or other information received by the Committee except as authorized by the Committee in accordance with Section 8 of Senate Resolution 400 of the 94th Congress and the provisions of these rules, or in the event of the termination of the Committee, in such a manner as may be determined by the Senate.

9.7 Before the Committee makes any decision regarding the disposition of any testimony, papers, or other materials presented to it, the Committee members shall have a reasonable opportunity to examine all pertinent testimony, papers, and other materials that have been obtained by the members of the Committee or the Committee staff.

RULE 10. STAFF

10.1 For purposes of these rules, Committee staff includes employees of the Committee, employees of the Members of the Committee assigned to the Committee, consultants to the Committee, or any other person engaged by contract or otherwise to perform services for or at the request of the Committee. To the maximum extent practicable, the Committee shall rely on its full-time employees to perform all staff functions. No individual may be retained as staff of the Committee or to perform services for the Committee unless that individual holds appropriate security clearances.

10.2 The appointment of Committee staff shall be confirmed by a majority vote of the Committee. After confirmation, the Chairman shall certify Committee staff appointments to the Financial Clerk of the Senate in writing. No Committee staff shall be given access to any classified information or regular access to the Committee offices, until such Committee staff has received an appropriate security clearance as described in Section 6 of Senate Resolution 400 of the 94th Congress.

10.3 The Committee staff works for the Committee as a whole, under the general supervision of the Chairman and Vice Chairman of the Committee. Except as otherwise provided by the Committee, the duties of Committee staff shall be performed, and Committee staff personnel affairs and day-to-day operations, including security and control of classified documents and material, shall be administered under the direct supervision and control of the Staff Director. The Minority Staff Director and the Minority Counsel shall be kept fully informed regarding all matters and shall have access to all material in the files of the Committee.

10.4 The Committee staff shall assist the minority as fully as the majority in the expression of minority views, including assistance in the preparation and filing of additional, separate and minority views, to the end that all points of view may be fully considered by the Committee and the Senate.

10.5 The members of the Committee staff shall not discuss either the substance or procedure of the work of the Committee with any person not a member of the Committee or the Committee staff for any purpose or in connection with any proceeding, judicial or otherwise, either during their tenure as a member of the Committee staff at any time thereafter except as directed by the Committee in accordance with Section 8 of S. Res. 400 of the 94th Congress and the provisions of these rules, or in the event of the termination of the Committee, in such a manner as may be determined by the Senate.

10.6 No member of the Committee staff shall be employed by the Committee unless and until such a member of the Committee staff agrees in writing, as a condition of employment to abide by the conditions of the nondisclosure agreement promulgated by the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, pursuant to Section 6 of S. Res. 400 of the 94th Congress, 2d Session, and to abide by the Committee's code of conduct.

10.7 No member of the Committee staff shall be employed by the Committee unless and until such a member of the Committee staff agrees in writing, as a condition of employment, to notify the Committee or in the event of the Committee's termination the Senate of any request for his or her testimony, either during his tenure as a member of the Committee staff or at any time thereafter with respect to information which came into his or her possession by virtue of his or her position as a member of the Committee staff. Such information shall not be disclosed in response to such requests except as directed by the Committee in accordance with Section 8 of S. Res. 400 of the 94th Congress and the provisions of these rules, or in the event of the termination of the Committee, in such manner as may be determined by the Senate.

10.8 The Committee shall immediately consider action to be taken in the case of any member of the Committee staff who fails to conform to any of these Rules. Such disciplinary action may include, but shall not be limited to, immediate dismissal from the Committee staff.

RULE 11. PREPARATION FOR COMMITTEE MEETINGS

11.1 Under direction of the Chairman and the Vice Chairman, designated Committee staff members shall brief members of the Committee at a time sufficiently prior to any Committee meeting to assist the Committee members in preparation for such meeting and to determine any matter which the Committee member might wish considered during the meeting. Such briefing shall, at the request of a member, include a list of all pertinent papers and other materials that have been obtained by the Committee that bear on matters to be considered at the meeting.

11.2 The Staff Director shall recommend to the Chairman and the Vice Chairman the testimony, papers, and other materials to be presented to the Committee at any meeting. The determination whether such testimony, papers, and other materials shall be presented in open or executive session shall be made pursuant to the Rules of the Senate and Rules of the Committee.

RULE 12. LEGISLATIVE CALENDAR

12.1 The Clerk of the Committee shall maintain a printed calendar for the information of each Committee member showing the measures introduced and referred to the Committee and the status of such measures; nominations referred to the Committee and their status; and such other matters as the Committee determines shall be included. The Calendar shall be revised from time to time to show pertinent changes. A copy of each such revision shall be furnished to each member of the Committee.

12.2 Unless otherwise ordered, measures referred to the Committee shall be referred by the Clerk of the Committee to the appropriate department or agency of the Government for reports thereon.

RULE 13. COMMITTEE TRAVEL

13.1 No member of the Committee or Committee Staff shall travel abroad on Committee business unless specifically authorized by the Chairman and Vice Chairman. Requests for authorization of such travel shall state the purpose and extent of the trip. A full report shall be filed with the Committee when travel is completed.

13.2 When the Chairman and the Vice Chairman approve the foreign travel of a member of the Committee staff not accompanying a member of the Committee, all members of the Committee are to be advised, prior to the commencement of such travel, of its extent, nature and purpose. The report referred to in Rule 13.1 shall be furnished to all members of the Committee and shall not be otherwise disseminated without the express authorization of the Committee pursuant to the Rules of the Committee.

13.3 No member of the Committee staff shall travel within this country on Committee business unless specifically authorized by the Staff Director as directed by the Committee.

RULE 14. CHANGES IN RULES

These Rules may be modified, amended, or repealed by the Committee, provided that a notice in writing of the proposed change has been given to each member at least 48 hours prior to the meeting at which action thereon is to be taken.●

UNITED STATES SHOULD AID NICARAGUA TOO

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I was pleased and heartened by this Nation's response to the difficulties in Armenia following the earthquake there.

I had the opportunity to ask top officials in both the Defense Department and the State Department for their assistance on some specific problems, and both Departments gave their quick and full support.

We responded in a humanitarian way, despite our political difficulties with the Soviet Union.

But when Nicaragua had the most devastating hurricane in that small nation's history, unfortunately, our response was not the same.

Recently, Bishop Herbert W. Chilstrom, the presiding bishop of the newly merged Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, the largest body of Lutherans, had an editorial piece in the Chicago Tribune urging response to the needs in Nicaragua.

I applaud his sensitive and compassionate statement. My belief is, as we respond to human needs, some of the political difficulties between nations diminish. There is an abundance of historical evidence of that reality.

I ask to insert Bishop Chilstrom's statement in the RECORD at this point. And I urge my colleagues to read it.

The article follows:

[From the Chicago Tribune, Dec. 30, 1988]

A TIME TO BUILD UP: THE UNITED STATES SHOULD AID NICARAGUANS, TOO

(By Herbert W. Chilstrom)

"For everthing there is a season . . . a time to bring down and a time to build up."—Ecclesiastes 3.

The holidays are a time for peace, giving and forgiving. In church and synagogue we hear reminders that the effort to bring order and stability to our world is costly. It is a time for looking again at our assumptions, for changing our outlook, for taking action to bring reconciliation in all of our relationships—personal, family, national and international.

This year the holidays highlight dramatic developments on the world scene. We rejoice during the closing days of the Reagan administration in progress toward peace and reconciliation in a number of the world's trouble spots, such as Afghanistan, the Middle East and Namibia/Angola. In the midst of actions of revenge and terrorism, we celebrate these advances. Along with the easing of superpower tensions which they reflect, they make our fragile planet seem a more human place.

Celebrating our common humanity is marred by our government's refusal to offer emergency assistance to Nicaragua following the devastating hurricane of Oct. 22, the worst national disaster ever to strike that small nation. The political motivation underlying this decision is apparent in that the Reagan administration wasted no time in aiding neighboring Costa Rica, far less seriously affected by the same storm. Appeals from members of Congress and private relief groups that the decision be reversed have been turned down.

The administration expresses doubts that the Nicaraguan government could be trusted with U.S. aid, or would accept it if offered. Initial statements by Nicaraguan officials did create confusion about whether U.S. aid would be welcome, and earlier U.S. assistance with a heavily political agenda was rejected. Nicaraguan officials have since indicated, however, that they would welcome genuine relief aid from the U.S. government. The stumbling block appears to be the administration's unwillingness to assist people living under a government it views as hostile to U.S interests.

During the 1984-85 famine in Ethiopia, the Reagan administration acknowledged that those in urgent need of humanitarian assistance should not be held hostage to political agendas. "A hungry child knows no politics," the President stated in explaining why U.S. aid was making its way to people in a Marxist nation. U.S. leadership in the international famine relief effort became a major political plus, strengthening the association of our nation with humane values.

The U.S. response to the Nicaraguan disaster contains a major irony. The denial of humanitarian aid, questionable in itself, seems doubly dubious now that the U.S. is providing earthquake aid to the Soviet Union. Fortunately, political differences were not allowed to impede humanitarian action as the U.S. government moved with dispatch to provide almost $1 million in emergency assistance to Armenian earthquake victims, the first such U.S. aid accepted by the Soviet Union since World War II.

Last fall, an invitation from Bishop Medardo Gomez, head of the Lutheran Church in El Salvador, gave me an opportunity to experience firsthand the human situation in that country and in neighboring Nicaragua. I was overwhelmed by what I encountered. Life in Nicaragua, after seven years of civil strife, is harsh. But there is an incredible will on the part of people to put together a society that works. Before the hurricane many people lacked the bare essentials: food, clothing, housing, medical care. The situation has worsened in the wake of the hurricane. I was humbled to learn that in the midst of this deprivation Nicaraguans are donating their blood to help the Armenian earthquake victims.

It is not too late for the United States to help Nicaraguans affected by the hurricane. Aid should be made available in amounts proportionate to the need. Given the politicalization of U.S. aid to Central America during the decade, Nicaraguan hurricane relief should be channeled through respected and impartial international and private agencies.

Aid should be provided promptly. The longer aid is delayed, the greater the need will be for reconstruction rather than emergency assistance. Reconstruction aid is less possible under the restrictions of current law. If the Reagan administration does not come forward with such aid, the Bush administration should make it an early action item.

The time is ripe to initiate a new era of reconciliation and peaceful dialogue with our neighbors to the south. As we have normalized relationships with socialist governments in other parts of the world, we can now do the same with nations in our own hemisphere.

The holidays remind us of the need for magnanimity rather than mean-spiritedness in our dealings with others. The humanitarian assistance provided by the U.S. government to people in Armenia and Ethiopia better reflects fundamental American values than the denial of such aid to people in Nicaragua. It is time for us to reach out to people in ways which affirm our common humanity and common future with all the world's people.●

LITHUANIAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

● Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, February 16, 1989, marked the 71st anniversary of the Declaration of Independence of Lithuania.

June 14, 1989, will mark the 49th anniversary of the date on which the Soviets, acting on the Molotov-Ribbentrop Pact and in collusion with Nazi Germany, began their occupation of the then-sovereign state of Lithuania and the deportation of thousands of Lithuanian citizens to Siberia, few of which ever returned.

The people of Lithuania and their relatives worldwide, many of whom reside in my home State of Illinois, have a praiseworthy record of peacefully resisting Soviet occupation of their land, deportation of their peoples and Russification of their culture.

Recently, Roman Catholic Mass was allowed to be openly celebrated for the first time in more than 40 years in Vilnius, Lithuania, in what is viewed as an improvement in church-state relations there. Thousands worshipped at the cathedral.

Last week, the Moscow Government declared Lithuanian Independence Day to be an officially approved legal holiday in Lithuania and it allowed peaceful demonstrations to take place. More than 200,000 participated.

At first glance, these actions by the U.S.S.R. prompted by the mood of glasnost, would seem significant. Upon closer inspection, however, it appears that little perestroika, or real, meaningful change has taken place. Lithuania cannot set its own self-determined course. General Secretary Gorbachev was quoted in Pravda as saying that those who desire Lithuania's cultural, political, economic, and legal secession from the Soviet Union are to be regarded as extremists pursuing an unconstitutional agenda.

In addition, the Lithuanian reform movement, Sajudis, had invited 50 foreign guests to attend a series of cultural and political events in Lithuania for Independence Day. The Soviet Union refused to grant visas to eight Americans, including four Chicagoans, but it did grant them to invitees of other Western nations. This action by Moscow to disallow participation in the commemoration day events in Lithuania violates the spirit of the agreed to Vienna Concluding Document on Human Rights of 1986-89, which provides for the contact between members of national minorities who reside both within and outside of the Soviet Union. It is my hope that this action by Moscow will not set a precedent for Western nondiplomats who may wish to travel to Moscow for the 1991 Conference on Human Rights. This 1991 Conference was also agreed to at the Vienna Conference. Also, the demands for more autonomy by Sajudis of Lithuania and the popular fronts of Estonia and Latvia should not impede full participation in the Conference by westerners.

I am completely committed to freedom, independence, and self-determination for Lithuania and the Baltic States. We must never forget the Lithuanian struggle. For, when we support the people of Lithuania, we support the pursuance of freedom and liberty in the United States and everywhere. And when we continue our support of Lithuania, we know that one day freedom will come to Lithuania. Tegyvuoja Laisvoji Lietuva! (May Lithuania be free!)●

RAOUL WALLENBERG

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, for many years I have been deeply moved by the story of Raoul Wallenberg, a Swedish national and honorary American citizen who disappeared in Budapest during the closing months of World War II. Wallenberg was sent to Hungary at the request of American representatives in late 1944 for the seemingly impossible task of saving the lives of as many Hungarian Jews as possible from the Nazi death camps.

Doing the incredible in a nightmarish situation, Wallenberg was able to save literally thousands of lives by providing the Jews of Hungary with the protection of the Swedish flag and Swedish documents. All this was done against the confusion and anarchy of the German retreat from central Europe and the Red Army's advance.

In January 1945, Wallenberg disappeared after going to meet the Soviets. He has not been heard from since, although there have been a number of reports over many years that he continued to be alive in Soviet captivity. Although the Soviets have long claimed that he died in 1947, they have never offered even the slightest supporting evidence for this assertion. His fate remains an agonizingly unsolved question left over from one of the most tragic events in history, the destruction of Europe's Jews.

Raoul Wallenberg was a true hero. He became committed while others stood aside. He saw evil and resolved to do good. There is a Jewish saying that to save one life is to save the entire world. Raoul Wallenberg saved many worlds.

Mr. President, to honor Raoul Wallenberg, keep the message of his life alive, and once again ask that the Soviet Government finally reveal the complete story of his fate, I ask that the article "Story With No End," by A.M. Rosenthal which appeared in the New York Times on November 25, 1988 be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

[From the New York Times, Nov. 25, 1988]

STORY WITH NO END

(By A.M. Rosenthal)

The other day I mentioned to a friend, a journalist, that I was going to take part in a meeting in New York about Raoul Wallenberg. He looked at me in astonishment.

"Wallenberg? The man has been missing for what, 40 years, more—ever since the end of World war II. Nobody lives that long in a Russian prison! What is there to talk about anymore?"

I suppose I looked as astonished as he. I told him that the Wallenberg story kept popping up in my mind because one story or another in the news reminded me of him. We agreed that people have different interests.

That night at the meeting of the Raoul Wallenberg Committee of the United States there were lawyers and bankers and teachers, writers, some men from Wall Street, doctors, retailers, clergymen, about 150 people in all, including a member of Congress and a diplomat representing Carl XVI Gustaf, the King of Sweden.

There were New Yorkers, and men and women from Colorado, Idaho, California and Michigan who belonged to the American group, one of 13 Wallenberg committees active around the world.

The same day there was a story on the front page of every newspaper that called the name of Wallenberg into the minds of thousands of Americans who read it. The story said that Mikhail Gorbachev would visit the United States in December.

In 1944, Raoul Wallenberg a young Swede of 32, was asked by American representatives to go to Budapest, there to risk his life every day by trying to snatch Hungarian Jews from the Nazis. German soldiers and Hungarian Fascists were rounding them up to send to slaughter camps.

Wallenberg came from a good family and had a fine education, but there was nothing about him that spoke of the man he was to become in Budapest—a man who by force of his own will did rescue thousands of Jews.

He used only diplomatic status, a little money contributed by American Jews, and a stunningly indomitable will. He hid Jews in houses from which he hung Swedish flags. He marched into knots of Nazi kidnappers crying, "Ich Bin Wallenberg," as if that would make them fall back. Sometimes it did.

Hundreds of thousands of Hungarian Jews were murdered by the Germans. Wallenberg saved thousands.

To them and to their sons and daughters, and to millions of people around the world for whom the Holocaust is eternal, Wallenberg is an almost mystical reminder of what one decent, brave person can do, just one.

In January 1945, the Russians entered Budapest. Wallenberg went to meet them and disappeared. For years, the Russians said they had no idea where he was.

In 1957, Andrei A. Gromyko, then a deputy foreign minister and later President of the Soviet Union, said yes, Wallenberg had been imprisoned but had died in a Soviet jail in 1947 and that there were no documents or witnesses remaining. From that day to this the Soviet Government has added no further information.

So for three decades, no real news. But the Wallenberg movement is as alive as ever, for two reasons. One is hope. Nobody wants to say it is gone. There are many who cling hard to the belief he is alive and meticulously try to track down reports that he has been seen in one Soviet prison or another.

The other, far stronger, is the determination not to do to Wallenberg what he refused to do to the Jews of Hungary—turn away.

For the people in every part of the world, Wallenberg becomes part of every story that has to do with brave men and women willing to sacrifice life or liberty for others.

Andrei Sakharov visits the United States and his very presence somehow freshens the name of Wallenberg and the search.

The United States Senate honors a Polish Jew called Raphael Lemkin, almost 30 years after his death in New York. It puts into law the genocide convention to which he devoted his life. Thought association: Wallenberg and Lemkin fought murder, each in his own way.

Now there is a Wallenberg story of another kind—Mr. Gorbachev's visit. Will he finally fulfill the hopes that he would uncover and reveal the full story of Raoul Wallenberg or allow an international commission to try?

The responsibility to reply belongs to Mr. Gorbachev. The responsibility to ask the question belongs to those who meet with him. President Reagan and President-elect Bush will have the chance. So will the American press—public questions requiring public answers, an opportunity for journalists and a far greater one for the leader of the Soviet Union.●

SANCTIONS DON'T HELP

● Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, often legislation passed by our Congress does not produce the intended effect. It clearly identifies an existing problem, but because its impact may not have been thoroughly researched or it was ill-conceived from the start—it only serves to exacerbate the issue. Such is the case with the economic sanctions against South Africa passed more than 2 years ago by Congress.

We've been concerned for years about apartheid in South Africa. Each one of us feels deeply the tragedy of a society that does not afford each citizen the same rights.

In 1986, there had been many signs that apartheid was beginning to break down. More than 100 of the discriminatory laws that serve as the legal pillars of South Africa's racially separate society had been removed. Lifted was the ban on racial discrimination in trade relations, racial discrimination in most sporting events, and the hated "Pass Laws" that required blacks to carry identification papers authorizing them to move about the countryside. But for the Congress, these changes were not soon enough or fast enough.

Other Members may well remember that we then decided to enact economic sanctions against South Africa, which many thought would speed the process of reform and help abolish apartheid. Those of us who voted for this legislation were wrong. Dead wrong.

David Reed, a Reader's Digest roving editor, has written a compelling article in February's edition of the Digest. In it, he depicts case after case of black South Africans whose lives have been destroyed by sanctions. I ask to have this article printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and strongly recommend its reading to all of my colleagues.

According to Mr. Reed, almost 29,000 nonwhites have lost their jobs because of American sanctions and disinvestment. Many of them have no money for food and suffer from malnutrition. Blacks within South Africa today are dying. Not because of a violent revolution, not because of apartheid: Because of American sanctions. In the words of Chief Minister Mangosuthu Buthelezi, leader of South Africa's Zulus, "Whites will not be made to bend because of sanctions. Disinvestment will lead to mass destitution among blacks. It is madness!"

Our economic sanctions are bringing about change all right. Backward change. The Washington Post recently carried a front-page article declaring, "'Whites Only' Signs Reappearing in South Africa." Fueled by our sanctions, the numbers of whites voting in opposition to change and in support of apartheid is increasing.

The situation Mr. Reed's article describes raises serious questions about the economic sanctions we have imposed on South Africa. Are we hurting the very people we had hoped to help? Are there other alternatives that help to peacefully dismantle apartheid, that don't worsen an already difficult situation? How can the United States constructively assist to bring change in this society? And finally, how can the American people best help South Africa's blacks and other nonwhites?

United States sanctions against South Africa are making a difficult situation worse: They hurt, but only the wrong people. It's time now for us to reconsider our policy toward this African nation.

The article follows:

DO SOUTH AFRICAN SANCTIONS MAKE SENSE?

(By David Reed)

For ten years Timothy Capho, a black South African, had what he considered a dream job. He earned $310 a month working on the assembly line in a Ford Motor Company plant in Port Elizabeth. He and his family lived well. Then Ford pulled out of South Africa. Today Capho and his wife subsist on maize meal and beans and are hungry most of the time. Unable to feed their children, they have sent them to live with Capho's sister. They are two years behind in their rent and fear they may be thrown out on the street. Says Mrs. Capho, "There is no hope for us."

The Caphos and tens of thousands of other black South Africans are the victims of a powerful U.S. lobby bent on bringing down the minority white government. For years, many human-rights activists, universities, churches and politicians have joined forces to demand that American companies divest their South African holdings in protest against apartheid—the government's system of racial separation.

Ford initially resisted the pressures but closed its Port Elizabeth plant in 1985, putting more than 4000 people, the majority of them nonwhite, out of work. Most remain unemployed, in as desperate a state as the Caphos.

Tightening the Screws. Cheered on by the pro-divestiture lobby, our Congress passed legislation in 1986 banning many South African goods from the U.S. market. Those favoring the measure argued it would create enough economic havoc to force the white government to abandon racial segregation. President Reagan opposed the bill, but Congress overrode his veto.

Time has proved the law to be counterproductive. Those who have been hurt are not South Africa's five million whites, but rather those the law was supposed to help: the 25 million blacks, three million "coloreds" (mixed-race) and one million Indians.

As of mid-1988, almost 29,000 nonwhites had lost their jobs because of American sanctions and disinvestment. Among the 162 U.S. firms that have already pulled out of South Africa are General Motors, IBM, Unisys and Eastman Kodak. As a result, many destitute blacks must live off the charity of relatives and neighbors and by doing odd jobs. Too often now, they suffer from malnutrition.

At Madadeni Hospital, in the KwaZulu homeland, Dr. George Campbell showed me a 22-month-old girl whose hair had turned orange, the telltale symptom of kwashiorkor—a disease prevalent among malnourished children. Her unemployed young mother said she had been feeding the baby porridge, maize meal and potatoes. Although the disease can be cured with proteins, Dr. Campbell knows the parents can't afford milk or eggs. The child will go home only to come down with kwashiorkor again, which can eventually result in mental retardation.

Pellagra, caused by niacin deficiency, has been rising rapidly among adults. I saw a 37-year-old patient named Abednego Zondo who weighed less than 90 pounds. His body was covered with sores, and he was in a stupor. Said Dr. Guy Daynes, medical superintendent of the hospital, "He probably has had an inadequate diet for a year." Zondo had worked in a coal mine but had been laid off.

Advocates of sanctions, seemingly ignorant of, or indifferent to, the suffering, seem bent on further tightening the economic screws on South Africa. In an attempt to force more American firms to pull out, the pro-sanctions lobby has persuaded 21 state governments, 72 cities, 14 counties and 84 universities to sell their stocks and bonds in companies that do business in South Africa.

A bill sponsored by Rep. Ronald V. Dellums (D. Calif.)—approved by the House in the last session—would ban all trade. The remaining 149 American companies, including The Digest, which publishes a South African edition, would have to get out within six months. An estimated 500,000 Americans who own stock worth $4 billion in South African gold mines and other companies would have to sell—possibly at huge losses—or face up to five years in prison.

"Madness!" Chief Minister Mangosuthu Buthelezi, leader of South Africa's 6.4 million Zulus, is deeply committed to ending apartheid by nonviolent struggle, but feels that American sanctions have been a tragic failure. He notes that 350,000 young blacks enter the labor market each year. To provide jobs for them, the economy would have to expand at five or six percent annually. In 1987, crippled by sanctions, high population growth, and the refusal of many foreign banks to grant loans to South Africa, the economy grew just 2.6 percent; three-percent growth was forecast for 1988. Says Buthelezi: "Whites will not be made to bend because of sanctions. Disinvestment will lead to mass destitution among blacks. It is madness!"

Still the pro-sanctions bandwagon rolls on. Leading political figures involved include Jesse Jackson and Senators Edward M. Kennedy (D., Mass.) and Alan Cranston (D., Calif.). They are supported by a wide range of activist political organizations, some of them leftist. However, most of those involved are well-meaning people of moderate outlook who are appalled at apartheid and are eager to help South Africa's nonwhites. Apparently they have no idea what suffering the sanctions cause, and are unaware of the limited political progress already achieved there.

For all of its faults, the country has come a long way from the total apartheid of 20 years ago. Then, blacks were restricted by law to menial jobs. They had to carry passes—or go to jail. They were not allowed into public facilities patronized by whites. Mixed marriages were a prison offense.

The system first began to unravel in the early 1970s because of astonishing growth in South Africa's economy. Needing more skilled workers, employers defied the law, hiring and upgrading the training of blacks. Hotel and restaurant owners strongly supported a repeal of statutory racial barriers. Pass laws and the prohibition of mixed marriages were abolished. Blacks began holding clerical, supervisory and even some executive positions.

Today, additional reform is all but dead. Growing numbers of whites, angered by what they consider an American attempt to wreck their economy and destroy their standard of living, are turning to the Conservative Party, a right-wing radical party that favors a return to total apartheid.

The National Party, which has governed the country for 40 years, passed laws that give statutory force to apartheid, practiced in South Africa from time immemorial. It still retains control of the all-white House of Assembly, part of the tricameral Parliament. But in municipal elections last October, the Conservatives scored big gains and could double their seats in the next Parliamentary election.

BLACK ADVANCEMENT.

American firms operating in South Africa have had a good and generally unacknowledged record in promoting black advancement. "In the past eight years U.S. corporations in South Africa spent more than $210 million on education, training, and housing of their black employees and their families, on health facilities and on legal aid," said Helen Suzman, a member of Parliament and a lifelong foe of apartheid, in the Washington Post.

Typical is Baltimore Aircoil, which has been in South Africa since 1961. The company employs 95 people, mostly nonwhites, in a plant next door to Crossroads, a squatter's settlement near Cape Town. Solly Keraan, the 45-year-old colored man who runs the company's social program, was once a militant bent on destroying the apartheid system. He even spent time in prison. Today Keraan has what he thinks is a better way to help his fellow nonwhites. He disburses $53,000 of company funds a year for education and cooperative measures designed to make people in Crossroads self-supporting. "If Baltimore Aircoil is forced to leave South Africa, it will be the end of those programs," Keraan says. "The American Congress has not consulted us, but has decided in its wisdom what is good for us."

Similar programs are already on their way to extinction because of sanctions. Before pulling out, Unisys had donated almost $2 million a year to black education. Its new South African owners are phasing out the program. Eastman Kodak had funded training and work in appliance repair and carpentry for handicapped blacks who otherwise would be condemned to street begging. When Kodak yielded to the pressures from the U.S. anti-South African lobby and withdrew, the blacks were left to fend for themselves.

On the other hand, the withdrawal of American firms has turned out to be a bonanza for many white South Africans. General Motors' sprawling assembly plant in Port Elizabeth was taken over by seven South African former GM executives. In most cases, banks are only too eager to finance takeovers. A number of whites have become millionaires overnight because of U.S. withdrawal.

Blacks are the losers. American firms pay premium wages. The new owners generally cut wages to the going rate. Anticipating hard times because of sanctions, most firms trim costs still further by cutting payrolls to the bone. This has meant laying off large numbers of unskilled and semi-skilled blacks.

Especially hard hit by the 1986 sanctions were agricultural workers. Ernestina Joorst, a 37-year-old colored woman and mother of two, used to make $55 a week packing apples at the Kromrivier Apple Growers Cooperative near Cape Town. Her income, together with her husband's earnings of $135 a month as a forest-department laborer, lifted the family into the middle class. "We fixed up our home, bought clothing, furniture and a TV set and, for the first time in our lives, opened a savings account," she recalls.

When sanctions closed the American market to South African apples, the industry laid off 12,000 seasonal workers, including Joorst. Today the Joorst family has slipped back into poverty. Their savings are gone. And Joorst considers herself fortunate if she can get $3 for working 12 hours a day at the stoop-labor task of planting onions.

Sanctions have also prevented the creation of new jobs. Until recently, the coal industry had been planning to double the capacity of its port facilities at Richards Bay in Natal Province. This would have opened up several thousand new jobs in the terminal and in mines and railroads. When South Africa's coal exports to the United States were cut off, the Richards Bay project was scaled back.

DEPRESSION AND HUNGER.

At dawn each morning, thousands of men set out on foot from Port Elizabeth's black townships in search of work. They stand in front of factory gates, hoping to be taken on for a day or two as casual laborers. Others go from door to door, begging for a chance to cut grass. Most return home empty-handed.

Norman Jacobs, 31, a former Ford worker, has been unemployed for three years. He and his three brothers—also out of work—are supported by their elderly mother, who scrubs floors in a white school. Jacobs suffers from acute depression and sits at home all day staring blankly at the walls.

The South African government has no regular long-term program for feeding the destitute unemployed, so instead the task is carried out by voluntary organizations made up of people of all races. Glynis Baer, Port Elizabeth regional director of Operation Hunger, which feeds 1.3 million people throughout South Africa, is worried about the Dellums bill. "If it should pass," she says, "it will mean real hunger for thousands and thousands more people."

Although some prominent blacks, notably Archbishop Desmond Tutu, head of South Africa's Anglican Church, favor sanctions as the only nonviolent way to end apartheid, the overwhelming majority of blacks are opposed to such measures if that means losing jobs. Most, however, are afraid to speak up because of a reign of terror imposed by the Communist-led African National Congress, a revolutionary organization that seeks to overthrow the government. The ANC favors sanctions, hoping in the process to destroy the capitalist system and replace it with Soviet-style communism.

White South African liberals who are against apartheid also oppose U.S. sanctions. John Kane-Berman, director of the liberal South African Institute of Race Relations, wrote in Finance Week, "If black people wanted sanctions and disinvestment, they could bring both about themselves. Black miners could stop digging coal. Blacks could refuse to load and unload ships." And Suzman asks, "Are there people who really believe that labor power is more effective when people are unemployed? Or that consumer power is more potent when people have no money to spend?"

ECONOMIC EMPOWERMENT.

The outside world keeps thinking that a black revolution is about to erupt in South Africa, but the whites remain as firmly entrenched in power as ever. Even after 28 years of what it calls armed struggle, the ANC has not "liberated" a square inch of South African territory.

The best hope for South Africa's black lies in improved education and job opportunities. As blacks acquire greater economic power, they will inevitably acquire more political power. Says Buthelezi, "Economic empowerment strengthens blacks to free themselves."

If the Dellums bill becomes law, South Africa's economy will be damaged, but it will not collapse. Other countries, notably Japan, Taiwan, Hong Kong and Israel, have already moved in to pick up the loss in South Africa's trade with the United States. Moreover, it is impossible to impose effective sanctions in gold, diamonds and platinum, which together account for over half of South Africa's total exports.

Instead of trying to destroy South Africa's economy, the U.S. Congress would do better to encourage American firms to set up shop there—to promote the economic growth that will assure black progress. The last thing blacks need is "help" from Washington in the form of sanctions.

Timothy Capho, who lost his job at Ford, knows nothing about U.S. politics or sanctions. All he knows is that he and his family have been overwhelmed by economic disaster. He also worries about his two children who are living with his sister. She and her husband are disabled and receive a total monthly pension of about $70, on which she also supports her own four children.

Across the street from her house is a foul-smelling dump. People more desperate than she keep it picked clean of edibles. And, in Washington, politicians who dine in expensive restaurants demand the imposition of even more draconian sanctions.●

TOWN AND GOWN THEATER

● Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to the Town and Gown Theater from the University of Alabama at Birmingham—one of my States greatest assets—to Washington. Last weekend, the Town and Gown Theater made its national debut with a performance of "Speak Of Me As I Am" at the prestigious Smithsonian Institution commemorating Black History Month.

The University of Alabama's Town and Gown Theater, produced and directed by Mr. James Hatcher, has been recognized as one of the most cohesive forces in the Southeast for joining black and white cultures through the performing arts. The Town and Gown's unique and moving presentation of "Speaks Of Me As I Am," which recognizes the talents and contributions of famous Black Americans, has been received with overwhelming enthusiasm in Alabama and on tour.

A collage of historical and entertaining material "Speak Of Me As I Am" features professional actors and musicians recreating some of the historical moments which have shaped the destiny of black society.

Mr. President, "Speak Of Me As I Am" is an exciting choreographed production with specially designed sets and theatrical lighting effects. It is exuberant, subtle, informative and exciting. I am extremely proud to pay tribute to the Town and Gown Theater and I congratulate them on a magnificent performance. I hope that my colleagues and others in Washington had the opportunity to take advantage of seeing one of my State's greatest treasures.●

THE CHEMICAL AND BIOLOGICAL WEAPONS CONTROL ACT OF 1989

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, today I join 19 of my colleagues as a cosponsor of the Chemical and Biological Weapons Control Act of 1989. The evenly bipartisan sponsorship of this measure indicates the universal recognition of its importance.

The resurgence in the use and spread of chemical and biological weapons has reached a global crisis level, demanding immediate and strong action. The most distressing turn of events in the past quarter century has been the increasing availability of these weapons to Third World countries who show little restraint in unleashing them on their immediate neighbors. The specter haunting our future is the proliferation of this technology to the point that irresponsible powers can threaten territories far beyond their own borders through the use of ballistic or cruise missiles.

The New York Times recently called chemical and biological weapons the "poor man's atomic bomb." While their effects are not of the scale of a modern nuclear device, the horror is comparable; chemical and biological weapons have the same characteristics of massive, indiscriminate, and lingering destruction. The ready availability of the component chemicals compounds the problem, making the spread of such weapons easier. The difficulty in monitoring production of poison agents by belligerents is demonstrated by the case of the Libyan chemical plant near Tripoli which can be converted to the productions of pharmaceuticals in order to cover its sinister purpose.

Mr. President, the aim of the Chemical and Biological Weapons Control Act of 1989 is to punish those countries who openly show their disregard for the 1925 Geneva protocol. President Bush has said:

> Nations guilty of chemical warfare must pay a price. They must know that violation of the ban against the use of such weapons carries a heavy penalty. Not just a fine or a minor sanction that can be ignored.

Mr. President, this act is intended to get and hold the attention of those nations which may contemplate the use of chemical and biological weapons. It will demonstrate the resolve of the United States to stop the worldwide danger imposed by this abhorrent form of warfare.●

THE HATE CRIME STATISTICS ACT

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I am pleased today to join several of my colleagues in cosponsoring the Hate Crimes Statistics Act. This is a simple, yet very important measure that merits swift passage.

This bill directs the Attorney General to collect and publish statistics indicating the nature and extent of crimes motivated by bigotry and based on hate for certain racial, ethnic, and religious groups, among others. It may come as a surprise to many that at present no such collection effort is mandated. The truth is that data on hate crimes is collected, at best, in a haphazard and sporadic manner, exclusively on the State and local level. This legislation will assure, henceforth, the prosecution of a coordinated and centralized data collection effort.

If America is to preserve its cultural, ethnic, and religious diversity, we must bring down upon those who would blemish our cultural fabric a legal and moral wrath. To effectively deal with the bigots among us, we must substitute our reliance on anecdotal evidence with hard data. This data will serve as an important tool in a campaign of public awareness, and will bolster the power of bully pulpits nationwide.

This bill came within a razor's edge of passing last Congress. The House passed it by substantial margin and the Senate Judiciary Committee reported it unanimously. It was the subject of close negotiations in the waning hours of the 100th Congress, and most surely would have passed but for adjournment.

There is no question that this bill enjoys widespread, bipartisan support, as well it should. Any Member concerned about the integrity of diversity in America should support this bill.

Mr. President, be it a swastika painted on a synagogue or a cross burned on a lawn, hate crimes must not be tolerated. I urge my colleagues to join us in sending a message across the land.●

NEW YORK STATE SENATOR MARTIN J. KNORR

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to a respected former member of the New York State legislature on his retirement. For 35 years, the Honorable Martin J. Knorr represented Queens, NY, in both the New York State Assembly and Senate.

Senator Knorr's lifetime of public service includes more than just his legislative experience. Prior to his election to the New York Assembly, he was the assistant attorney general of New York State, law assistant of the surrogate court of Queens, associate attorney of the New York State Department of Taxation and Finance, and supreme court law secretary, 11th judicial district, Queens County.

While in Albany, Senator Knorr did not forget his civic responsibilities back home in Queens, and served as president of the associated organizations of Ridgewood, Glendale, Maspeth and Middle Village; founder of the west Queens Coordination Civil Council; member of the board of trustees of Christ the King Regional High School in Queens; and several other community groups.

Over the years, Martin Knorr served with distinction, and earned the respect of both those he represented, and those who served with him. The people of Queens, and the entire State of New York will certainly miss his presence in Albany. I salute Senator Knorr on his lifetime record and accomplishments. I know that my colleagues will want to join me in wishing Marty a happy and fruitful retirement.●

NATIONAL ARBOR DAY

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to give my support to Senate Joint Resolution 40, a resolution introduced by my neighbor from New Jersey, Senator BRADLEY. National Arbor Day designates "the last Friday in April" as a time to give special recognition to trees, a vital part of our environment.

Trees are an important natural resource; trees stabilize our environment, provide raw materials, and add to our nature's beauty. However, we may lose our forests forever if we do not preserve and protect them today. I commend Senator BRADLEY in taking the initiative in recognizing this danger. I am proud to join him as a cosponsor of this resolution, and urge my colleagues to do the same.●

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF BOONVILLE, MO, LIONS CLUB

● Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I am pleased to offer my enthusiastic congratulations to the Boonville, MO, Lions Club which celebrates its 50th anniversary on February 25, 1989.

Long before President Bush spoke of a "thousand points of light," the Lions sparkled in Boonville. Over the years they have been recognized for their tireless work to aid both research and victims of sight and hearing impairments, diabetes, and other maladies. Always a strong force in local charities, they truly embody their motto: "We Serve."

The Lions Club of Boonville has enjoyed 50 years of achievement through good deeds and good fellowship, I salute them.●

RACHEL VERMILLION

● Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I rise today to insert into the RECORD a copy of an article that appeared in Corbin! This Week about Rachel Vermillion, an extraordinary woman who has voted in every election since women were granted the right to vote in 1921.

Mrs. Vermillion, a strong supporter of women's rights, was 31 when she was first given the right to vote in the 1921 Presidential elections. She voted for Warren Harding and later listened to the election returns on the radio. The 1921 election returns were the first ever broadcast. Sixty-seven years later Mrs. Vermillion has never missed an opportunity to exercise her privilege to vote. As she signed the register book on November 8, 1988, Mrs. Vermillion remarked, "I always look forward to this and I always want to vote."

Furthermore, Rachel Vermillion has instilled the importance of voting to all members of her family. The Vermillion family has a long and rich history of participating in politics. Mrs. Vermillion ran for police judge in 1941, the first woman to run for an office in Corbin, KY, and she finished second in the six man race. Her husband was a county magistrate and her son, Dick Vermillion, is Corbin's city manager.

Rachel Vermillion turned 98 a few days after the 1988 election and she will be nearing 102 when the 1992 Presidential elections are held. I have no doubt that if at all possible Mrs. Vermillion will be at the polls ready to exercise her right to vote.

Rachel Vermillion is a fine example to all generations of the patriotic devotion we should all have to exercise our privilege and right to vote. I commend her to my colleagues today.

The article follows:

RACHEL VERMILLION HASN'T MISSED A VOTE SINCE WOMEN WON RIGHT IN 1921

(By Teresa J. Hill)

Rachel Vermillion was 31 years old before women were granted the right to vote in this country. She said it was a happy day for her—"I'd always been for women's rights," she said.

The year was 1921 and she cast her ballot for Warren Harding, a Republican and a Baptist. Afterward, she listened to the election returns on the radio—the first year they ever were broadcast.

Sixty-seven years later Mrs. Vermillion is still exercising her voting privilege and still voting Republican.

As she walked slowly to the line of voters outside East Ward Elementary Tuesday, she stopped many times to speak to old friends and take some good-natured kidding.

"Heard you're here campaigning for Mike Dukakis," one man said with a grin, knowing full well that Mrs. Vermillion was the Republican Chairwoman of Knox County for more than 30 years.

"You know better than that," she answered with a smile, pausing to clasp another hand reached out in greeting.

Though the line wasn't too long, those waiting urged her to the front. "Anyone who's been voting as long as she has shouldn't have to wait in line," whispered one woman.

That may be true, but it is also true that she wouldn't mind waiting in line if that's what it takes to vote. "I always look forward to this," she said as she signed her name in the register book. "I always want to vote."

Her entire family knows the importance of getting to the polls and voting. The Vermillion's have a rich history of politics starting with Mrs. Vermillion's grandfather whose name is about as patriotic as they come.

"Grandfather's name was Abraham Lincoln Strunk," said Dick Vermillion, Rachel's son and Corbin city manager. "We've all been involved in politics. Dad was a county magistrate, but she has always been my inspiration."

Rachel Vermillion ran for police judge in 1941. She was the first woman to run for office in Corbin and she gave an excellent showing, finishing runner-up to Judge Ben Gooding in a six man race.

She served as court clerk for ten years and eventually served as city police judge protem for several years.

According to Mrs. Vermillion, she believes strongly that women have the right to work as well as vote.

"Married women couldn't work," she said, adding that she'd been forced to quit her job as a telephone operator when she married. "I went back when the law changed, but not for long. I had too many children, seven's a lot."

The first time she voted, said Mrs. Vermillion, she had tickets and she punched out her choice.

The methods may have changed but the result is still the same. Mrs. Vermillion will be 98-years-old this Friday and she admits with a smile, "Maybe I am the oldest one here."

The next presidential election will be four years from now in 1992. Mrs. Vermillion will be 102 when she goes to the polls and there's a good chance she'll be the oldest person voting then, too.

The important thing is, no matter what, Rachel Vermillion will be voting.●

MINNESOTANS PROVIDE DIALYSIS ASSISTANCE TO ARMENIA

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize the exemplary service of five Minnesotans who aided the people of Armenia with urgently needed kidney dialysis assistance. the Minnesota Kidney Institute team, which consisted of five Twin Cities dialysis professionals, clearly demonstrated Minnesota's dedication to public service and world relief.

The Minnesota Kidney Institute recognized the need for a dialysis relief program immediately upon news of the tragic earthquake, and sent the team to the area. The institute is a combined effort of the Hennepin County Medical Center, Metropolitian-Mount Sinai Medical Center, the Regional Kidney Disease Program, and individual transplant surgeons. This organization has gained national notoriety for its excellence in kidney-related treatments and research.

Dr. Allan Collins departed the Twin Cities for Yerevan, Armenia, on December 18, 1988, to initiate and coordinate the program which he would administer for five grueling weeks. He was later joined by Sandra Aronson, R.N., of Richfield, Roberta Badiner, R.N., of Minneapolis, Betty Bergerson, R.N., of Vadnais Heights, and Thomas Pence, M.D., of Edina, MN, who acted as the support team, which based its operation out of the Mikaelyan Institute. The team withdrew from Armenia on January 24, 1989, and was one of the last dialysis groups to leave.

The Minnesota Kidney Institute members were not the only Minnesotans who recognized the need for aid to the people of Armenia. Over 150 tons of clothing were donated by Minnesotans, and were collected by churches, community groups, and corporations. This effort was unmatched throughout the United States.

It is with great pride that the Minnesota medical community—and all Minnesotans—pay tribute to this talented group of professionals, who were so generous with their knowledge, compassion, and time. Their stay in Armenia truly reflects a situation where volunteerism, as advocated by former President Reagan, and President Bush, has filled a void that no one could have anticipated or desired. Today, I want to share that pride with my colleagues in the Senate.●

ILLINOIS SCHOOL FOR THE DEAF

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I rise today in recognition of the 150th anniversary of the Illinois School for the Deaf. This is an institution that carries with it a strong sense of pride for being one of the oldest and finest State residential schools for deaf children in the world.

Illinois School for the Deaf was founded in February 1839, and officially opened its doors in 1846. Since then, more than 12,000 students have attended the school, which is located in Jacksonville, IL. Many of the graduates of Illinois School for the Deaf have gone on to pursue goals in higher education; others have become productive, contributing citizens spreading a reputation for academic excellence throughout the Nation and the world.

Today, the school offers support services to parents of deaf infants and pre-school-age children, as well as informational outreach services to professionals who work with deaf children throughout the State. The school is focused on the development of an independent and educated individual through the work of a dedicated, talented staff. The school has a reputation for excellence in developing and implementing quality, comprehensive programs for deaf children.

Mr. President, I ask my colleagues to join me in saluting this fine institution on its sesquicentennial and in wishing the staff and faculty in Jacksonville many more successes as they continue to serve throughout the years.●

COMMERCIAL RELATIONS WITH THE SOVIET UNION

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, last fall my distinguished colleague from New Jersey, Senator BILL BRADLEY, gave some very thoughtful testimony before the House Banking Subcommittee on International Finance, Trade and Monetary Policy. It is the kind of testimony the Senate has come to expect from BILL BRADLEY.

Senator BRADLEY calls for the United States to take the lead in developing a Western strategy toward commercial relations with the Soviet Union. That strategy should avoid the pitfalls of below-rate loans or Government-guaranteed subsidies while reinforcing Gorbachev's encouraging moves to reform the lethargic Soviet economy. In doing so the West has an obligation to continue to press the Soviets on human rights and emigration, both of which hold the key to expanding United States-Soviet trade.

Senator BRADLEY's testimony is realistic and hard headed. I commend it to my colleagues.

Mr. President, I ask that Senator BILL BRADLEY's testimony of September 22, 1988, be placed in the RECORD in full.

The statement follows:

TESTIMONY OF SENATOR BILL BRADLEY BEFORE THE HOUSE BANKING SUBCOMMITTEE ON INTERNATIONAL FINANCE, TRADE AND MONETARY POLICY

WHY THE SOVIETS NEED REFORM

The reason the Soviet leadership is committed to change—economic reconstruction and a modicum of political freedom—is because the economy has stagnated, living standards have deteriorated, the budget deficit has ballooned, corruption is rampant, shortages are proliferating, and the people are losing hope. Gorbachev knows that unless things change the Soviet Union could remain a third-rate economic power, and become a second-rate military power, in his lifetime. That is why he has embarked on an ambitious program of economic reform that emphasizes efficiency, decentralization, and a much bigger role for the market in setting prices and allocating resources. As the reformers say, "economic criteria will become more dominant in the allocation of resources."

Whatever its ultimate payoffs, this "perestroika" carries big political risks. It means higher prices, less job security, and harder work today in exchange for the promise of a better life sometime in the future. No wonder there's so much opposition—from workers, bureaucrats, peasants, party officials, consumers, black marketeers.

That is where "glasnost" comes in. Glasnost is merely greater permission to speak, not freedom of speech guaranteed under law as in America. Yet, it has won over many intellectuals, not just in the U.S.S.R. but also in the West, and made them advocates of Gorbachev's reforms. This, together with the new opportunities for entrepreneurship—like cooperative restaurants, music stores, dry cleaning shops, truck-farms, long-term leases of land—is supposed to take the edge off the harsh realities of the new economic policies, deflect opposition to change, and keep the Soviet people on board. Glasnost has also generated public discussion of the system's ills. Because Soviets are finally admitting how bad things are, it may be possible to mobilize support for the radical change perestroika requires.

Will it succeed? No one, including Gorbachev, knows. How should the West react? Some people, including some of our European allies, argue that Gorbachev's new policies are the best hope for the West and that his failure would harm prospects for a more peaceful and humane Soviet Union. They urge the West to promote reform by easing Soviet access to Western markets, credits, and technology. Others, mainly American skeptics, argue the opposite, that successful reform and economic revival would only make the Soviet Union more powerful and menacing, not make it less expansionist or repressive. They urge the US to reduce Soviet access to Western capital and markets.

In my view, neither position fully reflects the interests of the West. As for helping Gorbachev, it is naive to rest our hopes on the success of any Soviet leader, since he will ultimately be followed by another who may disown his policies. It is also unrealistic to think that the West can do much either to help or to hinder him, even if we wanted to. The success or failure of Gorbachev and his reforms will be determined by the quality of his leadership, the responsiveness of the Soviet people, and the adaptability of the Soviet system, not by whether the rest of the world supports or opposes him. Moreover, our interests would be served if, but only if, a successful revival of the Soviet economy is accompanied by lasting changes in the way Soviet society is governed and its resources are used, e.g. through real democratization, greater openness, and stronger civilian claims for highly talented manpower, modern machinery, and other scarce factors of production.

The real test is whether the Soviets choose butter over guns. So far, this hasn't happened. A recent House Armed Services Committee report found that "there have been no significant, identifiable changes traceable to Gorbachev's drive to scale back defense spending . . . Not only has Gorbachev failed to suppress defense spending, but it has actually increased. According to preliminary unclassified intelligence estimates, Soviet military spending grew by about 3 percent in both 1986 and 1987, almost double the growth rate of the 1981-86 period . . . The conclusion is inescapable that so far the military's budget has not been nicked by Gorbachev."

The West has a strong interest in seeing the military burden decline. We want increases in consumption and productive investment to come out of the Soviet military, not from Western depositors, shareholders, and taxpayers. It would be a tragic mistake if Western capital enables the USSR to put off the hard choice between "guns" and "butter." Not only would it threaten Western security, but it would subvert Soviet reform.

I see two problems with the approach that says the West should not have any dealings with the Soviet Union. First, perestroika will need imports of technology and consumption items that the Soviets cannot now produce and do not have the hard currency to pay for. Second, the US does not have a monopoly on capital, trade, and technology. Attempting to deny the Soviets access to all Western capital and credit without the cooperation of Japan, Western Europe, and other nations which may assess the Soviet threat somewhat differently from us, is neither feasible nor desirable. So, imposing unilateral restrictions on US banks, farmers, and businessmen is just shooting ourselves in the foot. And blustering about it to our allies endangers alliance cohesion.

That is why we need a middle ground between "helping" and "hindering," one that friends and allies will support.

A WESTERN APPROACH TO ECONOMIC RELATIONS WITH THE U.S.S.R.

What might be the basis for a common approach? It would proceed from a couple of fundamental goals: fostering a more peaceful and prosperous world, and preserving a cohesive Western economic and security alliance. It would be premised on the assumptions that:

(a) Economic reform in the Soviet Union would be in the West's interests if it: Permanently reallocates resources away from Soviet military use and control into civilian consumption and productive capital formation; paves the way for greater political liberalization and respect for human rights; and

(b) By speaking with one voice on key aspects of East-West economic relations, Western governments and businesses may be able to reinforce the efforts of those in the U.S.S.R. who are working for these goals.

What are the main issues Western nations should focus on in formulating a strategy toward economic relations with the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe? I see five key areas: Multilateral export controls on militarily critical technologies (COCOM), Soviet activities in Western capital markets, East-West trade, including US political constraints on trade and export credits, Soviet participation in Western economic institutions, and investment in joint ventures and special economic zones.

Let me briefly outline my views on each of them.

MULTILATERAL EXPORT CONTROLS (COCOM)

In the 21st century, our collective security will depend even more heavily on preserving and replenishing the West's technological advantage vis-a-vis the Soviet Union and the Eastern bloc. In recent years, multilateral export controls (COCOM) have been strengthened. More countries have recognized that COCOM is vital to their own security. They have tightened their laws and put more resources into enforcing them. Yet as Soviet interaction with the West expands, export controls on sensitive technology will probably come under increasing pressure from potential exporters. Developments within the EEC raise new challenges for Western cooperation. On the one hand, the EEC's commitment to create a common regulatory framework for foreign trade offers the prospect of stronger national laws to meet new community standards by 1992. Yet, on the other hand, projected negotiations toward cooperation with the Eastern bloc could exacerbate alliance frictions over COCOM and complicate further progress toward improved enforcement. Western solidarity and Western security both depend on our ability to maintain and enforce the COCOM regime. As in the past, US leadership will be critical to ensure Western cooperation.

SOVIET ACTIVITIES IN WESTERN CAPITAL MARKETS

To my knowledge, there is no single, readily accessible, comprehensive, and authoritative compilation of statistics on East European and Soviet external debt. Several bodies, including the OECD and the BIS, collect and publish much of the relevant data but not all.

Despite differences in their coverage and methodology, they present a consistent picture of growing indebtedness since Gorbachev took power in 1985. According to OECD estimates (which are adjusted for fluctuations in the dollar), the gross debt of the Eastern bloc (including the Soviet Union) was valued at $129 billion at the end of 1987, up from $82 billion at the end of 1984. In the case of the USSR, the value of its debt rose from $22.5 billion at the end of 1984 to $38 billion at the end of 1987. In 1986, Western Europe apparently provided about 55 percent of all Western loans, Japan 40 percent, and the US 2 percent. Over the medium term, most observers expect a moderate but steady rise in Soviet indebtedness. Some people are predicting more substantial increases, particularly in the international securities markets where the Soviets have already floated bond issues. The official Soviet position is to limit debt service to 25 percent of export earnings. However, influential Soviet experts acknowledge that this may not be feasible. They might want more debt.

The Soviet Union and other Eastern European countries, including the USSR, have been able to take advantage of competition among various Western creditors to obtain preferential borrowing terms. In 1986, for example, the USSR and Czechoslovakia were able to obtain loans on private markets at rates just one-eighth of a point above LIBOR, which is the rate for the most preferred, credit-worthy borrowers. These are better terms than those available to Latin American debtors and even to many Western firms and individuals. While Western creditors' attitudes toward the Eastern bloc vary depending on how they assess each country's situation, it appears that in the Soviet case, interest rates have generally fallen and repayment periods have lengthened.

Leading Western governments also guarantee or insure financing for exports to the USSR and Eastern Europe. In West Germany, export financing can be guaranteed by a private company, Hermes Credit Insurance, which acts as an agent for the German government. In the UK, the government administers guarantees through the Export Credits Guarantee Department. In France, there is the French Bank of Foreign Trade and the French Insurance Company for Foreign Trade, a semipublic joint stock company. In Japan, the government Export-Import Bank cooperates with commercial banks to provide export credit financing, while government-backed insurance is available through the Export Insurance Division of the Ministry International Trade and Industry (MITI). In the US, guarantees would be provided by the Ex-Im bank. However, under the Stevenson Amendment to the 1974 Trade Act, there is a $300 million ceiling on new Ex-Im Bank authorizations to finance exports to the U.S.S.R.

Why are these government guarantees important? First, they are just like any other subsidy. Because the financing is backed by the full faith and credit of the lender's government, the borrower gets better terms. Second, they insulate lenders from the full extent of the risk of doing business in the USSR and pass that risk onto the taxpayers. Third, the data on the extent and magnitude of insurance and guarantees is quite sketchy. Western governments are apparently reluctant to let voters and taxpayers know just what good deals the Soviets are getting.

The news on the official credit and guarantee front is not all bad. The U.S. has taken the lead in persuading representatives of OECD governments to stop directly subsidizing trade credits, including export sales to the Eastern bloc. This agreement, the "Arrangement on Guidelines for Officially Supported Export Credits", has been strengthened since it was signed by twenty Western governments in 1978. But it still lacks an enforcement mechanism. Subsidies are permitted upon notification to the parties to the agreement. And in recent years, the growing number of deviations from the agreement indicates a troubling weakening of credtor discipline vis-a-vis the Eastern bloc.

The U.S.' ability to strengthen this discipline has been compromised by the Administration's allowing the Soviet Union to benefit from subsidized grain sales under the Export Enhancement Act. In 1983, we negotiated a Long Term Grain Agreement with the U.S.S.R. This agreement specifies the minimum level of Soviet grain purchases from the U.S. over a 5-year period. Beginning in 1984, the Soviets failed to meet their commitments under the agreement. In 1985-86, the Reagan Administration attempted to induce the Soviets to buy more American grain by subsidizing their purchases, first to the tune of $15/metric ton, and when that didn't work, $44/metric ton—a twofold increase that substantially undercut the world price. Understandably, American taxpayers and European allies were outraged. Since then, the subsidy has declined to $19/metric ton, but it remains a sore point between the U.S. and other nations.

What might the elements of a rational, Western policy toward capital flows to the U.S.S.R. be? First, recognize that there is no strategic justification for official Western loans. Second, Western governments and creditors should forego all types of loan subsidies, guarantees, and other indirect means of reducing the costs of borrowing by Soviet government agencies, enterprises, and joint ventures. And we must improve our ability to enforce that mechanism.

Third, Western governments and financial institutions should review the extent of our ability to monitor Soviet activity in Western capital markets, including the adequacy of reporting by the BIS, OECD, and Western central banks and, where necessary, upgrade the collection and disclosure of data on Soviet financial flows. (There are a number of technical questions about the adequacy of existing reporting systems that I am submitting for the record.)

Finally, Western governments need a better process for periodic consultations on Soviet borrowing. Even though we may not expect their borrowing to surge, we need a common Western understanding and a mechanism in place should the unexpected occur. Certainly, we do not want Soviet bloc debt to mount up the way LDC debt has. In addition, we ought to monitor how the Soviet Union uses Western capital to ensure that our credits do not preempt the reallocation of industrial resources from non-productive military uses to civilian consumption or productive capital formation.

EAST-WEST TRADE

From the West's standpoint, as well as Soviet reformers', it is better if the Soviets finance legitimate imports by increasing civilian exports than by borrowing more from the West. This is because having to produce and sell goods in a highly competitive world market is more likely to accelerate the pace and broaden the scope of reform than mere borrowing would. If they want to sell, they have to improve quality. To improve quality, the system must evolve. The extensive contacts with the West that would be essential to a civilian export strategy would reinforce the reformers' goal of decentralization and a greater role for the market. Weakening the hold of the Soviet state could, in time, promote political liberalization and amplify the voice of human rights advocates within the U.S.S.R. as well as in the West. On the other hand, borrowing allows them to avoid what it takes to function as a member of the open world economy.

The difficulties with this approach are twofold. In the short run, the USSR is unlikely to produce much that foreigners want, aside from natural resources, gold, and weapons. Second, the US, a potentially significant market, has several foreign policy barriers to Soviet exports, in particular, the Jackson-Vanik Amendment to the 1974 Trade Act which links MFN to emigration.

I would oppose repeal of Jackson-Vanik unless there is a resurgence in emigration and a new and proven respect in the Soviet Union for human rights. However, it must be said that there is not much evidence it has worked, i.e., that it has induced the USSR to liberalize emigration. The numbers speak for themselves. In 1979, 51,320 Jews were permitted to emigrate. In 1981, it was down to 9,447 and in 1986 to 914. So far this year, 9,520 Jews have been allowed to leave. German emigration has also dropped dramatically since the 1970's.

If the Soviets are serious about reform, they will get serious about human rights. Not just emigration, but freedom to worship, to give one's children a religious education, freedom from fear or persecution and humiliation for one's beliefs. So I hope that changes in Soviet behavior will make Jackson-Vanik moot. If this happens, the US should be prepared to reevaluate its policy toward trade in light of overall developments within the U.S.S.R.

WESTERN ECONOMIC INSTITUTIONS

The Soviets have expressed interest in exploring opportunities for participating in GATT, the IMF, the World Bank, the BIS, and the Asian Development Bank (ADB). They have already obtained limited representation rights at the ADB's 1987 and 1988 meetings. In 1986, they formally requested observer status in GATT, which was denied. They are expected to repeat this request in the near future. However, they are unlikely to seek membership in the World Bank or the IMF at this time.

It has been argued that Soviet observer status, and even membership, in GATT would serve, or at least would not hurt, Western interests. However, the GATT's fundamental principles presuppose the existence of a market-pricing system and a substantial competitive private sector. Thus, it would be difficult, perhaps impossible, for GATT to assimilate a centrally planned economy which views membership as a political platform instead of an economic commitment. In the final analysis, the Soviets must understand that radical economic reform, not diplomacy, is the key to acceptance in GATT and the West's main financial and economic institutions. The West should not give the Soviets the rights of a major economic power until they earn them. This requires, among other things: A market-pricing system linked to world prices through exchange rates and a convertible currency, dismantling of central planning for most goods and services, opening Soviet markets to foreign as well as domestic competition, and scaling back the military sector so that the economy produces the things people want and need.

Even if the Soviets choose this direction, getting there will take time. The West should not undercut those in the U.S.S.R. who advocate more radical price reform by granting the Soviets membership, or even observer status, in GATT on the cheap. Instead, the West should condition observer status in GATT on complete access to (i.e. transparency of) the Soviet pricing system. That is, observer status should depend on the Soviet Union providing the West with comprehensive, detailed data on the pricing structure and on how they actually set both domestic and foreign prices for all non-military goods and services, including those produced by defense industries. Since the Soviets seem to have an incomplete understanding of how their own pricing system works, such a cooperative study could make important contributions to the domestic economic reform process. In addition, it would provide the basis for an evaluation by Western countries of the merits, costs, and terms of eventual Soviet Membership.

INVESTMENT IN JOINT VENTURES AND SPECIAL ECONOMIC ZONES

The U.S.S.R. is actively seeking to attract Western investment by encouraging joint ventures. However, joint ventures are unlikely to be a major factor in Soviet reform and modernization because there are still too many uncertainties for, and restrictions on, foreign investment. Nonetheless, contacts with Western businessmen could facilitate reform by teaching the Soviets what is required to compete successfully in the international marketplace and by pushing the bureaucracy to make necessary changes.

However, there is a danger that joint venturers (particularly consortia of joint venturers from individual countries backed by their respective governments) will not push for decentralizing power and resources but will instead prefer to deal with a powerful, centralized, autocratic bureaucracy that gives their needs priority. In this case, joint ventures could retard rather than promote real reform.

The same considerations apply to special economic zones. On the one hand, they might facilitate experimentation with price reform, tax structures, currency exchange, etc. On the other hand, they could impede decentralization and slow the pace of reform in areas outside the zones. China's experience is relevant. Having developed several special economic zones, the Chinese are now questioning the extent of their contribution to reform. Some Chinese economists are concerned that the benefits have been concentrated almost entirely within the zones and that, on balance, they have not been a significant factor in strengthening and expanding reforms elsewhere.

In any event, Western governments should refrain from insuring, guaranteeing, or otherwise artificially reducing the risk of investing in the U.S.S.R. Western investors should base their calculations of profitability on Soviet realities, not on how generously Western taxpayers will insulate them from losses. Western businessmen need to be rational, not romantic, capitalists when dealing with the Soviet Union.

CONCLUSION

The issue of how the West should manage its economic relations with the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe is potentially divisive. It does not have to be. The Soviets obviously have an interest in fueling competition among Western bankers and businessmen to secure the best possible terms. But the West has an interest in a collective strategy toward commercial dealings with the Soviets that will avoid a destructive beggar-thy-neighbor approach and reinforce the pressures for reform within the U.S.S.R. The US must take the lead in developing that strategy. I would hope that the next American President will put it high on his agenda and be ready to raise it at the Allied Economic Summit in Paris next year.●

DNA FINGERPRINTING: A NEW TECHNOLOGICAL WEAPON IN FIGHTING CRIME

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, one of the most promising developments in the areas of forensic science and law enforcement is the advent of a new technology known as DNA fingerprinting. DNA, or deoxyribonucleic acid, is the basic genetic material which gives every person in the world a distinct identity. With the exception of identical twins, no two persons have exactly the same DNA pattern. British geneticists developed a series of scientific tests which can analyze the DNA found in hair, blood, semen, or skin left at a crime scene and match the evidence to samples provided by a suspect or defendant. These tests are regarded as nearly foolproof, causing some defendants to confess immediately upon learning test results. Conversely, DNA fingerprinting can definitively show that an individual could not have been involved in a particular crime.

Though most often used in cases of questionable paternity, DNA fingerprinting is expected to yield valuable information in cases of rape and other violent crimes where the perpetrator is not immediately known. Identifying an individual through the use of DNA fingerprinting is vastly superior to conventional forensic tests in many ways. First, DNA fingerprinting requires only small amounts of forensic evidence. For example, a sample of dried blood smaller than a dime, or just one human hair, can provide enough information to conclusively link one individual to that evidence. Second, conventional testing procedures lose their effectiveness as evidence ages, while DNA fingerprinting has proven to be effective using samples as old as 3 years. Third, DNA fingerprints, which resemble the Universal Price Code bars found on many supermarket products, provide a visual representation which allows for easy comparison and analysis.

In the last year, DNA fingerprinting has been used to convict a New York man of raping one woman, sexually abusing two others, and attempting to burglarize the apartment of a fourth during a 4-week period. DNA analysis conclusively matched sperm cells taken from the rape victim with a blood sample provided by the defendant. This same technology has been used in at least one case to prove that an individual did not commit a crime. A teen-aged hospital worker, accused of raping and murdering two 15-year-old girls, was released from custody when his DNA fingerprints did not match those taken from evidence found at the crime scene. Finally, DNA fingerprints were instrumental in the pardon of David Vasquez, who pleaded guilty to second degree murder—rather than face a capital murder charge—and was imprisoned 5 years ago. Virginia Gov. Gerald L. Baliles pardoned Vasquez after an analysis of DNA evidence proved decisively that another man had committed the crime. I would like to share with you newspaper accounts concerning this case, and that of a Florida man who was convicted as a result of DNA technology.

DNA fingerprinting is expected to have a significant impact on criminal prosecutions by enhancing the ability of U.S. attorneys and local prosecutors to obtain convictions. California Attorney General John Van de Kamp has been a long-time proponent of this technology, addressing a number of prosecutors' offices and police organizations on the subject. I have included a copy of a recent speech given by Attorney General Van de Kamp. Further, criminal justice researchers believe that the number of guilty pleas will increase as defendants are confronted with visible, irrefutable evidence against them. Finally, studies have shown that juries are more likely to find a defendant guilty when conclusive forensic evidence is presented at trial.

DNA fingerprinting, hailed as the most important technological breakthrough in law enforcement since the inception on conventional fingerprinting, is not yet fully effective in our efforts to identify, apprehend, and prosecute criminals. At present, the process is time-consuming and costly; some courts are reluctant to accept DNA-related evidence; no standards exist to ensure the quality of chemicals, laboratory equipment or procedures; and, very few people are qualified to perform, interpret, and testify as to the results and validity of the tests. However, Government agencies such as the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the National Institutes of Health are working together with private entities to train law enforcement personnel, crime scene technicians, laboratory scientists, and expert witnesses in the handling, processing, and evaluation of DNA evidence. Working together, the law enforcement, medical, and scientific communities will ultimately be responsible for the integrity and acceptance of this most promising and important technology.

As violent crime becomes increasingly pervasive, and at times overwhelming, every avenue must be explored to ensure that those who commit violent crimes will be expeditiously apprehended and prosecuted. I am very enthusiastic about the applications of DNA technology to the field of law enforcement, and foresee its widespread use and acceptance. Once adequate standards are developed, DNA fingerprinting will surely become an invaluable tool in the fight against crime. I have recently sent a letter to William Sessions, Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, asking for a progress report on DNA fingerprinting and encouraging further exploration of this technology, efforts which will undoubtedly aid our Nation's prosecutors in fighting violent crime.

The previously referred to material follows:

DNA Fingerprinting Upheld in First Appellate-Level Challenge

A Florida appeals court has ruled that "DNA fingerprinting" technology, if performed properly, is admissible as evidence in a criminal trial. The October 20 ruling, by the 5th District Florida Court of Appeal in Andrews v. State (Florida), No. 87-2166, is the first by an appellate court on the question of admissibility of DNA evidence in criminal cases.

The appellant, Tommy Lee Andrews, was convicted of sexual battery and related offenses, partially on the basis of DNA analysis of his blood and of semen taken from a rape victim. Dr. Michael Baird of Lifecodes Corp., an Elmsford, N.Y.-based firm specializing in DNA analysis, testified at the trial that there was a "match," and that the chance that the DNA bands would be duplicated in some other person's cells was less than 1 in 839 million.

Andrews appealed on the grounds that the DNA tests were unreliable and that there were not enought checks conducted to ensure against shoddy laboratory work.

The appeals court disagreed. It noted that DNA testing has been used in nonjudicial settings for about 10 years, that there is an extensive scientific literature on the subject, and that control tests using known DNA samples were used to guard against faulty laboratory work in the Andrews case. Furthermore, the court noted, experts testified that even if DNA testing is done erroneously, "it would ordinarily lead to no result being obtained rather than an erroneous result."

"Admittedly, the scientific evidence here, unlike that presented with fingerprint, footprint or bite mark evidence, is highly technical, incapable of observation and requires the jury to either accept or reject the scientist's conclusion that it can be done," the courts stated. "While this factor requires courts to proceed with special caution . . . it does not of itself render the evidence unreliable. The trial court did not abuse its discretion in ruling the test results admissible in this . . ."

In considering how to judge the new technology, the Florida court decided not to rely on a 1923 federal court ruling which called for "general acceptance" of a technology in the scientific community. That "nose counting" approach might result in exclusion of reliable but not yet widely used types of evidence, the Florida court said.

Rather, the court relied on a 1985 ruling by the 3d Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals in U.S. v Downing, 753 F.2d 1224. Under that ruling, the prime consideration is the technology's relevance to the trial, and a variety of factors can be considered as tests of the technology's reliability. Those include its relationship to more established modes of scientific analysis, the existence of a specialized literature on the subject, the professional stature of expert witnesses, and experience with nonjudicial purposes of the technology.

Advocates of DNA technology welcomed the Florida ruling but said that many more rulings will be necessary before the technology is firmly established in the criminal justice system. "It's a good start, but it's not by any means the last word for the nation," said Dr. Howard Harris, director of the Monroe County, New York Crime Laboratory and chairman of a steering committee on DNA technology established by the state Division of Criminal Justice Services.

Virginia Man Pardoned After Five Years in Prison: Baliles Acts After Evidence Links Murder to Arlington Killer

(By Dana Priest)

Virginia Gov. Gerald L. Baliles granted a complete pardon yesterday to David Vasquez, who pleaded guilty to murder and has been imprisoned for five years, after new evidence linked the killing to an Arlington man convicted of two other murders.

In a written statement released yesterday, Baliles said his decision followed an "exhaustive analysis" of the evidence by the Arlington County Police Department and the FBI, and he had concluded that "reason and justice" required the pardon, which exonerates Vasquez of the crime.

"I'm ready to cry," Vasquez said in an interview from the Buckingham Correctional Center, from which he was released early yesterday evening. To Baliles he had this message: "I love him. I'm glad he did everything right." Vasquez, 42, said he wanted to hurry to his mother's home in Manassas, where he hoped to celebrate a belated Christmas.

Vasquez, who had been imprisoned since Feb. 6, 1984, was accused of killing Washington lawyer Carolyn Hamm, who detectives believe was raped and then hanged from a pipe in her basement the month before. The weekend before the trial began in 1985, Vasquez pleaded guilty to second-degree murder to avoid being tried for capital murder, which carries the death penalty.

In an unusual move, Arlington Commonwealth's Attorney Helen F. Fahey, whose office had prosecuted Vasquez, asked the governor in October to consider a pardon.

Fahey's request was based on new evidence unearthed during the investigation of another murder, that of Susan Tucker of Arlington in November 1987.

Police believed that the same person who killed Tucker also killed Hamm because of dozens of similarities between the two murders.

The similarities included strangulation but no signs of struggle, and that the victims were raped, their hands bound, their purses robbed only of cash.

Police also knew that the assailant in both cases carried a knife and covered his hands with gloves or socks.

Relying on genetic DNA testing, police linked Timothy W. Spencer to Tucker's death, and in July, a jury convicted Spencer and sentenced him to death.

In September, Spencer was sentenced a second time to death for the rape and murder of Richmond resident Debbie Dudley Davis, who was killed in late 1987.

Fahey said that the blood type of the semen sample found on Hamm matched Spencer's blood type, which was compared only after he became a suspect in the Tucker case.

Fahey said Spencer, who faces a third capital murder trial in Richmond, will not be tried for Hamm's death because of the convictions against him.

Fahey and detectives said they always believed that Vasquez was an accomplice to the Hamm murder. He is a slight man, they pointed out, probably physically unable to have hanged Hamm.

The main evidence against Vasquez at the time of his arrest was a hair fiber found at the scene that was consistent with Vasquez's hair type, a neighbor who spotted Vasquez the night before the crime in front of the victim's home and three long, often rambling conversations Vasquez had with Arlington detectives after his arrest. The conversations were taped, but only one was ruled admissible in court.

Police said during a preliminary hearing that Vasquez, who was described in court as having low-level intelligence, rambled during his statements. Vasquez seemed to be in a trance as he recounted the crime to police, as if it were "a horrible dream," a detective testified.

The detective testified that he had asked Vasquez "to get himself in a state where he can really think about the dream . . . force himself a little bit in order to discuss this dream."

Richard McCue, Vasquez's attorney at the time, said yesterday that during the conversations the detectives fed Vasquez bits of information about the crime and that Vasquez incorporated them into his story. For instance, Vasquez first said he stabbed Hamm, then that he used a belt to strangle her. Each time, said McCue, who has listened to the tapes, detectives told Vasquez he had given the wrong answer. Hamm was strangled with the cord to venetian blinds.

At no point during those conversations did Vasquez request an attorney.

McCue said yesterday that Vasquez did not understand he had that right. "He was not capable of fully understanding his Miranda rights," McCue said.

Vasquez said he was confused and frightened at the time, that he "was repeating everything the detectives were saying," but that he was innocent of murdering Hamm.

The week before the trial was scheduled to begin, Arlington Circuit Court Judge William L. Winston ruled that the third tape was admissible as evidence and that McCue would be restricted in what he told the jury about how the detectives had conducted the conversations.

McCue said the ruling significantly weakened his case. It meant he would not have been able to tell jurors that the Vasquez statements they heard on the third tape were the result of prodding during the first two conversations.

The weekend before the trial, McCue and Henry E. Hudson, Arlington commonwealth's attorney at the time, negotiated the agreement for Vasquez to plead guilty to second-degree murder.

Arlington Detective Joe Horgas, whose work led to Spencer's convictions and Vasquez's release, said last night that he "felt great" about the pardon.

Vasquez said he plans to ask the state to compensate him for what he estimated to be $250,000 in lost wages from the fast food job he held at the time of his arrest.

Imelda Shapiro, Vasquez's mother, said while choking back tears yesterday that she had kept her Christmas tree up and packages wrapped in expectations of her son's freedom.

Asked what she wanted to do upon his return, she said: "Just love him and hug him and thank God he's home. He's suffered too much."

REMARKS BY JOHN K. VAN DE KAMP, ATTORNEY GENERAL OF CALIFORNIA

One year ago this month, I stood before a room full of prosecutors eager to use DNA analysis as a tool for criminal investigations and prosecutions. Many were waiting only for a green light to move forward. Instead, they got a stop sign.

I expressed great confidence in the future of DNA analysis, but grave doubts about its present ability to withstand a court challenge. I felt the same concern for this new technology that a worried father might feel for his 16-year-old son if he showed up one day with a brand new, cherry-red convertible—but no driver's license and no vehicle registration.

The boy might be a helluva driver, but the moment he hit the freeway there'd be a cop in his rearview mirror—and a major dent in someone's wallet.

So I instructed my own lawyers and criminalists not to use DNA evidence until further notice. And I asked District Attorneys to take the same go-slow approach.

Meanwhile, I promised to get the kid a license and some legal plates—so we could all hit the road in style.

Today I want to thank the members of the C.D.A.A. for your patience. You've handled this technology with commendable caution. No one has rushed into court with a bad case that might jeopardize admissibility.

Instead, we have had an opportunity for the science to catch up with our needs, for potential problems to be resolved, and for some intelligent planning.

As a result, I am now able to say to you: "Ladies and gentleman, start your engines." With careful handling, DNA is ready to go to court in California, and ready to win.

This morning I'd like to tell you what's been happening with DNA technology in the past year, where we stand at present, and what we see in California's future.

I'm sure that some of you manage to look very knowing on the subject of DNA analysis without having the vaguest idea what anyone's talking about. So let me remind you that DNA, or deoxyribonucleic acid, is the molecule which carries our genetic code. DNA is the blueprint for our individual traits as well as for the characteristics that we share with all members of our species.

I'll give you an example. Some District Attorneys are tall with white hair. Others are short and wear glasses. But the entire species plans to run for Attorney General some day. That's DNA at work.

There is nothing speculative about DNA analysis. Researchers have been analyzing the structure of this molecule for more than 30 years. Forensic applications are relatively new; but they are based on a huge body of scientific work.

For the purposes of criminal justice, we don't have to do anything too exotic—no gene-splicing or bio-engineering.

We simply conduct a series of tests, called probes, at specific points along the DNA molecule. The result is a series of alternating black and white bands on x-ray film. By measuring the density of the bands, we get a set of numbers which describes that particular piece of DNA.

Since every cell from the same human body contains the same, unique DNA molecule, we can test blood, semen, scrapings of skin left under fingernails, hairs that still have roots attached—any human tissue. It is a method of establishing identity potentially far more powerful than a fingerprint.

Unless they are identical twins—like Arnold Schwartzenegger and Danny Devito—the odds of two people having the same DNA structure are roughly one in 30 billion. Evidence used in court is unlikely ever to use the full discriminatory power of the technology. But that's just as well, since there are only 5 billion people on earth.

DNA is also one tough little piece of evidence. Unlike proteins, which are the basis of many forensic tests, DNA is highly resistant to the forces of nature—like drying and bacterial contamination. Intact DNA has even been recovered from Egyptian mummies thousands of years old.

Using this technique we would nail King Tut on a morals charge; but I believe the statute has run.

While our primary interest is identification of criminal suspects, we should be aware that this extraordinary technology has many other potential applications as well. It can identify the remains of victims. It can establish paternity. It can distinguish serial crimes from "copycat crimes." It can also clear suspects who are falsely accused.

Just last week a carpenter's assistant named Sammy Scheff of Greenburgh, New York, was cleared of rape charges with DNA evidence. Mr. Scheff had been convicted and imprisoned for eight months based on identification by the victim from photos and a lineup. It took DNA analysis to prove that he was innocent.

There was a similar case in San Mateo County last year, though the evidence never got to court. That victim, too, had positively identified a kidnapper and rapist. But DNA analysis convinced the DA not to prosecute.

In England, where the technique was first developed, it is now used to determine whether would-be immigrants are, in fact, related to British citizens.

DNA was first used in England as an investigative tool—and on an extraordinary scale. In 1985 DNA tests were performed on more than 5,500 men in a region where a sexual killer was at large.

Fearing that he would be suspected if he refused to cooperate, and identified if he did, the murderer, a man named Pitchfork, convinced a friend who had already been tested to submit a second blood sample in Pitchfork's name. When police discovered the deception, the killer confessed—so DNA evidence was never actually introduced against him.

Obviously, such uses raise serious questions of privacy and civil liberties—including the dangers and the benefits of screening for genetic traits and diseases. But all such controversy, as well as all usefulness for our work, depends on one question: Is DNA analysis a legally-admissible means of establishing identity?

In California, as in many states, that question will be answered by applying the Kelly-Frye standard, first enunciated in federal court in 1923. In simplest terms, Kelly-Frye says that forensic evidence is admissible only if the reliability of the method has been established, usually by expert testimony.

Any witness furnishing that testimony must be properly qualified to give an expert opinion. Those who introduce the evidence must prove that correct procedures were used in their particular case. They must also prove that the method and procedures have achieved general acceptance in the scientific community.

That was the test which electrophoresis failed in People v. Brown in 1985. The technology was rushed helter-skelter into court. And a valuable forensic technique was lost to us until we could painstakingly re-establish its validity—a process that took three years, plus more trouble and money than I care to think about.

Last year I was fearful that a similar fate could befall DNA analysis. Although the technology was very old by the standards of this fast-moving age, its application to criminal justice was new. Although thousands of scientists were at work in the field, only a handful were working on forensic applications—and none were law enforcement personnel.

The available experts were all attached to just three private laboratories. Furthermore, the most experienced of these regarded its technology as proprietary. So its procedures could not have been verified by an independent government lab even if one had existed.

The California Association of Crime Lab Directors was still trying to validate the techniques used by the private vendors. And my own Bureau of Forensic Services had reservations about validity as well.

In short, we could not conclusively demonstrate the reliability of DNA analysis. Qualified expert witnesses were scarce. And general acceptance in the scientific community was something of an open question.

Under the circumstances, I concluded that it would be foolish to expose DNA to a Kelly-Frye hearing. So I ordered the Department of Justice not to do so, and I asked that others follow suit.

Now, what has happened since that time to change my mind? First, substantial additional research has been published in this area. None of it indicates any division within the scientific community on the use of DNA technology in a forensic context.

Second, after validating its own series of probes, the FBI has started doing DNA case work. As a result, we now have independent confirmation by a highly-respected law enforcement agency on some key questions—like what happens when blood or tissue samples are contaminated? The FBI says that may prevent a DNA typing, but it will not produce an inaccurate result.

A third development has been experienced elsewhere. Thus far, courts in 13 states have ruled that DNA evidence is admissible—including one capital case in Virginia.

A number of these trials have involved strenuous challenges to DNA evidence. Yet no court has refused to admit DNA. At a minimum, it is clear that the supply of qualified expert witnesses has been adequate. It is also reasonable to assume that, if there were a major problem with the technology, it would have surfaced by now.

All of these developments give us confidence that the Kelly-Frye standard can now be met—even though it hasn't yet been done with finality. The first and only appellate decision was published in October. Although the decision was favorable, the case came from Florida which, as the court noted, may not be a Frye state. Nevertheless, language in the opinion suggests that the evidence would also meet the Frye standard.

Meanwhile, here in California, the Bureau of Forensic Services, working with Dr. George Sensabaugh at UC Berkeley, has resolved most of its concerns about validity.

I have here a five-page single-spaced description of the two methods of DNA analysis. But, since I have friends in the audience, I'm not going to read it to you. Suffice it to say that, while we still have some questions about the PCR method, BFS believes that the standard, RFLP method is suitable for casework in the hands of properly trained individuals.

So does the California Association of Crime Laboratory Directors. CACLD has completed its investigation—including submission of 150 samples to the three private vendors in a blind test—and has endorsed the process. Incidentally, a similar blind test of 700 samples was conducted in New York, with equally good results.

At the time that I put the brakes on the use of DNA in California last year, I appointed a DNA Advisory Board consisting of Ira Reiner and Jack Meehan, representing this association; James Anthony and Robert Shiells representing the California Police Chiefs Association; John Zunino and Brad Gates representing the California Sheriffs' Association; and John Hicks representing the F.B.I.

After reviewing the advances in the state of DNA technology, the Advisory Board has officially recommended that I modify my position and support the use of DNA typing in case work. I concur with that recommendation. It is time to take this technology into court.

That is not a suggestion that we rush willy-nilly to trial. On the contrary, it is important that the first presentations of this evidence come in the best possible cases. Every prosecutor who follows behind will be eternally grateful for careful work by those who lead the way. We need to establish clear, solid precedents.

Fortunately, two strong cases are ready to go. For some months now, the Department of Justice has been assisting the District Attorneys of Ventura and Orange Counties with cases involving DNA evidence. Both are likely to go to trial in the next few months.

In Ventura County, Deputy DA Carol Nelson is handling the People v. Lynda Axell, a murder case which was originally set for trial yesterday, but which is now expected to begin in March or April. While no DNA evidence was introduced in the preliminary hearing, it is expected to be used at trial.

The evidence consists of approximately sixty human hairs, some of which have been analyzed by the Cellmark Company. This case will provide a very clear test because there is virtually no other physical evidence, and conventional methods of forensic analysis were attempted to no avail.

Meanwhile, in Orange County, Deputy DA Dennis Bauer is handling the People v. Danny Harris, a case involving as many as 63 counts of serial rape, which is expected to reach trial in May or June. There will be an admissibility hearing in February or March.

This case, too, is a real showcase for DNA evidence. During the period when the crimes were committed, two serial rapists with very similar MO's were working in Orange County. Using conventional methods, it would have been impossible to say which of the two suspects was responsible for many of these crimes. Through DNA analysis, however, suspect Harris has been tied conclusively to five cases.

There are other cases in the works in DA's offices around the state, but these two are likely to provide the first critical tests of DNA evidence in California. We wish the prosecutors well. We are confident that they will prevail.

After we take our first tentative steps in court, we must be ready to hit full stride with this technology. That will be both complicated and expensive. Very few crime labs in the state will be capable of doing this work. And it is important that those who can do it do it the same way.

Researchers have developed more than 500 different DNA probes to date. If LPAD uses one series, while the LA Sheriff's Office uses another, we're all going to waste a lot of time and money. No single agency, no matter how large or sophisticated, can manage this project in splendid isolation. Uniform local, state and federal standards are essential.

The Attorney General's DNA Advisory Board, along with the California Criminalistics Institute, or C.C.I., and the F.B.I., have been working on that problem for the past year. We are now prepared to establish a state-wide system of standardized DNA laboratory work to support criminal investigation and prosecution in California.

The CACLD and BFS have recommended a regional approach, funded on a state/local cost-sharing basis—along the lines of the Cal-ID fingerprint system. Their proposal calls for three to five regional DNA labs in California. One will be run by the Department of Justice. The others will be staffed by host law enforcement agencies.

The state will provide equipment and facilities for each laboratory. Host agencies will provide the personnel. C.C.I. will provide training and general supervision. The result will be an efficient system for making the technology readily available throughout California.

The DNA Advisory Board has accepted the recommendation in concept. And a budget request to fund initial development has been submitted. Unfortunately, the Governor disapproved it for fiscal reasons. So, we will have to take this proposal directly to the Legislature.

We are preparing legislation that will give specific form to the regional laboratory proposal. I expect to be able to make a detailed announcement about the plan, and about additional DNA-related proposals, within the next month.

Make no mistake about it. The future of this technology as a tool of justice in California is very bright.

And yet, there are days when no part of life looks bright. Yesterday I traveled to Stockton to attend the memorial service for the five children who were murdered in their schoolyard. As I prayed with the mourners, I felt that special grief we in law enforcement feel when we are sworn to protect the innocent but we cannot do it.

Usually there is no action we can take at such moments, no consolation except to redouble our efforts to prevent the violence—and, when we cannot, to seek out and punish those responsible.

But in this case I feel there is something very specific that we can do, something very tangible that this organization can help accomplish. We can halt the legal sale of weapons like the one that was fired on those children—and is fired every day on the gang-infested streets of our cities, all to often at policemen in the line of duty.

Military assault rifles must be banned in California. That much we can do in memory of those five young lives.

And, in the broader sense, there is also something else that we can do. We can give police and prosecutors in this state the finest support available anywhere in the world.

We can use new technologies like DNA wisely and well to protect the public. We can use every resource to ensure that justice in California is swift and justice is sure. For, in the end, that is the best and perhaps the only protection we can offer the innocent.●

HATE CRIMES STATISTICS ACT OF 1989

● Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I am proud to rise as a cosponsor of the Hate Crimes Statistics Act of 1989, which is being introduced by my colleagues Senator HATCH and Senator SIMON.

Hate crimes are a growing problem in the United States. The Southern Poverty Law Center reported that in 1988, racial violence was on the upswing, due in part to the disturbing proliferation of violent, racist Skinhead gangs throughout the country. In a special report on hate crimes in 1988, the Klanwatch Intelligence Report notes that Skinheads were linked to four murders and two-thirds of the racial assaults documented by Klanwatch last year.

Crime motivated by religious hatred has also risen over the past year. The Anti-Defamation League reported that in 1988, 823 episodes of vandalism and desecration and 458 acts of harassment, threats, and assaults were committed against Jews, their property and their institutions—the highest number in 5 years.

Hate crimes are on the increase in my State of Connecticut. From 1987 to 1988, there was a threefold increase in the number of anti-Semitic incidents in Connecticut, including the burning of a synagogue in West Haven and the desecration of a Holocaust memorial in New Haven. The latter case was accompanied by vandalism at the Afro-American Culturual Center at Yale University within the same 24-hour period.

Overall in Connecticut, there were 27 hate crimes from July to December 1988. We know that fact because Connecticut has a new law requiring the State police to maintain statistics on hate crimes—a law I was pleased to support as attorney general. That is what the Hate Crimes Statistics Act of 1989 is all about. We have reason to believe hate crimes are on the increase nationally, but there are no comprehensive, accurate, up-to-date statistics kept on the national incidence of such crimes.

Such data would be very useful to law enforcement organizations, State and local governments, the media, antidiscrimination organizations, and the general public. Investigators will be able to assess whether certain attacks are isolated incidents or symtomatic of pervasive problems, whether hate-related violence is more prevalent in certain regions or communities, and whether particular groups are suffering greater numbers of attack.

Organizations such as Klanwatch, the Southern Poverty Law Center, and the Anti-Defamation League do what they can to gather information on hate crimes, but they cannot do it alone. The Hate Crimes Statistics Act of 1989 addresses this problem by requiring the Attorney General and the Justice Department to collect data on crimes which manifest prejudice based on race, ethnicity, sexual orientation, or religious preference; acts which violate the free exercise of civil and constitutional rights.

Collecting data alone will not erase bigotry. But without the facts, we cannot hope to mount a coordinated, national response to hate crimes. Cross burnings are more than "arson." Painting swastikas on a synagogue is more than "vandalism." Such acts intimidate and harass not just the immediate victim, and not just the group represented by the victim, but all of us who believe in the principles of the Constitution.

Passage of this bill is critical to understanding the national scope and magnitude of the problem of hate crimes. It is an important first step toward the goal of eradicating bigotry. The 101st Congress has a significant opportunity to take that step, and I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this legislation.●

1988 CAMPAIGN SPENDING

● Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, the election spending to win a seat in this body has once again set a new record. Through the 1988 election cycle, the sad fact is: the average cost to win a seat in the U.S. Senate was $4,083,308. This compares with just over $3 million in the 1986 cycle.

Mr. President, this again illustrates that we are becoming a "Congress on the auction block"—competing on money and who can raise it, instead of leadership, and who can provide it.

I have introduced a campaign reform bill which calls for comprehensive reform of our system of election finance. S. 137, cosponsored by Senators MITCHELL, BYRD, and 11 other colleagues, is designed to contain overall spending, cap the runaway growth of special interest, PAC contributions, and close, not merely disclose, but close the most dreadful loophole in election law today: "soft money."

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues, Democrats and Republicans, to seriously review this legislation, as well as the recently disclosed figures from the 1988 elections.

I ask that a chart showing these figures be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The chart follows:

[1] Designates winning candidate's party and campaign status: D—Democrat; R—Republican; I—Incumbent; C—Challenger; O—Open Seat.

STUDY SUMMARY

Total Senate Campaign Spending: $197,162,416.

Incumbents: $113,147,118; Challengers: $49,324,449; Open: $34,690,849.

Winning Candidates: $134,749,174; Losing Candidates: $62,413,242.

Democrats: $103,142,489; Republicans: $94,019,927.

Total Spending over the S. 137 limit: $63,017,210.

Campaign Spending would have been reduced 32% had S. 137 been law.

Total PAC Contributions: $49,082,670.

Incumbents: $32,995,535; Challengers: $7,838,749; Open: $8,248,386.

Winning Candidates: $35,575,459; Losing Candidates: $13,507,211.

Democrats: $25,860,338; Republicans: $23,222,332.

PAC contributions over the S. 137 limit: $32,657,652.

PAC contributions would have been reduced by 66% had S. 137 been law.

KEY FIGURES

Incumbents outspent challengers by a ratio of 2.3 to 1.

Of the 4 challengers that won—3 were still outspent by the incumbent and the 4th only outspent the incumbent by 1.4%.

Winning candidates outspent losing candidates by a ratio of 2 to 1.

Democrats slightly outspent Republicans.

PACs gave to incumbents by over a 4 to 1 ratio over challengers (81.2%).

7 Senate candidates got over 50% of their funds from PACs.

9 of the 33 races saw BOTH candidates spend within the S. 137 limits.

10 of the 33 races saw BOTH candidates exceed the S. 137 limits.

Of those that WON these 10 races:

6 were Democrats; 4 were Republicans;

2 were incumbent Democrats; 3 were incumbent Republicans; 3 were Challenger Democrats; 2 were open seat races with 1 of each party.

14 of the 33 races saw ONE candidate exceed the S. 137 limits: 7 were Republicans; 7 were Democrats; 11 were incumbents; 3 were for open seats; all 14 candidates WON.

Of the 24 races where one or both candidate(s) exceeded the S. 137 limits: 17 were Republicans; 17 were Democrats; 19 were incumbents; 8 were challengers; 7 were in open seat races (4 Rep./3 Dem.)

Average cost of a winning campaign for the Senate:

1988—$4,083,308 (up 98% from '82; up 570% from '76).

1982—$2,066,700.

1976—$609,100.

NINETY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF UKRAINIAN NATIONAL ASSOCIATION

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I rise to join the Ukrainian National Association in celebrating its 95th anniversary.

The Ukrainian National Association is a fraternal insurance organization that was founded on February 22, 1984, to provide financial services in the Ukrainian immigrant community. Ninety-five years ago, the organization had 13 branches. Today, the Ukrainian National Association has expanded considerably and has 420 branches in the United States and Canada. It is the largest Ukrainian-American fraternal insurance organization and has over 77,000 members in 28 States.

The group offers much more than life insurance to its members. For the Ukrainian-American community, the Ukrainian National Association provides scholarships and retirement benefits in addition to educational, cultural, and social benefits. Through its many services, the Ukrainian National Association helps to enhance the lives of countless Ukrainian-American citizens.

One of the important ways the Ukrainian National Association contributes to the lives of Ukrainian-American citizens is through the newspapers it publishes. The group publishes a Ukrainian-language daily newspaper called Svoboda, an English weekly newspaper called the Ukrainian Weekly, and a monthly children's magazine called Veselka. In addition, the Ukrainian National Association has financially supported a number of books on Ukrainian history. These publications play a critical role in keeping the Ukrainian-American community informed about events of interest in the United States and in the Ukraine.

While the Ukrainian National Association was organized to assist Ukrainians living in the West, it has continued to assist the friends and families of those living in the Ukraine. The group has continued to make the situation of millions of Ukrainians in the Soviet Union a priority for the Congress and the administration.

I urge my colleagues to join me in celebrating this important anniversary with the Ukrainian National Association.●

"THE HISTORY OF THE SENATE" RECEPTION

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, my distinguished colleague referred a few moments ago to the reception tomorrow to be held in honor of the publication of Senator BYRD's history of the Senate over the past 200 years. I hope very much that all of our colleagues will attend and, more importantly, will actually read the book, because having myself read several of the statements which Senator BYRD has made on the Senate floor and which comprise the volume, it will be most helpful and instructive to us in our own future conduct.

Senator BYRD has so often reminded us of the importance of history in determining the future.

ORDERS FOR TOMORROW

RECESS UNTIL 2 P.M.

Mr. MITCHELL. I earlier had stated, Mr. President, that it was my intention to recess over until 4 p.m. tomorrow, but in order to better accommodate the reception for Senator BYRD, to permit the setting up, I am going to change that until 2 o'clock tomorrow in the unanimous-consent request which I shall now propound.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today it stand in recess until 2 p.m. tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. MITCHELL. I further ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow following the time for the two leaders there be a period for the transaction of morning business for not to exceed 1 hour with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the distinguished senior Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

"THE HISTORY OF THE SENATE" RECEPTION

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank both leaders for their comments with respect to the reception on tomorrow afternoon and evening. I thank the majority leader for his having rearranged the time.

I had earlier told the majority leader that I felt at best the Senate could go out about 5 or 5:30, at the time the reception began, so we would have a good attendance of Senators. But my staff is of the opinion that it is going to take a couple of hours to prepare the premises for that reception. It will occur in the reception room just off the Chamber here, and it will also spill over to the LBJ Room, S-211.

So the majority leader now, with the concurrence of the distinguished minority leader, has agreed to have the Senate come in at 2 p.m. This will allow the Senate to have some morning business and then go out, hopefully around 3 or 3:30. This will give my staff then the opportunity and the time to prepare for the reception.

I do hope that all 100 Senators will be able to attend, and their spouses.

Mr. President, I thank both leaders for the support that they have given to the publication of this volume. It is volume I, and I believe that the people will, in reading it, understand the great amount of time and effort that have gone into the preparation of it.

This book is 800 pages in length, including the footnotes and index, with 270 illustrations, many of which are in color. It contains 39 chapters and weighs 7 pounds, and it will be followed by 2 or 3 volumes in due time.

I again thank both leaders.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND SUBMISSION OF STATEMENTS

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the RECORD remain open until half past 4 this afternoon for the introduction of bills and submission of statements.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL TOMORROW AT 2 P.M.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, if the acting Republican leader has no further business, and if there is no Senator seeking recognition, I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess under the previous order until 2 p.m. tomorrow.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 3:31 p.m., recessed until tomorrow, Thursday, February 23, 1989, at 2 p.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Wednesday, February 22, 1989

The House met at 2 p.m.

Father Anthony Dranginis, pastor, St. Alphonsus Church, Baltimore, MD, offered the following prayer:

O Heavenly Father, we are proud to be Americans and not ashamed to admit that we are Lithuanians. Dear God, keep us mindful, that liberty is not only to be loved and enjoyed but also to be lived, that freedom does not mean the right to do as we please, but rather the responsibility to do what is right.

Grant, O Lord, that these United States of America may always be a fortress of hope and freedom for all the enslaved nations of the world, that the leaders of our country would lead us in the ways of peace and continue to work with courage and wisdom for the freedom of Lithuania and all the enslaved peoples. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON] will lead us in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. ANDERSON led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation, under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

FATHER ANTHONY S. DRANGINIS

(Mr. ANNUNZIO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, it is a genuine pleasure for me to welcome to our Nation's Capitol Father Anthony S. Dranginis, pastor of St. Alphonsus Church in Baltimore, MD, who offered the opening prayer.

Father Dranginis has dedicated his life in service to our country and to his church. He received his bachelor of arts degree in history from Marianapolis College in Thompson, CT, in 1939, and received a scholarship to attend Kaunas University in Lithuania in the fall of 1939. However, the beginning of World War II prohibited him from pursuing his studies in Lithuania. Instead, he became a chemist assistant, and later entered the U.S. Marine Corps in 1943. He served our country with distinction in Saipan, Iwo Jima, and Okinawa until the end of the war.

In 1947, he came to Baltimore, where he became very active in the Lithuanian community, assisting Lithuanian immigrants in resettling in the United States. He also was active in Lithuanian Post 154 of the American Legion, and became commander of that post in 1949. As commander, he helped develop the Post Everlasting Services at the installation of new officers, which is still part of the American Legion State Convention every year.

While working with the Lithuanian community, Father Dranginis saw his true calling. In 1951, he entered Mount St. Mary's Seminary and was ordained as a priest on May 26, 1956. Assigned to St. Alphonsus Parish, he spent 32 years of his priesthood in service to this church, first as assistant pastor and now as pastor. Also, he writes a column for a weekly Lithuanian newspaper, and his column, "The Chaplain's Corner," appears in several publications, including the Free State Warrior, the American Legion magazine, and the Department of Maryland Monthly Journal.

I want to thank Father Dranginis for being with us today, and to wish him continuing success in his dedicated work both in the church and in the community.

EXTENDING TIME FOR SUBMISSION OF COMMITTEE RULES FOR PRINTING IN THE RECORD

Mr. COELHO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time permitted to submit committee rules for printing in the RECORD pursuant to rule XI, clause 2(a), be further extended until March 2, 1989.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZING PRINTING IN THE RECORD OF REMARKS OF CERTAIN MEMBERS IN CONNECTION WITH OBSERVANCE OF GEORGE WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY

Mr. COELHO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the remarks of the two Members representing the House of Representatives at the wreath-laying ceremony today at the Washington Monument for the observance of George Washington's Birthday, the gentlewoman from South Carolina [Mrs. PATTERSON] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RIDGE] be inserted in today's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

REMARKS OF HON. TOM RIDGE

I am proud to represent my colleagues in the House of Representatives today as we remember and honor a great leader, statesman, and patriot, George Washington.

I am equally proud to represent millions of American veterans in saluting the first soldier president, George Washington.

And as citizens, we are all proud to honor an American who served his country so faithfully and well both in war and in peace, George Washington.

He was a man of great vision. He saw a land pledged to democracy and to freedom. He understood the need for constant vigilance and sacrifice to sustain it. First as a soldier and then as president, Washington was constantly striving to preserve what he called the "sacred fire of liberty."

As a veteran, I and millions of other men and women, like Washington and his Continental Army, have tried to preserve that fire of liberty. Washington's service, as all other veterans, was rooted in a desire to protect liberty, both here and abroad.

Today, as we stand before this majestic monument located symbolically in the middle of the capital city, we are reminded that the man for whom it is named, George Washington, is also a symbol for America. His hopes for a land of democracy and justice are today preserved in the many buildings that encircle this monument. His dream for a strong, united and free nation is today a reality.

Reality, because as Washington correctly envisioned, a nation committed to liberty will flourish.

And an enduring reality because, as a nation, we have sustained Washington's commitment to freedom and liberty through vigilance and sacrifice.

Let us today, then, recommit ourselves to Washington's dream. The life of Washington and the American experience is grand testimony that free men and women can prosper and that democracy can overcome any barrier placed in its way. The flame of liberty first lit by Washington 200 years ago continues to lead our nation with its light. As citizens, it is our challenge and our responsibility to ensure that it remains as brightly lit for future generations.

REMARKS OF HON. ELIZABETH J. PATTERSON

It is an honor to speak today at this ceremony celebrating the 257th anniversary of George Washington's birth.

This year, we also celebrate the 200th anniversary of Washington's inauguration as President of the United States. In describing that first election in his book, "Presidential Campaigns," Professor Paul Boller says, "The first presidential election in American history was throughly undemocratic. There were no primaries, nominating conventions, rival candidates, campaign speeches, or debates on public issues; and the American people didn't even get to vote for their Chief Executive. Yet the election of George Washington as first President of the United States was a perfect expression of the popular will. * * * It was never to be like this again."

There was never any doubt among his contemporaries that Washington would be the first President. At a diplomatic dinner in Paris soon after the American victory at Yorktown, Benjamin Franklin, then minister to France, indicated the high regard in which Washington was held.

The French foreign minister opened the dinner by toasting his king with champagne: "His Majesty, Louis the Sixteenth, who, like the moon, fills the Earth with a soft, benevolent glow." The British ambassador then rose to give his toast: "George the Third, who, like the sun at noonday spreads his light and illumines the world."

Franklin spoke last and said: "I cannot give you the sun nor the moon, but I give you George Washington, General of the armies of the United States, who, like Joshua of old, commanded both the sun and the moon to stand still, and both obeyed."

Washington's handling of the presidency was a crucial test for this fledgling nation. Many would argue that our Constitution was drafted with two thoughts foremost in the minds of the delegates. That George Washington would be our first president—and that someone else would be our second.

While many urged him to seize the reigns of power with both hands, Washington rejected their seductive voices. He loved his country too much to place personal ambition ahead of public good.

We honor George Washington today because he embodied the traits that Americans search for in a leader and wish for in ourselves.

He was a man of courage and fortitude in the face of adversity. He was also a man of great patriotism who believed wholeheartedly in the value of a free nation.

More than anything, however, Washington was a man of great common sense. An infant nation looked to him as its first leader with the instinctive trust that the would exercise the powers of this nation's highest office wisely and well. It was his common sense, no nonsense approach to affairs of state that guided this nation through its early years and laid the foundation for future greatness.

As citizens of a republic, we look to George Washington as our ideal. Time and again, he unselfishly answered his nation's call. It is his service to his nation that we celebrate today and must seek to emulate in the future.

In St. Paul's cathedral in London, there is a memorial to the cathedral's architect, Sir Christopher Wren. It says quite simply, "If you would see his monument, look around."

George Washington's monument is more than just this column of stone. As we stand here in this beautiful city that bears his name, look around you. As far as you can see, from the Atlantic coast to far into the Pacific, this nation of men and women of all occupations, religions and beliefs is the memorial to a citizen who placed his country ahead of self to ensure the success of what he called "the fairest prospect of happiness and prosperity that ever was presented to men."

STATE OF AFFAIRS IN OUR NATION'S CAPITAL TERMED A NATIONAL DISGRACE

(Mr. BEREUTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, the state of affairs in our Nation's Capital City is a national disgrace. It is an international embarrassment and dishonors the name of our first President, George Washington.

Today this city is, once again, the murder capital of the country, with accelerating carnage and random violence. More than 50 people have been murdered already this year. That is intolerable. Mayor Marion Barry correctly now admits that there are parts of the city that one should avoid as unsafe. Gross inefficiency and corruption are endemic in this city and drug dealers now, apparently, are threatening the lives or safety of local public officials.

Since there is no chance that a Republican can be elected Mayor of Washington, DC, I call upon the Democratic Members to bring their influence to bear to seek Mayor Barry's resignation, or as a minimum to find candidates to defeat him at the polls. By the people he has hired for his administration, and especially by his personal conduct, he has sent the message to the young people of Washington, DC, and all its residents, that he tolerates corruption, abuse of power, and the drug culture. He seems to say, "Do as I say, not what I do." The police are undercut and hamstrung. The judicial system is tragically deficient. The Mayor seems to answer any criticism or serious reform effort with the charge that it is racially motivated.

My Democratic colleagues, Mayor Barry's personal and mayoral leadership failures are resulting in hundreds of personal tragedies in the city every day. The current situation will shortly and irresistibly tempt the Congress to reassert Federal control over the governance of the Nation's Capital City. If the Mayor can't restore order in the streets and an acceptable degree of safety for the citizens and other visitors to this city, the Federal Government must. I challenge my Democratic colleagues to find a political solution to the tragic leadership void that now exists in the city where Congress conducts its business.

COMMUNICATION FROM CHAIRMAN OF THE HOUSE DEMOCRATIC CAUCUS

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the chairman of the House Democratic Caucus:

FEBRUARY 22, 1989.

Hon. JAMES WRIGHT,
Speaker of the House,
U.S. House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: This letter is to inform you that on this date, I have received a letter from the Honorable Bill Grant resigning from the House Democratic Caucus, effective immediately.

Congressman Grant has changed his party affiliation from Democrat to Republican, thereby vacating his two committee posts.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM H. GRAY III,
Chairman, House Democratic Caucus.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the accompanying documents will be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There was no objection.

Hon. WILLIAM H. GRAY III,
Chairman, Democratic Caucus,
U.S. House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am writing to inform you of my change of registration from the Democratic Party to the Republican Party.

Accordingly, I must resign from the Democratic Caucus effective immediately.

Bill, I sincerely hope that this action does not strain the bonds of friendship we have developed during my service in Congress. However, I am convinced that I can best represent the values and serve the interests of my constituents as a Republican.

I look forward to serving with you in the 101st Congress.

With best wishes.

Sincerely yours,

BILL GRANT,
Member of Congress.

FEBRUARY 22, 1989.

Hon. GLENN M. ANDERSON,
Chairman, Committee on Public Works and Transportation,
House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This is to advise you that Representative Bill Grant's election to the Committee on Public Works and Transportation has been automatically vacated pursuant to clause 6(b) of Rule X, effective today.

Sincerely,

JAMES WRIGHT,
The Speaker.

THE SPEAKER'S ROOMS,
U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, February 22, 1989.

Hon. JOHN CONYERS, JR.,
Chairman, Committee on Government Operations, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This is to advise you that Representative Bill Grant's election to the Committee on Government Operations has been automatically vacated pursuant to clause 6(b) of Rule X, effective today.

Sincerely,

JAMES WRIGHT,
The Speaker.

Mr. ROWLAND of Georgia;

Mr. Scott Allen, of Dallas, TX;

Mr. Norman E. Zinberg, of Cambridge, MA;

Mr. Donald S. Goldman, of Livingston, NJ; and Mrs. Diane Ahrens, of St. Paul, MN.

APPOINTMENT AS MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES PAGE BOARD

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to section 127 of Public Law 97-377, the Chair appoints as Members of the House of Representatives Page Board the following Members of the House:

Mr. KILDEE of Michigan; and

Mr. TOWNS of New York.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE HONORABLE ROBERT H. MICHEL, REPUBLICAN LEADER

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Honorable ROBERT H. MICHEL, Republican leader:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, February 22, 1989.

Hon. JIM WRIGHT,
House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Pursuant to Section 127, Public Law 97-377, I hereby appoint the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. EMERSON) to serve as a member of the House of Representatives Page Board.

Sincerely,

ROBERT H. MICHEL,
Republican Leader.

ELECTION AS MEMBERS TO CERTAIN STANDING COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, by the direction of the Republican Conference, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 85) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 85

Resolved, That the following named Members be, and they are hereby, elected to the following standing committees of the House of Representatives:

Committee on Post Office and Civil Service: THOMAS J. RIDGE, Pennsylvania; and ROD CHANDLER, Washington.

Committee on House Administration: JOHN HILER, Indiana.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LOW INCOME HOUSING PRESERVATION ACT

(Mr. EDWARDS of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, today I am pleased to reintroduce the Low Income Housing Preservation Act along with my colleagues NANCY PELOSI and NORMAN Y. MINETA. The bill will help nonprofit organizations and housing agencies to acquire low income projects threatened by the prepayment of HUD-subsidized mortgages and the termination of HUD low income housing subsidies.

Unless Congress acts at once to preserve existing low income housing, more than 300,000 low income families nationwide could end up on the streets in the next few years. We simply can't afford to let these threatened units slip away. In the counties in our districts, the potential loss is over 17,000 units alone. And I assure you, congressional districts all over the country face the same imminent crisis.

The Federal Government became partners with private owners to build these low income projects, and it has a responsibility to make sure these units remain low income. Our bill provides a sound way for the Federal Government to help States and local governments put threatened low income units into the hands of groups committed to retaining their low income character.

It is time for the Federal Government to rededicate itself to providing affordable housing for every low income family. Congress can take an important first step by preserving low income housing that already exists.

OPPOSING DOT RECLASSIFICATION OF ANHYDROUS AMMONIA

(Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I rise to once again protest the Department of Transportation's handling of an issue critical to our Nation's agricultural production.

That issue being the Department's ridiculous plan to decree that a basic, widely used fertilizer henceforth be treated as a poisonous gas.

Anhydrous ammonia is one of the most beneficial and cost-effective nitrogen fertilizers. For more than four decades it has been used safely. It currently constitutes more than 50 percent of American nitrogen fertilizer supplies.

However, the use of this fertilizer is in jeopardy because bureaucrats continue to promote a plan to reclassify it from a nonflammable gas to a poisonous gas.

This action is unreasonable, and I have introduced legislation to stop it.

I call my colleagues to immediate action because after Thursday, March 9, 1989, the Department will be free to implement this economically destructive regulation.

That action would result in dramatic increases in the cost of nitrogen fertilizer, transportation costs would skyrocket, and insurance to transport the chemical would be prohibitive if even available. And that would only be the initial impact.

Help me kill this ridiculous, ill-advised and inappropriate proposal and move forward on the issue in a productive manner.

Cosponsor H.R. 371.

INTRODUCTION OF LOW INCOME HOUSING PRESERVATION ACT

(Ms. PELOSI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, today I join my esteemed colleague and the dean of the California congressional delegation, Congressman DON EDWARDS, and Congressman MINETA and I are reintroducing the Low Income Housing Preservation Act.

The severe housing crisis this Nation is experiencing will soon become much worse if Congress does not act quickly to address the fact that we are about to start losing, on a grand scale, our dwindling stock of low income housing. The prepayment of HUD subsidized mortgages and the termination of HUD low income housing subsidies threaten 316,481 low income families nationwide with homelessness over the next few years. In San Francisco alone, over 1,400 low income families are in real danger of losing their homes within the next 3 years. By the year 2000, that number will be over 5,525.

The Low Income Housing Preservation Act would enable nonprofit corporations and State and local housing agencies to acquire and maintain the stock of low income housing. To truly solve the problems of homelessness requires not only providing housing for people without homes, but also preventing those people who could easily become homeless from losing their homes.

I commend my colleague Mr. EDWARDS for his pursuit of the preservation of the low income housing stock and I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this important legislation.

LEGISLATION TO PROTECT THE ELDERLY FROM EVICTION

(Mr. GEKAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, last year across the television screens of the Nation there flashed the sad spectacle of a 90-year-old lady being forcibly evicted from her premises and carried out literally for a series of events that led to her not being able to pay the existing debt. The authorities acted because they had no other choice.

But the community, which happened to be my own hometown, reacted very promptly and promised itself that this spectacle should never happen again.

Again, I am introducing a piece of legislation which would amend the Older Americans Act providing for a State plan whereby if the point should be reached of eviction in any case involving a person over 65 years of age, there should be a delay period so that the community's area agency on aging or other agencies can come to the aid of that person and smooth the transition for whatever the legal act should call for at that time. I ask my colleagues for cosponsorship of this legislation.

HATE CRIMES STATISTICS BILL

(Mr. MINETA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, today my good friend and distinguished colleague, JOHN CONYERS, is introducing the hate crimes statistics bill, a bill which is necessary and long overdue.

Nearly every day, I hear of a different tragedy—a beating, an act of vandalism, or sometimes murder—which is motivated by the hatred of one American for another.

The victims are not only the Indian-American in New Jersey, who was beaten to death because he wore a small dot on his forehead; or the recent Ethiopian immigrant in Portland, OR, who was killed because he was African-American; or the family, originally from Laos, who moved from State to State not only in search of work but to escape the brutality which followed them solely because they were from Southeast Asia.

These people are the innocent victims of hate. But as long as this scourge continues, all of us, and our institutions, are also victims.

I could go on and on with a sad and shocking litany of such events. Hate crimes are certainly not on the decrease in our Nation.

What other acts could be more antithetical to our ideals and principles? We are a nation founded on freedom and the concept of equal rights for all. Our greatness comes from our diversity and the blood and sweat of immigrants from every corner of the globe. When one of our citizens terrorizes another because of differences of race, religion, sexual preference, or culture, the very core of our principles is threatened.

There is no question that these crimes and the attitudes which permit them must be confronted. Yet, how can we begin to fight them, when their depth and scope are unknown?

Right now, we rely only on spotty, anecdotal information. This bill sets up a system whereby hate crimes are added to the standard Federal crime data collected.

The hate crimes statistics bill, which has been the subject of hearings and scrutiny, has already passed the House of Representatives. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this legislation, and I look forward to the day when it becomes law. I hope that day is soon.

INTRODUCTION OF HEALTH CARE SAVINGS ACCOUNTS

(Mr. SLAUGHTER of Virginia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SLAUGHTER of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, our Nation faces many pressing health care needs. While the 101st Congress may consider worthwhile proposals to address these needs through an expansion of Federal programs, it is doubtful that the Federal Government alone can meet our Nation's health care needs without first putting our endangered Medicare Program back on sound financial footing.

In their 1988 annual report to Congress, the Medicare trustees estimated that because of our aging population by the year 2005 the Medicare trust fund will be bankrupt and therefore unable to pay promised benefits to current and future retirees. The trustees have repeatedly urged Congress to act promptly to put Medicare on sound footing, or face the prospect of enacting a substantial tax increase, a cut in benefits, or both.

That is why I am reintroducing the Health Care Savings Account Act today, along with 29 of our colleagues. This legislation will allow individuals to contribute during their working years to voluntary tax-favored savings accounts to pay for health care needs in retirement. As an incentive, individuals would receive a 60-percent income tax credit for their contributions, and would be required to use the accumulated funds for their health needs in retirement before making claims on Medicare. By thus reducing claims on—and expenses by—Medicare, our bill can put Medicare on sound financial footing for all retirees, including those who choose not to exercise this new option. Besides financing doctor and hospital bills now covered by Medicare, health care savings accounts could help individuals pay for long-term care insurance, home-care, and prescription drugs.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to protect Medicare's future by adopting the Health Care Savings Account Act.

VACLAV HAVEL

(Mr. KOSTMAYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the prominent Czech playwright, Vaclav Havel, was sentenced to 9 months in prison for participating in rallies protesting the 1968 Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia.

Vaclav Havel has been nominated by the Helsinki Commission to receive the 1989 Nobel Peace Prize. His arrest has been protested, as surely his imprisonment will be, by many brave Czechs.

Appeals on Havel's behalf have been made by leading American literary figures, including Arthur Miller and the Pen American Center—who this week are protesting Iranian persecution of Author Salman Rushdie. Thirty Members of the House have written to the President of Czechoslovakia, Gustav Husak, calling for the immediate release of Havel.

The men who lead Czechoslovakia must not be under the illusion that their acts of repression will go unnoticed anywhere in the world. Neither trade or other relations with the United States can improve until Czechoslovakia demonstrates that it has the courage to join the Soviet Union's first, tentative reforms respecting public debate and personal liberties.

The spirit of Josef Stalin must not be renewed. Free Vaclav Havel now.

CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT AMENDMENTS OF 1984—EXTENSION

(Mr. SCHULZE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SCHULZE. Mr. Speaker, today, I am introducing legislation which amends section 464(c) of the Social Security Act to force delinquent parents to take more responsibility for the care and welfare of their children. Single mothers with adult physically or mentally handicapped offspring often must bear single handedly the financial burdens of the costly care that these special individuals require. My legislation will extend a provision of the Child Support Enforcement Amendments of 1984 allowing the U.S. Treasury to "intercept" a delinquent parent's Federal income tax refund and transfer the intercepted funds to the party owed the money.

Federal law states that submission for the interception of funds may be made only on behalf of minor children. Current law is inadequate because it does not allow for situations where the person owed child support is no longer a minor but remains fully dependent of the custodial parent due to a mental or physical disability. My legislation will, however, extend the law to allow single parents with physically or mentally handicapped adult offspring to collect past-due child support on behalf of the offspring. The past-due child support would be collected from the Federal tax refunds otherwise payable to persons who are delinquent in child support payments. Approximately $39 million was offset in 1987.

This legislation will not add to the national deficit. Aside from negligible administrative expenses, the legislation will carry no cost to the taxpayer. The Department of Health and Human Services has estimated that administrative costs will average $4.50 per case.

I urge all my colleagues to join me in helping single parents with dependent children by making delinquent parents take more responsibility for the care of their handicapped children.

JAPAN IS BUYING AMERICA AT A RECORD PACE

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, President Bush is in Japan to pay his respects to the deceased Emperor Hirohito and that is good and fitting. The problem is while he is paying his respects Japan keeps on bombing us with Hondas and Toyotas. And Congress does nothing about it.

We must be crazy here. One thing is for sure: In Japan they are not reading Mr. Bush's lips; they are counting their dollars.

In fact they are buying America at a record pace and now they are renting it back to us.

The truth is for 1 week of every year Americans work solely to pay back the Japanese banks the dollars they use to help finance this so-called helpful debt service.

The President asked for kinder, gentler America and I think that is good, all except for our trade programs. I think it is time that the nice guy image gets put aside and we do what we have to do.

I think there is only one way to deal with it: Congress is going to have to speak to the pocketbook of Japan or we will be very lucky to have any jobs left in this country.

LET IT REMIND US: THE ACCOUNTING IS NOT COMPLETE

(Mr. MILLER of Ohio asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MILLER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, in a city full of symbols and symbolism, it is only fitting that the very head of our Government include a symbol of ongoing importance and tremendous concern.

The House will soon consider a resolution reserving the Capitol rotunda for ceremonies to be held on March 9 to observe the unveiling of the National League of Families' POW/MIA flag.

The resolution authorizes the display of this moving reminder of our commitment to the missing in action until a full and satisfactory accounting of Americans missing in Southeast Asia is achieved.

I commend the Congress for taking this step * * * one that is * * * in itself * * * historic and noteworthy. In the process of our approving this resolution, let us also make a promise that our Government will consistently endeavor to go beyond the symbolism and make it a priority to resolve this issue once and for all.

We owe the families of these men nothing less than the same full measure of devotion that Americans—still missing—brought to the service of this Nation.

SOUTH DAKOTA: THE "ENABLING ACT" A CENTURY LATER

(Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, exactly 100 years ago today, President Grover Cleveland signed the "Enabling Act" dividing Dakota Territory into two parts, and allowing the people of South and North Dakota to form State governments. Later in the year, both States were officially admitted into the Union.

In 1889, South Dakota was pioneer country. Much of the land was barren and unsettled. Only 3 years earlier, track had been laid for the first railroad into the Black Hills. But the population was growing and optimism was high.

The "Enabling Act" signed by President Cleveland on February 22, 1889, is a legal document. It is full of detail and dictum. Yet, the formal words and phrases of this law don't tell the full story. The people of South Dakota made substance of statehood. They organized a State government, built communities opened schools and churches, and turned much of our prairie and mountains into productive farms and ranches.

Today we observe the legal significance of this date in South Dakota's history. More importantly, we celebrate the power and potential of South Dakota's people. For a century, they have continued to give life and meaning to the words, "Enabling Act."

PUBLIC SAFETY RADIO INTEROPERABILITY

(Mr. NIELSON of Utah asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, county sheriff's Deputy Jim Evans was ambushed and killed by machinegun fire as he pursued a carload of thieves fleeing from a California bank robbery. They were so far ahead of him that he couldn't see them stop and get the automatic weapons out of their trunk. However, city police officers watching from their helicopter did see the killers set the trap and tried desperately to warn Jim on their radio. Unfortunately, Jim could not hear them. Their separate radio systems were not interoperable.

When the Air Florida jet crashed into the 14th Street Bridge in January 1982, rescue efforts were hampered by the fact the public safety organizations were unable to communicate with each other. Ambulances were sitting by the Potomac waiting to rescue people who were already died while injured survivors of a metro accident across town were anxiously waiting for ambulances. Again, the separate radio systems did not interoperate. Amazingly enough, this is not an uncommon occurrence.

Today I am introducing legislation which would require the Federal Communications Commission to set a standard by which all public safety radio equipment would become interoperable. The Commission recently set a national policy for public safety coordination, but, for some unexplained reason, neglected to set a standard to allow all public safety radio equipment to become interoperable. This is a glaring oversight that must be corrected.

Public safety radio equipment must be made interoperable in order to improve rescue operations and save lives. The FCC must set a standard in order to ensure that, in time of crisis, police, firefighters, and ambulance services can adequately communicate to save lives and property. It's time for this unnecessary problem to be solved.

Public safety officers across the Nation support a national standard for radio interoperability. I urge my colleagues to join me in order to save lives and improve safety.

PRAGUE NINE STAND TRIAL IN CZECHOSLOVAKIA

(Mr. HOYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, several weeks ago, I had the privilege, along with Senator DENNIS DECONCINI, chairman of the Helsinki Commission, to nominate the internationally renowned playwright Vaclav Havel for the Nobel Peace Prize. We did so because we admire and respect Mr. Havel's commitment to the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms. We did so because Havel's dedication to human rights has made him a leader in Czechoslovak citizens' initiatives such as Charter 77 and the Committee for the Defense of the Unjustly Persecuted. We did so because he has shared in the creation of new groups—the Movement for Civil Liberties and the Czechoslovak Helsinki Committee—in order to gain his government's compliance with the international obligations it has assumed in the Helsinki accords. And we did so because he has earned the honor and recognition which only the Nobel Institute can bestow.

At the time of that nomination, Vaclav Havel—along with hundreds of others—had been detained for the nonviolent expression of their beliefs. Yesterday, Havel was convicted of incitement and obstructing the police, and sentenced to 9 months in a category two prison—that is, a more restrictive facility usually reserved for recidivists. Eight others remain on trial, and will probably receive judgment today. The true basis for these trials, as is widely known within Czechoslovakia as well as in the West, was their participation in January—along with thousands of other citizens—in a peaceful commemoration of the death, 20 years ago, of Jan Palach. Jan Palach had committed suicide to protest the Soviet-led invasion of his country.

Of the thousands who participated in the January commemoration, Vaclav Havel and eight others have been selected for criminal prosecution. Perhaps the Czechoslovak authorities believe that Vaclav Havel's loyalty to his beliefs can be shaken, or at least tempered, by time in prison. But the notoriously abysmal conditions of Czechoslovakia's jails have not diminished Havel's spirit during his previous two prison terms, and they are not likely to do so now. Even as his sentence was being pronounced, Havel stated, "I will accept the punishment as a sacrifice for a good cause, which is nothing in the face of the ultimate sacrifice of Jan Palach, whom we sought to commemorate."

Perhaps the Czechoslovak authorities believe that Havel's imprisonment may at least serve as a warning to other would-be activists. Yet Havel's selfless and enduring devotion to the cause of democracy and pluralism has earned him the respect of his peers, and the regime's over-reaction has served to solidify Havel's support. At the time of his incarceration in January, hundreds of fellow playwrights, journalist, actors, and other prominent cultural figures signed a petition on Havel's behalf. Since then, the number of those openly supporting Havel have risen to the thousands, as hundreds of scientists, researchers, factory workers and students have joined the call for his release. The Archbishop of Prague, Frantisek Cardinal Tomasek, called the commemoration of Jan Palach "the expression of the real thinking of our people and their yearning for full freedom." Clearly, the regime is now faced with a citizenry which will no longer stand silently by while human rights are trampled into the ground of Saint Wenceslas Square.

Perhaps the Czechoslovak authorities believe that a swift and firm response would stem the tide of dissent and protect Czechoslovakia's international image. Yet this is also not the case. The Governments of the United States, the Netherlands, West Germany, and Austria have all condemned the actions against Havel. In Poland, hundreds of citizens protested the conviction. In Hungary, even the official press has been critical of Havel's trial, and the Hungarian Writers' Union issued a strong defense of his principles and actions.

The trials of the Prague Nine stand in direct contradiction to the guarantees contained within the Vienna Concluding Document. In calling for the release of Vaclav Havel and the eight others, we do no more than call on the Government of Czechoslovakia to abide by the commitments it has pledged to uphold. In addition, the Vienna Concluding Document reiterates the "right of the individual to appeal to executive, legislative, judicial or administrative organs." I urge the Czechoslovak authorities to reconsider the case of the Prague Nine in light of this obligation, and thereby reaffirm Czechoslovakia's commitment to human rights and fundamental freedoms.

STRATEGIC SEALIFT CRITICAL TO AMERICA'S SECURITY

(Mr. PICKETT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PICKETT. Mr. Speaker, last week, the Commission on Merchant Marine and Defense submitted its fourth and final report, which lays out a broad plan of action to reverse the decline in our Nation's maritime resources. This report is an urgent call to action, and I urge my colleagues to review it carefully.

The importance to our national security of the U.S.-flag merchant marine, and the shipbuilding, ship repair, and shipyard supplier industries cannot be overemphasized. The decline of these industries has weakened our trade position and threatened our ability to transport and resupply troops during war. Since 1982, 76 domestic shipbuilding and ship repair facilities have closed their doors, and fewer and fewer young people are seeking careers in the merchant marine.

Without action now, Mr. Speaker, conditions in the maritime industries will only worsen.

With this report, the Commission on Merchant Marine and Defense has provided Congress, the executive branch, and private industry with a comprehensive set of recommendations which, if adopted, will reverse this alarming decline. The time to act is now.

PRINCIPLES OF LIBERTY THREATENED

(Mr. FRANK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, there are few more depressing spectacles now going on than the outrageous continued insistence by the Ayatollah of Iran and other Moslem fundamentalists that they have a right not merely to censor what their own people read but to murder other people who will not bow down to them. The world has not seen in recent years a more outrageous assault on the most fundamental principle of liberty, and it is essential every civilized government do what they can do to repel the assault.

Mr. Rushdie and others who cooperate are entitled to the fullest possible police protection no matter what the cost. Those of the bookselling trade and elsewhere who are backing down in the face of these threats ought to be ashamed and avail themselves of protection, and internationally there has got to be a mobilization. It is bad enough that the Ayatollah Khomeini chooses to deprive the people of Iran of basic rights. The notion that he and Islamic fundamentalists in Pakistan and elsewhere would impose that tyranny extraterritorially is absolutely intolerable and there must be international response to it.

I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that two editorials from the Boston Globe dealing with both aspects of this, the terrible situation in Iran and the extraordinary danger to liberty presented by this worldwide threat, be included with these remarks.

[From the Boston Globe, Feb. 22, 1989]

FEAR IN THE BOOKSTORES

The most distressing aspect of Ayatollah Khomeini's death threats against Salman Rushdie and "anyone involved" in the publication and distribution of "The Satanic Verses" is the decision of three major bookstore chains to remove the book from their shelves.

Together, the three chains—B. Dalton, Waldenbooks and its subsidiary, Barnes & Noble—operate about one-third of the bookstores in the United States. For many readers, particularly those in small cities and rural areas, theirs are likely to be the only bookstores. Thus their decisions will effectively prevent many readers from obtaining copies of the novel, and from being able to experience for themselves its fantasy, its wit and its literary distinction.

In the 10 years of his Islamic Revolution, about the only thing the ayatollah has been able to export is fear—certainly the present campaign does little to export the nobler ideals of the Islamic faith.

That fear of mindless assault—until now an assault directed against people—has been directed at ideas and against the imagination.

Booksellers have a great responsibility in fostering and maintaining access to ideas and the imagination. So great is that responsibility that some of the First Amendment's protection of free speech and expression devolve upon them.

By their everyday business decisions—whether to order a thousand copies of one book and none of another—booksellers shape the cultural life of Americans. It is bad enough when those decisions are made for purely business reasons; it is even worse when they are shaped by the fear of offending someone.

Today that someone is an aging fanatic in a far-off country; tomorrow, it may be a domestic protest group.

As Salman Rushdie wrote last month, after Moslems in Britain burned copies of his book: "How fragile civilization is. How easily, how merrily a book burns." The three American booksellers have demonstrated just how fragile civilization is.

TERROR TOO BLATANT TO IGNORE

Novelist Salman Rushdie is not the first person marked for execution by Ayatollah Khomeini. The Iranian despot has had people killed from Paris to Beirut, from Istanbul to London. While Americans remember best the Marines who were executed by Khomeini's agents in Lebanon, tens of thousands of Iranians have been tortured, raped and murdered in Khomeini's prisons.

The foreign ministers of the European Community were forced to recall their diplomats from Tehran because Khomeini's order to assassinate Rushdie, unlike his other murders, was broadcast around the world.

In the past, when Iranian "diplomats" supervised bombers and assassins operating in European capitals, they tried to maintain secrecy and deniability. Except in the most egregious cases, government officials and businessmen in the target countries could continue to invoke moderating tendencies in Tehran, hoping to cash in on the lucrative contracts promised for postwar reconstruction in Iran.

Khomeini's assassination edict, against Rushdie is too blatant to ignore. Governments that did little to protest Khomeini's systematic violations of human rights inside Iran could not look on passively while he promised millions of dollars, or a place in paradise, to the killer of a British citizen. The ayatollah's public contract on Rushdie's life makes it impossible for the most abject appeasers in European foreign ministries to pretend that the Khomeini regime has ceased exporting terrorism.

Iranian Prime Minister Hussein Musavi expressed his regime's contempt for the European action when he called it "useless maneuver," since it is "the Western countries which need to win Iran's favor, rather than the other way around." This contempt derives not only from Ronald Reagan's secret arms sales to Khomeini but also from the deals European leaders have made with Khomeini's terrorists and hostage takers.

The time has come for the international community to treat Khomeini as the criminal he is. His regime should be subject to an economic embargo and be ostracized from international bodies. Not only because of Rushdie, but because of all the terror Khomeini has loosed upon the world.

EQUALITY IN ENVIRONMENTAL STANDARDS

(Mr. ECKART asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ECKART. Mr. Speaker, to my colleagues I wish to advise them that today I and a dozen of my colleagues are introducing legislation which will place very clearly within the Hazardous Waste Control Act and the Solid Waste Disposal Act the clear intention of the Congress of the United States that all Federal facilities be subjected to the same stringent and strict environmental standards as we expect to be enforced against the other major corporations, State and local governments in this Nation.

Mr. Speaker, it is an absolute tragedy that those who are part of the Federal Government, those in the Federal Government responsible for enforcing important environmental protection laws are the first to walk away from those protections, and that, in fact, under the previous administration's regimen and Department of Justice in the enforcement of laws would not allow or indeed even encourage Federal facilities to be held to the same environmental standards as we would expect from other citizens in the United States. This legislation extends the provisions of the Solid Waste Disposal Act to all Federal facilities, enhances the cleanup, gives States greater authority to effect their rights under the Federal Facilities Act and ensures that all Americans not only are protected by their Federal Government, but are protected from the pollution of the Federal Government as well.

YELLOWSTONE SLAUGHTER OF BUFFALO

(Mr. MILLER of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, the "home where the buffalo roam" has been converted into a slaughterhouse by the policies of Montana and the National Park Service.

Hundreds of buffalo, nearly a quarter of the Yellowstone's historic herd, have been systematically slaughtered because they are wandering beyond the park's boundaries in search of food.

Hunters, who track the buffalo in their four-wheel drive vehicles and blast them from a few feet away, claim to be helping thin the herd. And it is likely some thinning is needed because of the fire which destroyed much of the food supply in Yellowstone last year.

But already, 422 buffalo have been killed, and today's newspapers report that another 225 could be destroyed by hunters. That is one-quarter of the entire herd—in all likelihood, far more than is needed to correct for the loss of food.

The slaughter isn't occurring because it is sound game management. It is because the buffalo are crossing an arbitrary boundary.

If there's another big storm, how many more will leave the park looking for food? Eight hundred? A thousand? The whole herd?

Should all these animals be slaughtered because they cross an arbitrary line on a map?

The Park Service and Montana must halt the further indiscriminate destruction of these historic animals.

If they do not, we should consider legislation to expand the park's boundaries to include the entire Yellowstone ecosystem, including the buffalo.

PROVIDING FOR THE USE OF THE ROTUNDA OF THE CAPITOL TO INAUGURATE DISPLAY OF THE POW/MIA FLAG

Mr. FLIPPO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on House Administration be discharged from further consideration of the Senate concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 5) to provide for the use of the rotunda of the Capitol to inaugurate the display of the POW/MIA flag, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate concurrent resolution, as follows:

S. CON. RES. 5

Whereas America can never forget the sacrifices of our brave servicemen still missing in action, nor the heroic suffering of our prisoners of war;

Whereas the families of Americans missing in Southeast Asia, having suffered greatly themselves, joined together in 1970 as the National League of Families to facilitate and promote the fullest possible accounting for POW/MIAs;

Whereas the official National League of Families POW/MIA flag symbolizes the nationwide recognition that is justly deserved by the missing and unaccounted for servicemen of all armed conflicts; and

Whereas the POW/MIA flag is an effective means of further raising public consciousness on this key American issue: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the rotunda of the Capitol may be used on Thursday, March 9, 1989, at 3 p.m., for ceremonies to observe the unveiling of the National League of Families POW/MIA flag which shall be displayed in the Capitol Rotunda until a satisfactory accounting of all America's POW/MIA's has taken place. The POW/MIA flag so displayed shall be in such size and at such place as the Architect of the Capitol, the Speaker and the Minority Leader of the United States House of Representatives, and the Majority and Minority Leaders of the United States Senate shall designate.

SEC. 2. The Architect of the Capitol may prescribe conditions for physical preparations with respect to the use of the rotunda authorized by the first section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FLIPPO] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. FLIPPO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL], who is the author of the House companion bill.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution provides for the display of the POW/MIA flag in the rotunda of the Capitol and allows the rotunda to be used for appropriate ceremonies on March 9 for the unveiling of the flag.

It is identical as the gentleman indicated, to a resolution I introduced on January 27 here in the House.

Display of this flag until such time as there has been a satisfactory accounting of all our American POW's and MIA's, is a means of demonstrating our national concern and support for our servicemen who are missing in action or unaccounted for.

I can think of no better place for this flag to be displayed. The rotunda, with its statues of great Americans like Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, Jackson, and Grant and the new bust of Martin Luther King is a place fit for American heroes.

The flag will be a continuing reminder that we must not rest until a full accounting of our POW/MIA heroes has been achieved.

There are still nearly 2,400 of our brave citizens who are still unaccounted for in Southeast Asia. I know that President Bush and everyone in the new administration are dedicated to a continuation of the unprecedented efforts of the Reagan administration to uncover all the facts and achieve a full accounting.

In any problem so filled with emotion there are bound to be disagreements as to the effectiveness of the Government's efforts. I am aware of such criticism. All I can say is that however we may feel about the Government's efforts, and I strongly support them, let us unite in this resolution to express our common concern. Let us concentrate really on what unites us—and not on what may divide us.

This Congress, through our Intelligence Committees and our bipartisan House Task Force on the POW/MIA's, is fully dedicated to working with the administration in order to achieve a full accounting.

I, as a former combat infantryman in the European theatre during World War II, I have a special feeling for missing comrades. I know what it is to lose a number of buddies. I know the agony and anguish of writing those letters back home to their loved ones when they were either killed in action, missing in action, or yes, taken prisoner. So this tragedy has a special meaning for me.

The display of the POW/MIA flag in our Nation's Capitol rotunda will be a continuing reminder to all who visit there that we must keep working until the task is completed.

We should continue prodding the Vietnamese Government to be totally forthcoming. Our future relations with that government should be based, I believe, in no small measure on their cooperation in this effort of ours.

So adopting this resolution today sends a message to all concerned about the importance we place on achieving a resolution of this issue. The POW/MIA flag is more than a recognition of a problem. It is a symbol of determination, united efforts, and our continuing hope.

Mr. FLIPPO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution before the House today acknowledges the simple truth that the United States of America continues to owe a great debt to American prisoners of war and those missing in action. The placement of the POW/MIA flag in the Capitol Rotunda reminds both the American people and their Congress of the great sacrifice made by those who have served our country with honor.

We must never forget the brave men who served their country in Vietnam, Korea, and World War II. We must never forget the continuing emotional pain suffered by the families of America's POWs and MIAs.

Until a satisfactory accounting of POWs and MIAs is made, their flag should continue to stand in the Rotunda. The POW/MIA flag reaffirms the dedication of the Congress, the administration and the American people to locating our country's missing servicemen. For their efforts on this issue, the National League of Families deserve both our commendation and our thanks.

Let there be no doubt that the POW/MIA issue will be a top priority in dealing with our former adversaries. We can never have good relations with countries such as Vietnam until this fact is recognized. I am pleased that President Bush has expressed his personal commitment toward progress in this area.

Display of the POW/MIA flag in the Capitol's historic Rotunda sends a clear message to the American people, the families of those missing and our former adversaries: America's POWs and MIAs will not be forgotten. It is a great honor and personal pleasure for me to support this measure, and I urge each of my colleagues to join together in approving Senate Concurrent Resolution 5.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON], who has served with such distinction on our Committee on Veterans' Affairs until recently being appointed to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I thank our Republican leader, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL] for yielding me this time, and I thank him for authorizing this legislation. I look forward with great anticipation to passage of this resolution and the ceremonies it would authorize.

Mr. Speaker, as we speak here today, the work of investigating the fate of our MIAs, identifying recovered remains, and excavating aircraft crash sites is at its highest pitch.

This work would not be possible today without 8 years of investment in resources and concern by one man—Ronald Reagan who breathed life back in to the issue.

To the extent that we in the Congress were able to support him in this—we did so. The agreement to display the POW/MIA flag in the Capitol rotunda was one step we took, to focus continuing attention on this vital issue—a small step, but an important one.

I was proud to join my colleagues, Congressman SOLARZ and Congressman GILMAN, in introducing the House version of the resolution that makes the bill we are considering today possible. As former chairman of the House task force concerned with this issue, I know just how hard these two Members have worked on this issue—as well as the present task force Chairman, Congressman LAGOMARSINO.

My hat is off to these Members for all they have done and are doing.

Mr. Speaker, as sad as I was to see that great man, Ronald Reagan, leave us for California, I was greatly pleased and appreciative that our new President made a point of mentioning our missing men in his inaugural address. I believe President Bush's commitment to continue President Reagan's strong efforts will enjoy the bipartisan support in Congress that is crucial to resolving this issue.

This support is important not just to the President, but to the many personnel and servicemen and women who bear the weight of the hard work that must be done to answer the questions surrounding the fate of these men.

Displaying the POW/MIA flag in our Capitol rotunda will help to show that support and help to keep this issue before us all. I have this week introduced a resolution urging all 50 State governments to take similar action in displaying this flag in or near their capitol buildings. Twenty States have already done so. I invite my colleagues to join me in this effort.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to again thank my colleagues for their support for our missing men.

Also, Mr. Speaker, let me say "Thank you, President Bush, for what you hope to accomplish, and above all, thank you, Ronald Reagan, for all you have already tried to do on their behalf."

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, as vice chairman of the bipartisan House Task Force on our Prisoners of War and Missing in Action in Southeast Asia, I am pleased to associate myself with this resolution, Senate Concurrent Resolution 5, similar to the resolution introduced by the distinguished Minority Leader, Mr. MICHEL, and on behalf of all of us, extend our thanks to our colleague from New York [Mr. SOLARZ] and our colleague from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] for keeping this issue before the Congress.

The 100th Congress approved a resolution calling for the display of a National League of Families POW/MIA flag in the great rotunda until as full an accounting as possible has been obtained. Both the House and Senate have gone on the record strongly in support of this demonstration of solidarity with the families and loved ones of our POW's and MIA's. This resolution now before us quite simply provides the authority to conduct a ceremony in the rotunda of the Capitol to inaugurate the display of the POW/MIA flag.

It is most appropriate that this ceremony take place now, for there is no better time than the beginning weeks of a new administration to send a signal to friend and foe alike that we in Congress have not forgotten our missing Americans.

Throughout his 8 years as our Vice President, George Bush maintained a strong commitment to the POW/MIA issue, as well as maintaining direct personal involvement in the issue. Meetings with officials of the National League of Families since his election as our 41st President indicate that we need not be concerned about the commitment of the Bush administration to a full accounting of all our missing POW/MIA's.

Mr. Speaker, by conducting this POW/MIA flag ceremony in the rotunda on March 9, we will be expressing the shared concern of Congress for the issue and we will be sending an indisputable message at home and abroad, and especially to Southeast Asia, that both the executive and legislative branches of our Government remain united and committed on this important issue.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of Senate Concurrent Resolution 5, which would allow the use of the Capitol rotunda on March 9, 1989, for the unveiling ceremonies of the National League of Families POW/MIA flag.

While the Vietnam war years are becoming a distant memory for many Americans, for the families of our still unaccounted for servicemen, Vietnam remains a daily personal reminder of the tragedy of war and the loss of a loved one.

America must never forget the sacrifices of our brave young servicemen nor the anguish of those families who still as yet do not know the fate of their husbands, fathers, and brothers. It there are U.S. servicemen still alive in Southeast Asia, we must do all we can to bring them home. If not, we must do all we can to identify the whereabouts of those who are still missing in action.

The POW/MIA flag symbolizes a nationwide recognition that a final chapter in the history of United States involvement in Southeast Asia has yet to be written. The flag, located here in the Capitol will serve as a constant reminder of work which still must be done. This resolution should serve as the Congress' continuing commitment to that goal.

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of Senate Concurrent Resolution 5, legislation authorizing the display of the National League of Families POW/MIA flag in the Capitol rotunda.

By displaying the POW/MIA flag prominently in the most hallowed hall of our Nation's Capitol, we both honor those men still listed as missing, and we restate the intent of Congress, the U.S. Government and the American people not to rest until we have a full accounting of all of these brave men.

I would also like to take this opportunity to discuss legislation which I have introduced addressing the plight of American POW/MIA's. House Concurrent Resolution 2 is intended to direct some of the attention on this issue toward those U.S. servicemen still missing from the Korean war.

To many, the Korean conflict is known as "the Forgotten War." The U.S. involvement in what was officially referred to as a "Police Action" by the United Nations bewildered the American people. Coming closely on the heels of World War II, the Korean conflict lacked the same clear-cut objectives, and was fought in a far-off corner of the world. Most Americans knew little about Korea, and cared even less. Eventually, the Vietnam war relegated the generation of men and women who served in the Forgotten War to oblivion.

Today, few people realize that there are many more American servicemen listed as missing from the Korean conflict than from the Vietnam war. In all, there are over 8,000 Americans still missing from the Korean conflict, and of that number, 389 were prisoners of war known to have been alive and in Korean custody prior to the 1953 cease-fire.

While the U.S. Government has worked hard to obtain information regarding the whereabouts of United States servicemen missing in Vietnam, those men still listed as missing in Korea have been largely forgotten by United States officials and the national media. This is wrong. We have the same obligation to these men and their families that we have to the families of those servicemen missing in Vietnam. We have a responsibility to establish once and for all the whereabouts and fate of all our POW/MIA's.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to cosponsor House Concurrent Resolution 2, and to join me in my efforts to focus international attention on the Korean POW/MIA problem.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of Senate Concurrent Resolution 5, which would allow the use of the Capitol Rotunda on March 9, 1989, for the unveiling ceremonies of the National League of Families POW/MIA flag.

While the Vietnam war years are becoming a distant memory for many Americans, for the families of our still unaccounted for servicemen, Vietnam remains a daily personal reminder of the tragedy of war and the loss of a loved one.

America must never forget the sacrifices of our brave young servicemen nor the anguish of those families who still as yet do not know the fate of their husbands, fathers and brothers. If there are U.S. servicemen still alive in Southeast Asia, we must do all we can to bring them home. If not, we must do all we can to identify the whereabouts of those who are still missing in action.

The POW/MIA flag symbolizes a nationwide recognition that a final chapter in the history of U.S. involvement in Southeast Asia has yet to be written. The flag, located here in the Capitol will serve as a constant reminder of work which still must be done. This resolution should serve as the Congress' continuing commitment to that goal.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the Senate concurrent resolution.

The Senate concurrent resolution was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. FLIPPO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the Senate concurrent resolution just concurred in.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DARDEN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

ESTABLISHING THE COMMISSION ON THE U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES BICENTENARY

Mrs. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 83) to establish the Commission on the U.S. House of Representatives Bicentenary, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Louisiana?

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so for the purpose of yielding to the gentlewoman from Louisiana [Mrs. BOGGS] so she may explain her resolution.

Mrs. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] for yielding.

The purpose of this resolution, Mr. Speaker, is, of course, to reconstitute the Commission on the U.S. House of Representatives Bicentenary exactly as it was done in the 99th and 100th Congresses.

□ 1450

The Commission has had the responsibility for overseeing the planning and direction of the commemoration of the 200th anniversary of the House through appropriate publications, exhibits, symposia, ceremonies related to the activities and of coordinating its planning and activities with the Senate Bicentennial Commission and the Commission on the United States Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, the composition of this Commission is composed of eight Members who are appointed by the Speaker in consultation with the minority leader. Six must be current Members of the House and two former Members, and they are equally divided between Democrats and Republicans, and the majority leader and the minority leader are ex-officio members of the Commission.

The Commission has no staff of its own. It is supported by the Office of the Bicentennial staff and other coordinating staffs, support staffs, in the House, and I am happy to report, Mr. Speaker, that the Commission has incurred no expenses in the 4 years of its existence.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, there is no objection to the resolution which has been offered by the gentlewoman from Louisiana [Mrs. BOGGS]. The resolution should have been offered earlier in the year, and the gentlewoman from Louisiana [Mrs. BOGGS] tried to do so, but a number of Members of the House, including myself, objected on a point which was extraneous to the thrust of her resolution, and her resolution is, I think, unanimously endorsed by the membership on this side of the aisle, and in fact those of us on the Republican side believe that the gentlewoman from Louisiana's [Mrs. BOGGS] leadership on this Commission is exemplary, and we are very pleased and proud to have her continue in that leadership position and to have her Commission continue.

However, further reserving the right to object, I would like to make a statement about the item of controversy that caused this delay which inconvenienced the gentlewoman from Louisiana [Mrs. BOGGS] and perhaps other people in the House. The problem centered around the Historian of the House, and for historians who want the history of how we got to have a Historian, the story really begins over in the other body which decided that it needed a Historian to record its heroic and titanic efforts in defense of the public and hired one.

Mr. Speaker, in the U.S. culture, if you see one, you got to have one, so the House decided that it in turn needed a Historian. The matter was brought to the floor of the House, and the House rejected the motion which would have created the Office of Historian. The Office of Historian was subsequently created in another larger act in a way that the Members of the House had no opportunity to vote on it.

Now again, just as the gentlewoman from Louisiana's [Mrs. BOGGS] resolution, there is no objection to the current Historian, a worthy Historian by the name of Ray Smock, who is doing splendid work for the House and for the Commission of the gentlewoman from Louisiana. However, there are a number of people that believe the Historian needs a better administrative home because his job was thrust upon us surreptitiously, or at least without the normal House consideration. He now finds himself attached to the Office of the Speaker. The Office of the Speaker does not need a Historian any more than it needs a piano tuner or a golf pro, and he should have an administrative home, and those of us who caused the problem over this resolution have been assured that sometime later in the year, by another means other than through the resolution that creates this Commission, he will have an administrative home. Perhaps this will be with the Clerk of the House, which would be my preference. Perhaps in another place.

However, Mr. Speaker, I do want to restate a point I make when we extended this job in the rules of the House last year, which was another inappropriate place to deal with the job of the Historian, and that is that we have lots of historians around the Capitol. We have a Library of Congress, we have a Smithsonian, we have a Parliamentarian who works hard on the history of the House, and we have a historical society, and, once the job of the Bicentennial Commission is completed, it seems to me that in the time while we are struggling to work down our deficit and to provide enough resources to do other things which the House must do that we might leave to outsiders and other agencies the task of recording our titanic chores and heroic deeds on behalf of the Republic.

With that modest explanation, Mr. Speaker, I would further reserve the right to object, and I yield to the gentlewoman from Louisiana [Mrs. BOGGS] if she has any concluding statement.

Mrs. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] for yielding, and, if I may follow his yield and give some of the history of the Historian of the House office, it of course, as the gentleman has said, replaces the Office of the Bicentennial which is currently scheduled to expire on September 30, 1989, under the provisions of the law 2 U.S.C. 29(c), and, although the Office of the Bicentennial was originally established by an amendment to the rules of the House, that provision was subsequently enacted into statutory law in the 1985 Legislative Branch Appropriations Act, and the rules provision was repealed. The Act and the original rules provision placed the Office of the Bicentennial under the direction of the Speaker of the House. At some point it is likely to be appropriate, and I do think it is appropriate, to change the authority for the Office of the Historian from the rules to statutory law as was done for its predecessor office. This would provide an appropriate opportunity to shift responsibility for the Office of the Historian from the Speaker's Office to whatever administrative structure the leadership decides is appropriate such as, for instance, the Clerk's Office. Without further amending the rules of the House to shift administrative responsibility, the shift could be accomplished when the legislative branch bill is enacted, and it can take place before next September 30.

Mr. Speaker, I think that this is within the same kind of format that we were able to use previously, and I would hope that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] would be agreeable to it.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from Louisiana [Mrs. BOGGS] for her explanation, and all of us in the House, I think, thank the gentlewoman for the extraordinarily effective job she has done in leading the House Bicentennial Commission, and we thank her for the work she is about to do.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DARDEN). Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 83

Whereas the House of Representatives was established under the Constitution in the year 1789;

Whereas in the year 1989 the House of Representatives will celebrate the bicentennial of its establishment under the Constitution;

Whereas the House of Representatives for the past two hundred years has reflected the will and strength of the people of the United States and has, in its historical development, adhered to our national heritage of individual liberty and the attainment of equal and inalienable rights; and

Whereas it is appropriate and desirable to provide for the observation and commemoration of this anniversary: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved,

SECTION 1. ESTABLISHMENT.

There is established in the House of Representatives the Commission on the United States House of Representatives Bicentenary (hereinafter in this resolution referred to as the "Commission").

SEC. 2. FUNCTIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—It shall be the duty of the Commission to oversee the planning and direction of the commemoration of the bicentennial of the House of Representatives through an appropriate program of publications, exhibits, symposia, and related activities. The objective of this commemoration is to inform and emphasize to the Nation the role of the House of Representatives through two hundred years of growth, challenge, and change. The Commission is directed to develop a program, in consultation with the Office for the Bicentennial of the House of Representatives, that will draw upon the resources of current and former Members, scholars, and the general public.

(b) COORDINATION WITH SENATE BICENTENNIAL COMMISSION.—It shall be the duty of the Commission to coordinate programs commemorating the bicentennial of the House of Representatives with commemorative programs and activities directed by the United States Senate Bicentennial Commission.

(c) COORDINATION WITH COMMISSION ON THE BICENTENNIAL OF THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION.—It shall be the duty of the Commission to coordinate programs commemorating the bicentennial of the House of Representatives with commemorative programs and activities directed by the Commission on the Bicentennial of the United States Constitution.

SEC. 3. COMPOSITION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Commission shall be composed of 8 members appointed by the Speaker (in consultation with the minority leader) as follows:

(1) Six Members of the House, of whom no more than 3 shall be members of the same political party; and

(2) Two former Members of the House, who shall not be members of the same political party.

The majority leader and the minority leader shall be ex officio members of the Commission.

(b) DESIGNATION OF CHAIRMAN.—The Speaker shall designate one of the members of the Commission to serve as Chairman of the Commission.

(c) VACANCY.—Any vacancy in the membership of the Commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment.

(d) DEFINITION.—As used in this section, the term "Member" means a Representative in, or a Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress.

SEC. 4. ADMINISTRATIVE MATTERS.

(a) RULES OF ORGANIZATION.—The Commission may make such rules with respect to its procedure as it considers necessary.

(b) QUORUM.—A majority of the members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

SEC. 5. POWERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—In order to carry out its functions, the Commission is authorized to sit and act at such times and place within the United States, whether the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, and to hold such hearings as it deems necessary.

(b) ACQUISITIONS.—The Commission is authorized to acquire any work of art, historical object, document or material relating to historical matters, or exhibit for placement in the House wing of the Capitol or the House office buildings.

SEC. 6. STAFF.

The Commission shall be staffed by the Office for the Bicentennial of the House of Representatives and shall have full supervisory powers over such Office. The Commission may also draw upon the staff support of such other employees of the House or its support agencies as may be agreed to by mutual consent.

SEC. 7. PAYMENT OF EXPENSES.

The expenses of the Commission shall be paid from money appropriated to the Office for the Bicentennial of the House of Representatives.

SEC. 8. PERIODIC REPORTS.

The Commission may submit periodic reports on its activities to the House. Any such report which is made when the House is not in session shall be filed with the Clerk of the House.

SEC. 9. TERMINATION.

The Commission shall cease to exist at the end of the 101st Congress, unless otherwise provided by law or resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives:

WASHINGTON, DC,
February 21, 1989.

Hon. JIM WRIGHT,
The Speaker, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Pursuant to the permission granted in Clause 5 of Rule III of the Rules of the U.S. House of Representatives, I have the honor to transmit five sealed envelopes received from the White House at 2:51 p.m. on Tuesday, February 21, 1989 and said to contain the following messages from the President:

(1) Transmitting the annual reports of the Department of Transportation for Fiscal Years 1985, 1986, and 1987;

(2) Transmitting the Fiscal Year 1987 annual report on mine safety and health activities as submitted by the Secretary of Labor;

(3) Transmitting the Annual Report of the ACTION Agency for Fiscal Year 1988;

(4) Transmitting the annual report of the National Endowment for Democracy for Fiscal Year 1988; and

(5) Transmitting the Supplementary Agreement Amending the Agreement between the U.S.A. and the Swiss Confederation of Social Security, consisting of two separate instruments—a principal agreement and administrative agreement.

With great respect, I am

Sincerely yours,

DONNALD K. ANDERSON,
Clerk, House of Representatives.

ANNUAL REPORTS OF THE DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Committee on Public Works and Transportation, the Committee on Energy and Commerce, and the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries:

(For message, see proceedings of the Senate of today, Wednesday, February 22, 1989.)

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE ACTION AGENCY—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

(For message, see proceedings, of the Senate of today, Wednesday, February 22, 1989.)

SUPPLEMENTARY AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AND THE SWISS CONFEDERATION ON SOCIAL SECURITY—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES. (H. DOC. NO. 101-27)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed:

(For message, see proceedings of the Senate of today, Wednesday, February 22, 1989.)

ANNUAL REPORT OF NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR DEMOCRACY, 1988—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

(For message, see proceedings of the Senate of today, Wednesday, February 22, 1989.)

ANNUAL REPORT ON MINE SAFETY AND HEALTH ACTIVITIES, 1987—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

(For message, see proceedings of the Senate of today, Wednesday, February 22, 1989.)

THE ABSURD 25 PERCENT "CHICKEN WAR" DUTY

(Mr. FRENZEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, on January 4, 1989, the U.S. Customs Service reversed longstanding policy and caused a tenfold increase in the duty on sport/utility vehicles and passenger vans by classifying all multipurpose vehicles as trucks. This had the effect of subjecting them to the 25-percent "chicken war" truck tariff rather than the 2.5-percent duty applicable to cars. As a result of this decision, U.S. dealers of foreign-made multipurpose vehicles, which had relied on longstanding Customs' policy and practice in entering multipurpose vehicles into the United States as cars, were confronted overnight with a tenfold tariff increase, without the usual notice or any opportunity to comment.

Along with a number of my colleagues, I wrote to the Secretary of the Treasury to express my deep concern about the Custom Service's action. I am pleased that the Department rescinded the Custom Service's decision last week and announced new criteria by which to judge whether a multipurpose vehicle is a car or a truck.

In essence, the Department decided generally to continue to classify as cars all four-door multipurpose vehicles and all passenger vans. These vehicles make up the fastest growing segment of the market. Unfortunately, the Department's decision will continue to classify two-door sport/utility vehicles as trucks of the Treasury subject to the 25-percent tariff.

There has been criticism of the Treasury ruling and the criteria it used in making this distinction. It can be argued that many of these vehicles are used chiefly as passenger vehicles as well. I myself urged that all such vehicles be described as cars subject to the 2.5-percent tariff. On the whole, however, I think the Department made a prudent decision, one that will have broad benefits for consumers and will avoid a trade war with some of our largest trading partners. The Department did not create the absurd 25-percent "chicken war" duty. It did its best to provide a rational solution to a Customs Service blooper and a bad law.

THE DECLINE OF U.S. TECHNOLOGY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. CAMPBELL] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of California. Mr. Speaker, there was a time when the United States was the principal manufacturer of semiconductors in this world, and that time has passed.

There was a time when the United States was the only manufacturer of VCR's.

There was a time when the United States was the manufacturer of electronics, exclusive and the best.

There was a time when the United States made steel and automobiles and it did not have any serious competition.

As we extend into world trade and into the higher technology aspects of world trade, it is essential that we unleash the genius of the American economic system, and to that end particularly to allow the U.S. companies who wish to pool their research to pool their capital and to pool risk to do so.

In 1984 we passed the National Cooperative Research Act. This allowed American companies who wished to pool their research and development to do so, but it had a critical shortage. It stopped at the manufacturing level. It did not allow American companies who wished to take their thoughts, the product of their innovation, and make the product to do so. It did not allow American companies to collaborate and to develop its commercialization of those products.

This is critical to allow. The reason is that so much is learned not only from the research and development, but from the manufacturing of the good itself and so much is learned from talking with the customers and learning from them what problems they have, particularly in high technology, but not exclusively in that area. It is critical as well that the U.S. manufacturers get the opportunity that foreign manufacturers have.

In order to achieve this, I have introduced and joined my colleague from Virginia, Congressman RICK BOUCHER, in this bill, H.R. 1024. H.R. 1024 would allow American firms to take the products of their minds, research and development, and commercialize and bring that back into the world of economic competition.

An example serves to prove how important this is. Right now we have Sematech, a consortium of manufacturers of semiconductor technology, operating in Austin, TX.

Dr. Robert Noyce is the chief executive officer of Sematech. I spoke with him about this bill. He pointed out to me that right now if that consortium makes a silicon chip, it has to throw it away because it would be against the law to allow those firms to collaborate beyond the research and development stage.

This bill is necessary. Consider where we stand in just one field, high technology. The United States has gone from a surplus of $26 billion in high technology in 1981 to a surplus of less than $600 million in 1987. Indeed, the 1986 high technology trade balance was in deficit.

Now, there are several solutions. There are some who suggest that the answer is that America erect trade barriers so that we keep out foreign competition. There are some who suggest that America as a government put money into particular industries, choosing which ones to support. There are some who would take the American economy and re-create in it the Japanese economy. I do not think so.

The genius of the American system is in its free enterprise and its entrepreneurship. The genius of the American system is in harnassing that ability of individual thinkers to take their products, commercialize and sell them, and that is precisely what this bill does.

□ 1510

It is not an attempt to replicate the Japanese experiment in America. It, rather, harnesses the unique genius of the American economy.

Mr. Speaker, the time is short. We must support the opportunity for American firms to collaborate among ourselves so that we can better compete with foreign firms. I ask all of my colleagues to support this bipartisan effort, and I would like to conclude with that one point.

Please note I speak on behalf of a bill which I have coauthored with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BOUCHER], recognizing support from both sides of the aisle, recognizing support from the administration.

In the words of Commerce Secretary Mosbacher and Attorney General Thornburgh, it is essential that this be bipartisan, and it is essential it be done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. DYMALLY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

[Mr. DYMALLY addressed the House. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to defer my special order for this moment and let the following speaker go ahead, and I will come in after him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DARDEN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

THE CONGRESSIONAL SCHOLARSHIP FOR SCIENCE AND MATHEMATICS ACT OF 1989, AND THE EDUCATION AND SAVINGS ACCOUNT ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COSTELLO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support two bills that I have cosponsored, H.R. 343 and H.R. 70.

H.R. 343 establishes the Congressional Scholarship for Science, Mathematics, and Engineering Act of 1989. As Members know, the National Science Foundation's efforts in science education remains far below the level of efforts made by the NSF in the mid-1960's.

Mr. Speaker, at the same time American high school students are scoring dead last on international science and math exams. Interest in science has fallen sharply at the college level, and women and minorities remain in large part nonparticipants.

I have cosponsored H.R. 343 to create two significant scholarships each year based in each congressional district to be awarded through an NSF merit-based review to a bright young man or woman to pursue science, math, or engineering at the college level.

Considering the strong science and math education programs of Japan, the Soviet Union, and others, these congressional scholarships for science, math, and engineering could make an important contribution to our national interest.

Mr. Speaker, the other bill I have cosponsored and which I ask my colleagues to support is H.R. 70, a bill that in my opinion would help make it much easier for middle-income families to save for the high cost of college tuition. The right to a good, affordable education is one that should be given to every American family. This bill will allow families to put up to $1,500 a year in a special savings account to help save for that goal.

The Education and Savings Account Act is modeled after the highly successful IRA, [individual retirement account] legislation.

In contrast, this account is tax free, and families will be able to draw on it at any time without penalty as long as it is used to further the college education of their children or for vocational training expenses. The bill is also similar to the IRA by allowing families to establish the account at banks and savings institutions, where as it matures it serves as a valuable source of investment capital to fuel the private economy.

If the family begins to save early, the interest gained on this account can add up to sizable amounts by the time the child is ready to go to college.

Mr. Speaker, the future of the country depends greatly upon how prepared our young men and women are to assume responsibility. It is our responsibility to see that they are given the opportunity for a good, affordable, quality education, and I ask my colleagues to join me in supporting H.R. 343 and H.R. 70.

A SALUTE TO BILL YOUNG FOR HIS LEADERSHIP IN ESTABLISHING THE NATIONAL BONE MARROW REGISTRY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LIVINGSTON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, the Appropriations Subcommittee on Defense I serve on is charged with overseeing spending decisions on thousands of important national defense programs that total almost $300 billion.

Today, however, I want to tell you about a small program that few people are aware of, but one that our subcommittee members are extremely proud of because it is saving the lives of people with life-threatening blood disorders. The program is the National Bone Marrow Donor Registry, a national computer network that matches bone marrow donors with those people in need of a bone marrow transplant.

Our subcommittee's involvement and the ensuring success of this program has been due to the leadership of my colleague from Florida and a distinguished member of the subcommittee, BILL YOUNG. He made our committee aware in 1987 of the lack of a national registry to match bone marrow donors and recipients and it was BILL YOUNG who for the past 3 years has included funding in the defense appropriations bill to allow the Department of the Navy to issue contracts to the American Red Cross and several blood banks to make the concept of the registry a reality.

The St. Petersburg Times, of St. Petersburg, FL, recently ran an excellent story about the history of the National Bone Marrow Registry and about BILL YOUNG's efforts to get the registry off the ground. Because of his work, the registry became operational in December 1987 and in the past 14 months has resulted in 88 matches between donors and recipients. These are children and adults who were in need of a bone marrow transplant to save their lives but for whom they had no relative to serve as a compatible donor. Without the registry, the possibility that these 88 would have had a transplant was extremely remote.

The story which follows my remarks details how BILL YOUNG became aware of the need for a registry through his personal experience with a little girl suffering from leukemia who ultimately died because doctors could not find a matched bone marrow donor. The story also discusses the efforts of BILL YOUNG to convince Federal health officials of the importance of this program. His work has been so successful that in the next few weeks, oversight for the registry will be transferred from the Navy to the National Institutes of Health where it can be used to expand Federal health research efforts.

What is not included in this story is a full understanding of all the behind the scenes work BILL YOUNG put into this program without any expectation of receiving credit or publicity for his efforts. His motivation simply was to fill a need for some type of system where people in need of a bone marrow transplant could find a matched donor, giving them a chance to survive an otherwise terminal disease. It is this drive and determination to serve the American people that makes me proud to serve in this body and on the Appropriations Committee with my friend and colleague BILL YOUNG.

THEIR ONLY HOPE

(By Larry King)

WASHINGTON.—Greg Powell's call came in October. Five months earlier, Powell had offered to make an unusual sacrifice that most people have never heard of. Now officials at a Fort Lauderdale blood bank were on the phone, wanting to know whether his offer still stood.

Yes it did, Powell told them.

On the Monday before Thanksgiving, the 41-year-old Boca Raton resident checked into Shands Teaching Hospital in Gainesville. He lay on his stomach while attendants numbed the lower half of his body.

Two physicians stood beside Powell and inserted two long needles through the right and left sides of his pelvis. For the next half hour they poked syringes through the openings and extracted about two liters of marrow from within the bone.

The next morning, with only minor soreness, Powell hopped into his car and drove off to see relatives in Jacksonville. His part was completed.

His marrow, meanwhile, was flown to Los Angeles, where doctors let it drip into the bloodstream of a young woman dying of aplastic anemia. Within days the marrow found its way into the woman's bones and began to manufacture healthy blood.

That much of the transplant succeeded, Powell was told later. But within a month the woman died of other complications. He was never told her name.

"They kind of control the communications you have with the patient," he says. "But I thought it would really have been neat for her to get better, you know, and then sometime we could have written or called each other."

His disappointment aside, Powell's gesture does appear to have made a small bit of Florida medical history. So far as he and his doctors can tell, he was the first Floridian to donate marrow to a recipient who is not a family member.

Bone marrow transplants are a last resort for many peope dying of blood dieases such as leukemia. Thousands are performed each year, and more than half either save or significantly extend the recipients' lives.

Until recently, though, most were limited to patients with family members whose marrow matched well enough to try a transplant. For the other 70 percent who need transplants but don't have an acceptable family donor, most were out of luck. Fewer than 100 non-family transplants occurred between 1979 and 1987.

That's changing, thanks to a curious alliance of politicans, military officials, medical experts and concerned parents. A national computer network has been established to help match donors with recipients.

Plans for the National Bone Marrow Donor Registry began in 1986, when about $3.5-million in start-up money was slipped into, of all things, a defense appropriations bill. The money went to the Navy, which contracted the work out to the American Red Cross and other blood-collection organizations.

Today the registry lists about 28,000 potential donors such as Greg Powell.

Any healthy adult under 55 years of age can sign up for the registry. Each person is listed according to his or her human leukocyte antigen (HLA) type, a combination of six tissue factors.

Thousands of HLA combinations are possible, some more common than others. For a marrow transplant to succeed, a near-perfect match is necessary.

"The problem is that most of the patients that need these transplants are very sick, so they don't have several months to try and find a donor," says Dr. David Stroncek, medical director for the registry in St. Paul, Minn. "Usually it's only a matter of several weeks before they die, so time becomes a critical issue."

Once a potential donor is matched to a recipient, he or she undergoes counseling to make sure they want to go through with the transplant. Because recipients undergo treatment to destroy their own marrow before a transplant, a last-minute refusal by the donor would be fatal.

The registry went into operation in late 1987. From then through the middle of last week, 88 transplants were performed using the registry. Of those, well over half appeared to be successful.

Right now about 12 to 15 transplants per month are arranged through the registry. Most donors learned about the program through involvement with local blood banks.

Registry officials are hoping that the word will spread and that the number of donors will grow to at least 100,000 over the next few years, which would greatly increase the chances of successful matches.

Bone marrow transplants began in the 1960s, but not until a decade later did the first transplant between unrelated parties occur.

In 1979, a girl named Laura Graves became the first such recipient. She was dying of a blood disorder and her father Robert, as a last resort, took her to a Seattle hospital for the experimental transplant. Laura's HLA type was relatively common, Graves says, and two potential donors were on file there.

"It was totally experimental," says Graves, a dairy farmer from Fort Collins, Colo. "We were the first because I showed up, that's all. I came at the right time. Many forces worked together there."

The transplanted marrow functioned well inside Laura's body, but she died a year later of other complications. Her father started devoting time to setting up local donor registries in various cities.

"It was very splintered and wasn't working that much," Graves says. "We decided we'd better do something better. So we started to appeal to the political world and found a sponsor in Sen. Paul Laxalt from Nevada."

Beginning around 1983, Laxalt, Graves and their allies tried to set up a national registry, but found little interest. Some medical experts still regarded marrow transplants as experimental.

In 1986, Laxalt finally slipped some start-up money for the registry into a defense appropriations bill, Graves said. And, like Graves, he had a personal stake.

"There was some interesting byplay," Graves recalls. "One of his staff members had a child with leukemia along about that time."

But Laxalt retired that year, and the program needed a new congressional champion.

That person turned out to be Republican Rep. C.W. Bill Young of Pinellas County. Young has worked hard to keep money flowing to the program, Graves says.

"He has really become our lead person in Congress now," Graves says. "To take on a cause like that isn't normal. There was no family involved, nothing like that. There was a constituent involved."

Brandy Bly was an unusual constituent. She was a 10-year-old girl from Dunedin who spent half of her life battling cancer.

Young met Brandy in 1986, when he helped arrange for her to meet President Reagan at a rally in Miami. A week earlier, the girl had met George and Barbara Bush during an appearance in Clearwater.

"Barbara Bush was just a sweetheart," recalls Brandy's mother, Caron Pappas. "I remember her patting me on the arm and saying, 'Honey, I know what you're going through.' " The Bushes had a daughter who died of leukemia early in their marriage.

After that, Young and his wife Beverly continued to visit Brandy at All Children's Hospital in St. Petersburg.

"Brandy was probably the only child in the United States who had a U.S. congressman sitting on her bed playing Monopoly," her mother says. "Bill was great about that."

Brandy, in turn, would make jewelry and trinkets from kits and give them to the Youngs. Her mother didn't realize it then, but Brandy wrote diary notes worrying whether her mother would be all right if she died.

"She was very smart. She knew exactly what was happening to her," Young says. "She knew that she didn't have much of a chance, but she was determined that she was going to live. It was really something to see the courage that little girl had."

Brandy was diagnosed as having cancer of the lymph nodes when she was 6. Chemotherapy made it disappear for a while, but later it developed into leukemia.

By the time Brandy turned 10, her chances of living much longer were flagging.

"When the question of a bone marrow transplant came up as her only hope, she had no siblings," Young says. Because the registry did not yet exist, "they just couldn't find a donor."

In February 1987, Brandy was taken to a hospital in Minneapolis, where doctors extracted her own marrow, treated it with chemicals to remove the cancer, and reintroduced it into her body. In the meantime, Brandy underwent huge doses of radiation.

After three months in intensive care, Brandy went home. But the radiation had caused significant brain damage.

On Monday, May 11, 1987, Young stood in Congress and asked to address the House of Representatives.

"Mr. Speaker, Brandy Bly died Saturday . . ." Young said. "The irony of Brandy's story is that when her little body stopped functioning it was totally free of the terrible leukemia and had been for more than 100 days."

Could a registry have made a difference?

"I do believe her chances would have been better," says Mrs. Pappas, "but I'm not God. Had she been allowed the transplant early on, then her body possibly would have been strong enough to fight it off."

Since then, Young has helped keep money flowing to the program, and it is now being transferred from the Navy to the supervision of the National Institutes of Health.

"It will grow," Young says of the registry, "and a lot of people who might not have survived will be alive and well because of it. It's pretty exciting."

THE GULF OF MEXICO MARINE AND COASTAL RESOURCES PROTECTION ACT

Mr. Speaker, today I am reintroducing legislation—which I first introduced in the 100th Congress—to address the serious problem of coastal wetland erosion in Louisiana and to protect our Gulf of Mexico marine and coastal resources.

While broad legislation, which I support, has already been introduced in an attempt to address the loss of our Nation's coastal wetlands, I believe the legislation I am introducing today is critical to the national debate on this issue if Congress is to develop a final bill that represents a fair and realistic solution to this entire issue.

The specific legislative solution that I am proposing is necessary because the loss of Louisiana coastal wetlands represents approximately 80 percent of the total national coastal wetlands loss.

Louisiana's coastal wetlands are eroding at a rate estimated to be 60 square miles per year.

Since 1900, Louisiana has lost over 2,100 square miles of coastal wetlands, an area one and two-third times the size of Rhode Island. Unless these losses are reversed, the remaining Louisiana coastal wetlands will disappear in our lifetime.

If this is allowed to occur, this Nation will lose one of the most productive ecosystems in the world that produces 27 percent of our Nation's annual commercial seafood harvest. At least 98 percent of the entire Gulf of Mexico's commercial fisheries species and 75 percent of the volume of the commercial seafood harvest spend part of their life cycle in the Louisiana's coastal wetlands. These wetlands also produce 40 percent of the animals supporting our Nation's fur industry, and they represent the southern end of the national Mississippi Flyway, which constitutes a vital habitat for the breeding, wintering and migration of wild birds and waterfowl.

Mr. Speaker, the legislation I have introduced addresses the Louisiana coastal wetlands loss problem; and it protects our Gulf of Mexico marine and coastal resources at the site of the highest concentration of damage. Indeed, it is a very real national emergency. Just as Congress has recognized and begun to address the unique regional problems of the Chesapeake Bay and its impact on the Atlantic Coast, it is likewise imperative that we do not ignore the Louisiana coastal wetlands problem and its significant impact on the Gulf of Mexico region and this Nation.

To his credit, President Bush, as a candidate and as President, has committed his administration to a strong wetlands policy, a national goal of "no net loss of wetlands." Both the Environmental Protection Agency and the U.S. Corps of Engineers have devoted new and additional resources to this serious problem. Many of our national and state environmental and industry organizations have already made wetlands protection and enhancement a top priority in their education and funding efforts. I sincerely believe the legislation I am reintroducing today still addresses many of the key issues and solutions for wetlands protection and enhancement these diverse groups advocate.

Most importantly, this legislation, for the first time, would unite most Federal and State governmental authorities, industry, environmental, hunting, fishing, and landowner representatives to develop, once and for all, a comprehensive corrective action plan for our wetlands.

This legislation, the Gulf of Mexico Marine and Coastal Resources Protection Act, authorizes the creation of a Commission consisting of key Federal, State, and local representatives who will provide directly to Congress within 2 years a specific and comprehensive action plan to reduce the loss of Louisiana coastal wetlands and return these wetlands to a natural and productive state. In doing so we will also protect the marine resources of the entire Gulf of Mexico.

This Commission will provide, for the first time, a coordinated policy and action plan for dealing with wetlands loss. The Commission's existence is authorized for 15 years to monitor the implementation of the action plan once it is developed. Such sums as necessary are authorized for fiscal years 1989 through 1992 for the Commission to develop the action plan and conduct its duties. Funding for projects to be recommended in the action plan has not been authorized in this bill. While it is certain that the protection of our wetlands will not come cheaply, it would be premature to set funding authorization levels that could be inaccurate for projects for which technical and engineering requirements and cost estimates will not be available until the action plan is submitted to Congress. However, this legislation does authorize cost sharing levels for these future projects. The costs of implementing projects included in the final action plan would be funded, in most instances, on a cost sharing basis, with the Federal Government paying 75 percent of the costs and non-Federal interests paying 25 percent.

Commission members include: Two cochairmen, the Secretary of the Army for Civil Works and the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency; the Secretaries of Agriculture, Interior and Commerce; the Chairman of the Gulf of Mexico Marine Fisheries Council; State of Louisiana department leaders with jurisdiction over wetlands; representatives from the commercial and sports fisheries industries, hunters' associations, landowners' associations, and environmental groups in Louisiana; and, as an advisory committee to the Commission, the Governors of Gulf of Mexico coastal States. The Commission's broad representation at the Federal, State, and local levels is the only way to develop an effective policy for dealing with wetlands erosion along the Louisiana coastline, and, ultimately, the rest of the Nation.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation also directs the Commission to analyze and consider some specific but controversial solutions in developing a final action plan to revitalize our coastal wetlands. One key policy issue this legislation addresses is whether the mission of the U.S. Corps of Engineers must be amended to include coastal wetlands protection, enhancement and restoration as an equal element with the corps' navigation and flood control missions. The magnitude of the wetlands erosion problem demands that we seriously consider all of these solutions and more. However, the Commission's broad representation as well as a public comment period on the action plan will ensure that every possible solution, from freshwater-sediment diversion to water control structures, will be developed and addressed in an equitable manner.

Finally, this legislation also specifically addresses the national policies that have caused our coastal wetlands loss. By including such specifics in the bill, I merely want to emphasize to my colleagues that these important national policies and activities, which many in Congress—including myself—have supported in the best interest of our citizens, are also responsible for most of our wetlands erosion.

Therefore, it is only equitable that we take further and more specific action on the Federal level and in Congress to address the serious problem of wetlands erosion. Though our efforts have increased over the years, there is still no coordination at all levels of Government, nor is there a coordinated and comprehensive policy to address this wetlands issue. With this legislation, Congress can take immediate action to set as well as coordinate wetlands policy for our Nation's largest and most severely impacted area and subsequently apply this policy to the remainder of the Nation's coastal wetland areas.

I urge my colleagues in Congress to support this legislation in concert with other initiatives that address our Nation's serious wetlands erosion problem.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BEREUTER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

[Mr. BEREUTER addressed the House. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.]

LITHUANIAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor for me to reserve this special order to commemorate the 71st anniversary of Lithuanian Independence Day, and I would like to thank all of my colleagues in the House of Representatives joining me today in tribute to the brave people of Lithuania who continue in their daily struggle to achieve freedom for their beloved homeland.

On February 16, 1918, 71 years ago, the Lithuanian people regained their independence at the conclusion of World War I. They began to rebuild their devastated country, and to establish democratic institutions to safeguard their newly won independence. Unfortunately, these benefits of freedom were short-lived because Lithuania was invaded by Stalin's forces. Those who resisted Stalin's brutality were executed or were deported under inhumane conditions to slave labor camps in Siberia.

Nevertheless, this very short period of freedom—less than one-quarter of a century—left an idelible impression on the Lithuanian people, and the years of Communist domination and Nazi occupation have strengthened their resolve for freedom. The Communists have been ruthless in their efforts to destroy the culture, religion, language, and heritage of the Lithuanian people. Yet the desire for liberty has not diminished.

In fact, in recent months, there has been a growing movement of Lithuanian nationalism sweeping Soviet-occupied Lithuania. In just about 9 months, the Lithuanian Movement To Support Perestroika, called Sajudis, has grown to a membership of over 150,000. Unlike last year, when independence day ceremonies in Lithuania were prohibited by Soviet authorities, this year over 100,000 people gathered in Kaunas to commemorate the 71st anniversary of Lithuania, and over 200,000 gathered in Vilnius. In an unprecedented action strengthening the cultural independence of Lithuania, Lithuanian has been declared the official language of Lithuania, and Russians and other minorities living within the borders of this Republic have been given 2 years to gain fluency in this language.

Our Nation has never recognized the forced incorporation of Lithuania by the Soviet Union, and we must continue to support the efforts of the Lithuanian people as they again seek their own autonomy—free from the domination of Soviet tyranny.

I would like to take this opportunity to share with my colleagues in the House of Representatives, two recent articles, which appeared in the Chicago Tribune and the Chicago Sun-Times, outlining the activities in Lithuania to commemorate the 71st anniversary of Lithuanian Independence Day, and copies of those articles follow:

PRO-AUTONOMY LITHUANIANS CELEBRATE 1918 INDEPENDENCE

KAUNAS, LITHUANIA.—A mass movement campaigning for greater autonomy for Lithuania held a ceremony Wednesday in Kaunas, opening two days of officially sanctioned celebrations marking the anniversary of the Baltic state's declaration of independence.

It is the first time since the independent state of Lithuania was forcibly incorporated into the Soviet Union in 1940 that independence anniversary celebrations have been tolerated.

Hundreds of Lithuanians stood in rapt silence outside the music theater in the former capital of independent Lithuania while the Feb. 16, 1918, declaration of independence was read out to the 220 members of the Sajudis movement's parliament, or Sejm, packed inside.

A huge yellow, green, and red flag, the colors of independent Lithuania, hung over the stage in front of a picture of the city's freedom monument, which is to be unveiled today after a long period hidden from public view.

The festive atmosphere in the theater's auditorium was in sharp cotrast to last year's mood, when the army and police sealed off the center of Kaunas and Vilnius, the present Lithuanian capital, to forestall nationalist demonstrations on the anniversary. Reports of those detained ranged from several dozens to hundreds.

Sajudis, which was founded last October, has a reform platform similar to that of the popular fronts in the neighboring Baltic states of Estonia and Latvia.

Sajudis secretary Virgil Cepaitas said that today's Sejm session would last at least four hours. A declaration on "the future of Lithuania" would be discussed and adopted, he said.

Another Sejm member, Algirdas Patackas, said the final resolution would call for Lithuania to be "independent, netural, and demilitarized," as "a buffer zone between East and West."

Asked about the apparent contradiction between Sajudis' stated goal of Lithuania sovereignty inside the Soviet Union and the resolution's call for independence, a leader of the movement's Kaunas branch, Algirdas Saudargas, said, "Yes there are contradictions. But there are contradictions in our Sajudis program."

He pointed out that the Sajudis platform, in addition to pledging fidelity to the Soviet Union, called for annulment of the 1939 Nazi-Soviet pact that led to annexation of Lithuania and the other Baltic states. Saudargas noted that annulment would automatically restore Lithuania independence.

The Freedom League, a group campaigning for total Lithuanian independence, has called for participants at a major rally today to place black bands across the nationalist flag, signifying that the state is not yet free.

The Lithuanian Communist Party leader, Algirdas Brazauskas, is to address today's rally in Vilnius. Party members in Sajudis do not hide the fact that they now consider the reform movement, which claimed 60,000 members, as a "second government." Since the founding of Sajudis, other groups have sprung up in the new atmosphere of official tolerance, some proposing more radical platforms demanding a multiparty system.

LITHUANIANS RECALL INDEPENDENCE: MOSCOW ALLOWS THOUSANDS TO MARK SHORT-LIVED AUTONOMY

(By Vincent J. Schodolski)

Moscow.—In the latest sign of a more relaxed Kremlin attitude toward the stirring of self-rule in the Soviet Baltic republics, Lithuania on Thursday openly marked the anniversary of its short-lived independence for the first time since World War II.

In marked contrast to events a year ago, when officials pre-empted celebrations with house arrests and heavy police presence, tens of thousands of people this year took part in a two-day commemoration of Lithuania's 1918 declaration of independence.

That period of freedom ended in 1940 when Lithuania was annexed by the Soviet Union as part of a secret agreement with Nazi Germany.

The two days of celebrations started Wednesday in Lithuania's second largest city, Kaunas, and concluded Thursday in Vilnius, the republic's capital.

"Unfortunately today we are celebrating independence not as we have independence, but as we want independence," said Vincent Cardinal Sladkvichius, head of the Lithuanian Roman Catholic Church.

He spoke at a ceremony in Kaunas that witnesses said was attended by as many as 120,000 people.

During the same ceremony, a tape-recorded message was played from 92-year-old Juozas Urbsys, the last foreign minister of independent Lithuania. In a halting voice, he spoke of the precious nature of a nation's independence.

Last year local officials ordered police to surround the homes of prominent Lithuanians who had been planning independence day celebrations. Police also blocked the entrance to cemeteries and other public places that were open this year.

Later Thursday in Vilnius a crowd estimated at nearly 200,000 people heard a conciliatory speech from the new head of the Lithuanian Communist Party, Algirdas Brazauskis.

"We have taken many steps during this short time," he said. "In addition to the steps we have already taken, . . . we face many decisions that we have to decide by joint efforts."

In the last year numerous events have reflected Moscow's williness to allow greater independence in the three Baltic republics.

Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia now all have large and active popular organizations that have started to have a limited degree of influence over the political and social life there.

The Lithuanian popular movement, known as Sajudis, issued a statement saying that based on the "new thinking" of Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, it would move toward an independent Lithuania.

"Sajudis will proceed toward a law-governed, economically and culturally independent Lithuania," said the statement, which was read to the crowd in Vilnius.

Lithuanian and Estonian have been declared the official languages of those two republics, and Russians and other ethnic minorities living there have been given two years to gain a prescribed degree of fluency in the native tongues.

Growing Lithuanian nationalism, especially as reflected in the language decree, has also led to increased tensions between Lithuanians and the Russians and ethnic Poles who live in the republic.

After decades of deep distrust and repression, the Kremlin has even relaxed its stance regarding the Catholic Church in Lithuania. After more than 28 years in internal exile, Lithuanian Bishop Julijonas Steponavicius, 77, was invited in December to resume his clerical duties.

The main cathedral in Vilnius was returned to the church in October. The cathedral, which had been turned into an art museum by local party officials, was reconsecrated by Bishop Steponavicius on Feb. 5.

But Moscow has indicated it will not accede to the more radical demands made by some Lithuanians, including those who call for total independence from Moscow.

Lithuania's 1918 independence was agreed to by Vladimir Lenin, the leader of the Bolshevik Revolution, but came to an end as a result of decisions made by his successor, Josef Stalin.

Despite greater openness and efforts to correct many historical inaccuracies, Moscow has always denied existence of secret protocols with the Nazis that dealt Lithuania to the Soviet Union and parts of Poland to Germany.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANNUNZIO. I am happy to yield to my distinguished friend, the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] for providing us this opportunity to note the commemoration of Lithuanian Independence Day.

Founded in 1918 by the Council of Lithuania, the Lithuanian people spent the following 2 years battling the Bolsheviks in a valiant effort to retain their freedom. Beginning in 1920, Lithuania enjoyed two decades of a self-governing status, and her citizens were free to practice their national culture and religious heritage. In 1940, however, the independent nation of Lithuania was forcibly annexed by the Soviet Union. For the almost five decades that have followed, dreams and aspirations have centered on regaining that sovereign status.

Fortunately, Mr. Speaker, for the first time in 50 years, the Lithuanian people were able to celebrate their prewar independence day legally. Officially endorsed by the local Communist party, hundreds of thousands throughout Lithuania recently expressed their hopes for the future of Lithuanian Independence Day by taking to the streets, including about 200,000 who gathered in the prewar capital of Kaunas to commemorate the reopening of the liberty monument in the city center. There, the group heard from Guozas Urbsys, the last foreign minister of independent Lithuania. Now 92, he informed the crowd of his countrymen that he hoped the Republic would one day enjoy real independence again.

Another important sign of Lithuanian nationalism was the overwhelming call for state sovereignty, as expressed by the 200 member council of Sajudis, a mass grass roots political movement. In its manifesto, the council called for restoration of Lithuania's traditional status of neutrality, striving for universally accepted human and civil freedoms, from which flows the general right of Lithuania's citizens independently to choose and develop their own forms of state existence. Upon voting, only eight opposed and eight abstained from endorsing this document.

Mr. Speaker, it has been many years since Americans of Lithuanian heritage could recall such an Independence Day. Although Lithuania has not yet regained its sovereign status, its people have spoken. We support them in these efforts, and visualize the day when Lithuania will once again govern itself. This year's Lithuanian Independence Day was truly remarkable, significantly expanding hopes and aspirations for the future, and we acknowledge its commemoration with great pleasure.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. I thank my good friend from New York for his very excellent statement.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANNUNZIO. I am happy to yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN].

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague from Illinois for bringing us together this afternoon for this special order. As I mentioned to the gentleman before I took the floor, I did not want to miss this. I still believe that I may be the only Lithuanian-American serving in the House of Representatives. My mother was born in Lithuania and came to the United States at the age of 3 or 4.

I take great pride in the fact that 10 years ago I had an opportunity to visit Lithuania myself and to actually see the country and to meet with the fine people of that great nation. This is a special commemoration.

I know the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] has accepted willingly and with a great deal of pride this assignment each year to bring us to the floor of the House to recognize Lithuanian Independence Day. In the many years the gentleman has done this there has never been a time when we could speak with such optimism about the future of Lithuania. Since World War II I am afraid we have seen too many examples of repression, too many examples of Soviet rule that have attempted to quash the feeling of nationalism in that great nation. But now in the last year or more we have seen a rekindled flame from the three, four, or five decades while the Lithuanian people kept this hope alive against all odds, and many of us in the United States and around the world have tried to encourage that.

Mr. Speaker, I want to salute my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] for the role that he has played, small role that it might have been, a very important role in bringing this evolution of independence in Lithuania that we see today. There is much that still lies ahead. I do not want to suggest that the battle has been won, but the battle has been joined, and Lithuanians are now proud to stand publicly and speak of their own independence, proud of their own language, proud of their own flag, to speak of their own sovereignty, thoughts that would have been unheard of just a few years ago.

I can recall in my visit to the Soviet Union one of the more tragic aspects of that visit was to visit with the Catholic clergy in Lithuania. What they have been through over the past four or five decades is frankly unspeakable on the floor of this House of Representatives. Yet they have kept that hope alive, and they have given their lives to the struggle.

I will not take anymore time of my colleagues except to state my pride in having Lithuanian heritage, my pride in counting the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. FRANK ANNUNZIO, and his fine work as a real example of the kind of faithful effort which can lead to positive results. My salute to Lithuanians on this independence day.

Mr. Speaker, I include for the RECORD a statement on Lithuanian Indpendence Day.

The statement referred to follows:

LITHUANIAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

Mr. Speaker, I rise today along with many of my colleagues to comemorate the 71st anniversary of Lithuanian Independence Day. At this time of great change in United States-Soviet relations, it is worth remembering the noble and valiant stuggles of the Lithuanian peoples to secure their religious and political rights. Being of Lithuanian descent myself, and having traveled to that special land, I am especially grateful for this opportunity to express my support for the people of Lithuania and their continuing devotion to the cause of freedom.

On February 16, 1918, Lithuania declared its independence from the Soviet Union. This courageous act ended more than a century of Russian domination and embarked the country on a brave new path of democratic rule. In the face of difficult circumstances, Lithuania pursued a program of agricultural reform and industrialization that spurred the development of its economy. Perhaps more importantly, the Lithuanians used their political freedom to protect and enhance their rich cultural heritage.

This brief flowering of independence came to an abrupt, brutal end twenty-two years later. In negotiations leading up to the signing of the Molotov-Ribbentropp Pact between the Soviet Union and Germany, Lithuanian independence was bargained away. Joseph Stalin, with the acquiescence of Nazi Germany, demanded in June of 1940 that a Soviet-backed government be installed in Lithuania. To back up this threat, he sent Soviet troops into the country and a month later, declared the formal annexation of Lithuania. Thousands of heroic Lithuanians died defending their country against the Soviets. Thousands more died during the fighting between Germany and the Soviet Union a couple of years later.

From the early days of their occupation through to the present, the Soviets have attempted to "Russify" the Lithuanian people. Their Soviet jailers have denied them basic human rights. Political expersion has been banned, as has the free practice of religion, a particularly galling policy to the predominantly Catholic population. The cultural heritage of the Lithuanian people has been suppressed. Yet these repressive policies have failed to destroy the Lithuanian people and their hopes for a freer, more peaceful future.

Mr. Speaker, the United States has never recognized the Soviet occupation of Lithuania and its neighbors, and we continue to maintain diplomatic relations with representatives of the Republic of Lithuania. This is as it should be. If Mr. Gorbachev is serious about his policy of "glasnost," then the situation in Lithuania presents him with the perfect opportunity to demonstrate this commitment. The Lithuanian people have already demonstrated how the principles of glasnost, in particular the need for democratic rule, can better the lives of people.

The Lithuanians continue to press their case. Just last week, the largest grass-roots organization in Lithuania demanded state sovereignty and an end to Soviet domination. The political manifesto, approved by the council of Sajudis, also called for restoration of Lithuania's traditional neutral status and for protection of basic human freedoms. And over 200,000 Lithuanians turned out for the first officially-sanctioned celebration of Independence Day.

We have a special obligation to stand by our Lithuanian friends during this tumultuous time. They are fighting for the very same liberties and freedoms we hold near and dear to out heart. We must let them know that we will not forget their suffering and or their cause and that we are ready to do all we can to aid their liberation.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague from Illinois for the very generous remarks.

I also want to say that as a colleague of Lithuanian descent, the gentleman from Illinois is a credit and an honor not only to the Lithuanian people, but to all of the people of his district and the people of the United States. He has served his country well, served his people with distinction, and he is one of the alert, conscientious Members of this body. So I thank him for his contribution today.

Mr. DURBIN. I thank the gentleman from Illinois for those kind remarks.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, Americans of Lithuanian descent join in the hopes and prayers of the Lithuanian people in their actions to achieve a free Lithuania. As a part of our commemoration of this 71st anniversary of Lithuanian Independence Day in the House of Representatives, the Lithuanian-American Council selected Father Anthony S. Dranginis to be the guest chaplain. The names of the officers of the Lithuanian-American Council follow:

National President: Grozvydas J. Lazauskas.

Vice Presidents: Stanley Balzekas, Petras Buchas, Povilas P. Dargis, Alexander Domanskis, Esq., Leonas Kriauceliunas, D.V.M., Vicktoras Naudzius, Casimir Oksas, and Mykolas Pranevicius.

Secretary: Stasys Dubauskas.

Treasurer: Daina Danilevicius-Dumbrys.

Members: Irene D. Bilinstrubas, Vytautas P. Dargis, M.D., Vanda Gasparas, Ramune Kelecius, Vida Jonusas, Birute Skorubskas, and Morkus Simkus.

Council's Representatives in Washington, DC: Jonas B. Genys, Ph.D., and Milda Vaivada.

Director of Information: Msgr. Joseph Prunskis, J.C.D.

Office Manager: Nijole Gierstikas.

Trustees: Vytautas Abraitis, Algirdas Budreckis, Ph.D., Kostas Burba, and Vytautas Yucius.

Mr. Speaker, although under the new policies of glasnost and perestroika, the Communists have eased some of their forms of oppression, still Lithuanians remain prisoners in their own homeland. On the occasion of the 71st anniversary of Lithuanian Independence Day, I am honored to join with Americans of Lithuanian descent all over this Nation, as we commend the great courage of the Lithuanian people in resisting the tyranny of their Communist oppressor, and as we support their efforts and goals in 1 day achieving self-determination in a free Lithuania.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, February 16 marked the 71st anniversary of Lithuanian Independence Day, for it was that day in 1918 when the Lithuanian people declared themselves to be the Independent Democratic Republic of Lithuania—a nation with all the rights and privileges accorded any independent nation such as our own. Unfortunately, that independence did not last long. After 26 years of struggling to keep its freedom, the country was captured by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics which began to systematically erase Lithuania's unique culture, politics, language and religion.

This day has been set apart from the rest of the year for us to enjoy Lithuanian culture and reflect upon its contribution to the world. In this way, we do our part to preserve that culture and look forward to the day when it may thrive in its own homeland once again.

This day has also been set apart for us to consider the many people of Baltic nations which have been deprived of their independence, and for us to consider how fortunate we are to be free.

Perhaps most importantly, this day has been set apart for us to examine the future. We must work to restore Lithuanian independence, and we must work for a world where all people will be independent and never subjugated by force of arms.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, on this occasion, I would like to join with my colleague Congressman ANNUNZIO in the commemoration of Lithuania's Independence Day. The United States has always believed in the right of self-determination and this right has been denied to Lithuanians due to their brutal occupation by the Soviet Union.

In 1919 at the Treaty of Versailles, the people of Lithuania were granted their own independent state. This independence lasted only a brief 20 years as the Soviet Union occupied and annexed the Baltic States in 1939. Since that bleak day, Lithuanians have suffered under Soviet policies of subjugation. They have been denied religious freedoms, free enterprise, free speech, the right to learn and speak their native tongue in schools and institutions, and the basic guarantees of civil liberties that we sometimes fail to appreciate in this country.

We have never recognized the annexation of Lithuania and this policy will not change. The Lithuanians have struggled to this day to retain their cultural identity and regain the individual liberties that have been lost. They have never forgotten that they were once a free nation. We shall not forget either. I hope that in the spirit of glasnost Mr. Gorbachev will try to rectify this grevious situation. If the Soviets really claim to be for greater openness in their society, they cannot fail to hear the voice of the Lithuanian people and continue to deny them their freedoms.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to join my colleagues in marking a birthday of freedom, the 71st Anniversary of Lithuanian Independence. Congressman ANNUNZIO is to be commended for this timely legislative initiative.

Over the years, the Lithuanian people have fiercely clung to their love of freedom. Their determination is finally paying dividends. Recent political developments in Lithuania offer hope for a brighter and freer tomorrow for the Lithuanian people.

After declaring itself a nation state in 1918, Lithuania flourished economically, politically, and religiously. This period of freedom lasted, however, for just a brief time. Lithuania soon fell into the grasp of the Soviet Union. The Soviets then began their forceful occupation of the Baltic nations. They attempted to assimilate the Lithuanian people into the Soviet Union.

While the freedoms enjoyed by the Lithuanian people during their fleeting experience with liberty were lost, the flame of freedom burned deep in their hearts. Those brave people continued the struggle for human rights and cultural identity.

Mr. Gorbachev's glasnost has brought the winds of change to that closed police state. In recent months, independent political movements have been established in Lithuania that challenge the Communist Party's monopoly on power. The Lithuanian perestroika movement has demanded political, economic, and cultural autonomy.

Just last week, the perestroika movement pledged that it would work for independence and neutrality for Lithuania as a long-term goal. Already, these organizations have persuaded local Communist authorities to legalize national symbols that were outlawed after the Soviet takeover. Progress is being made in promoting local languages.

A Mass was recently celebrated at Vilnius Cathedral after the government turned the church over to the Catholic Church. For the first time in 50 years, thousands of Lithuanians legally celebrated their nation's independence day. A step along the road to freedom has been taken.

By commemorating this special independence day, we keep the light of hope burning for the millions of Lithuanians who cherish liberty. We share their hopes and dreams that someday their legitimate nationalistic aspirations will be realized.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this special order.

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to join my colleagues in commemorating Lithuanian Independence Day.

February 16, 1918, is an important day for Lithuanians and for all freedom-loving people around the world. On this day, a group of prominent Lithuanians declared Lithuania free and independent from Russian domination. Political, social and cultural freedoms followed this declaration and with the advent of these freedoms, Lithuania flourished.

Sadly, the hard-won freedom of the Lithuanian people was taken away when Lithuania was forcibly incorporated into the Soviet Union in 1940. Our Nation has never recognized this brutal incorporation and at the same time we have not forgotten the proud people of Lithuania.

The new spirit of glasnost has brought some hope to people living under the yoke of Soviet oppression. Lithuanians are once again demanding greater economic, religious, cultural and national autonomy. Their attempts to combat the religious persecution and religious persecution that they face has been truly courageous.

Despite the hardships that Lithuania has endured, the dignity of the Lithuania people survives. The hope for the eventual liberation of Lithuania is shared by Lithuanian-Americans in this country. And it is a hope that is shared by free people across the globe.

Seventy-one years ago this month, a free Lithuania was established. Although that freedom has been forcibly taken away, the love of freedom cannot be taken away from the Lithuanian people. It is my hope, and the hope of Lithuanian-Americans across this country, that someday soon, Lithuania will once again be free.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in today's special order to commemorate Lithuanian Independence Day.

Lithuania and the other Baltic States are shining examples of the principle that, once freedom has flourished, it never dies. Lithuania was a powerful independent state during the Middle Ages and briefly existed as a republic after World War I (from 1918 to 1940). Since the Soviet Union illegally annexed Lithuania in 1940, the people of Lithuania have nurtured the dream of freedom and independence and have refused to accept Soviet domination, despite frequent oppression and overwhelming odds.

As a result of this unconquerable spirit, Lithuania is in the forefront of political and economic reform in the Soviet Union. In the past year, the people of Lithuania have regularly asserted their demands for greater political and cultural autonomy and have achieved a number of successes in that regard. Just last week, on the eve of the 71st anniversary of the founding of an independent Lithuania, "Sajudis," the largest grass-roots organization in Lithuania, publicly pledged to work toward an independent and neutral Baltic republic, Such actions would have been unthinkable a few years ago. These activities have also shown that the Lithuania people have never given up their ultimate goal of regaining their independence through peaceful means.

In fact, the nationalist movement in Lithuania has both reinvigorated the republic's political life and posed a major challenge to Soviet authorities trying to grapple with resurgent nationalism throughout the Soviet Union. Under the current circumstances of lessened East-West tensions and greater respect for human rights, it would be totally inappropriate for the Soviet Union to attempt to suppress these legitimate Lithuanian aspirations.

I am proud to join with many of my colleagues today in commemorating the spirit of Lithuanian independence. I am equally proud that the United States has steadfastly upheld the principles of international law by consistently refusing to recognize the forcible incorporation of Lithuania and its two sister republics by the Soviet Union in 1940. This policy will never change.

I represent a number of Americans from various Eastern European ancestries, especially Latvian-Americans, and I believe I speak for all Nebraskans of the First District when I proclaim my admiration and support for the strong and courageous people of Lithuania and the Baltic States.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in a solemn moment of reflection on the anniversary of independence in Lithuania. On February 16, 1918, the Lithuanian people proclaimed their will to be a free, self-governing, and independent nation. They built their social and economic future on the principles of liberty and their cultural heritage.

But in 1940, in complete violation of international agreements, the Soviet Union militarily occupied Lithuania and annexed it. Under Stalin, the ruthless suppression, mass deportation and economic exploitation began. According to the Lithuanian National Foundation, between March 23 and 25, 1949 alone, 100,000 people were deported to Siberia from Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania.

The suppression of Lithuanians continues to this day. Almost 1 year ago today, 32 Lithuanians risked their safety as they sent an appeal to Amnesty International about the arbitrary imprisonment of two young men who wished to commemorate the victims of Stalin and Beria. The letter describes the 70 Lithuanian citizens who perished in the Rainiai grove:

> They were simple people—workers, artisans, white collar workers, farmers, students, their only crime was their deep love for their fatherland Lithuania and their hatred of tyranny, which Stalin and Beria introduced in Lithuania.

As the letter closes, the authors urge our support for "all those who are wronged in the world and whose only weapon is the truth."

Last week on February 16, the Lithuanian group Sajudis called for Lithuanian independence. I urge this administration to implement a policy that will encourage Lithuanian aspirations—and the hopes of all captive nations—for a future of freedom and self-determination. We must continue to press the Soviet Union to abide by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, and the Helsinki Compliance Commission.

Last year General Secretary Gorbachev promised to build a memorial to those who perished under the tyranny of Stalin. I applaud this gesture, as well as the decision to return the Cathedral in Vilnius to Lithuanian people.

We must never forget the crimes perpetrated against the Luthuanian people; the abuse of their human rights and their religious freedom, the exploitation and pollution of their land, the suppression of their culture.

To further right the crimes committed by Stalin, I call on General Secretary Gorbachev now to publish and repudiate the Molotov-Ribbentrop Pact and end the tyranny of these captive nations. I believe now is the time for the leader of the Soviet Union to take this historic step. We know only too well, in the wise words of Edmund Burke, "The only thing necessary for the triumph of evil is for good men [and women] to do nothing."

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to join with my colleague, the Honorable FRANK ANNUNZIO, for today's special order commemorating Lithuanian Independence Day.

Many decades have passed since Soviet troops first illegally occupied Lithuania and her neighboring Baltic States of Latvia and Estonia. And despite what seems to be an improved attitude on human rights by the new Soviet leadership, Lithuania still remains hostage.

I want to salute the untiring will of the Lithuanian people to regain their liberty and freely practice their unique and wonderful culture once again. We must make clear that this Congress and the people of the United States support the return of independence to Lithuania, and unresevedly condemn the continuing occupation by the Soviet Union. And we must make clear that we will continue to express our outrage until Lithuania and her neighboring Baltic States are permitted to regain their rightful place in the community of free nations.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, we take the floor today to celebrate the 71st anniversary of the Lithuanian people's declaration of independence. But we are also celebrating something more—the spirit of a people which has remained undanted through more than 40 years of Soviet domination.

Each year I have joined the members of St. Andrew's Church in New Britain, CT, to celebrate Lithuania's past and give encouragement to her people. This year, as we gathered, we felt the excitement of the hope that has spread throughout Lithuania. Nationalistic movements are gaining momentum as the limits of President Gorbachev's policy of openness are being tested. This is ever so evident in the Baltic States, where the memories of what it is like to worship freely, to express without fear one's political views, to be proud of one's heritage, history, and culture, or simply to converse in one's native tongue, continue to burn in their minds and inspire their spirits.

Just this past November, Estonia boldly challenged the centralized power of Moscow by adopting a declaration of sovereignty. And in Lithuania, recent nominations for seats in the legislature have shown great gains for the reform party, Sajudis. While skeptics are viewing the upcoming Soviet elections in March with apathy, others are using this new opportunity to raise fundamental issues and pose the policy options that are the real grist of the mill of democracy. As the excitement and interest gather momentum, it becomes increasingly possible for this first democratic election in modern Soviet history to bring real gains in economic, cultural, and political freedoms for Lithuanians.

In these critical months, we must assure tha our Government provides diplomatic pressure in support of the Lithuanian people's struggle for freedom and that we urge Soviet recognition of Lithuanian human rights. I join my colleagues in commemorating Lithuania's Independence Day on the floor of the House of Representatives this February 22, and I salute those whose faith, hope and energy are building the foundation in today's new world for tomorrow's independent Lithuania.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my heartfelt support for Lithuanian Independence Day, and my solidarity with the courageous people of Lithuania. However, the joy of celebration must be tempered by concern, and the realization that the Lithuanian people, and those of Eastern Europe still live under the dark cloud of Soviet oppression.

With respect to glasnost and peristroika, Mr. Speaker, I hope that we do not fall into the trap of mistaking changes in style for substantive changes in the Soviet system. I applaud the efforts of General Secretary Gorbachev to the extent that they are sincere. However, we must always bear in mind that the General Secretary is in the process of forming a more formidable adversary of the United States as against the participatory democracy which he would have the world believe he is forming.

No one knows the discrepancy between Mr. Gorbachev's rhetoric and the reality of his agenda than the people of Lithuania, and the other Baltic States of Latvia and Estonia. Despite the rhetoric to the contrary, the people of Lithuania and the rest of Eastern Europe still do not determine their own fate as we do in this country. Any celebration of Lithuanian independence is really a memory of a brief interval in history following World War I. The best way for General Secretary Gorbachev to demonstrate his policy of openness would be to allow Lithuanian people and the other subjugated nations of Eastern Europe to recapture their independence.

We have seen the demonstrations in the streets of Lithuania. We have heard the people's call for democracy. We continue to hear their cries for independence. We feel in our hearts the passion Lithuanians hold for independence. Seeing this phenomena inspires all Americans to maintain their solidarity with the Lithuanian people.

Mr. Speaker, let us not remember the Lithuanian people just on their independence day. Let us all keep their struggle in our hearts and in our prayers every day of the year. Hopefully, at this time next year all of us can truly celebrate the independence of Lithuania, and not just the memories of their freedom.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join my colleagues in commemorating Lithuanian Independence Day. This day has special meaning to me and to several others from the 29th District.

Last year, Mr. Paulius Klimas walked over 500 miles, from Rochester, NY, to Washington, DC, on behalf of Lithuanian dissident Petras Grazulis who, at the time, was imprisoned in the Soviet Union. In addition to focusing the world's attention on the detention of Mr. Grazulis, Mr. Klimas' walk brought hope for all Lithuanians around the world.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to report that Mr. Klimas' journey produced a tangible success. Today, on Lithuanian Independence Day, Mr. Grazulis is out of prison and living at home in Lithuania. His release serves as a beacon of hope for all of his compatriots.

These two shining examples reflect across the Lithuanian Republic. I found a recent headline in the Washington Post, "Communists Running Scared in Lithuania" very encouraging. The article centered on the upcoming elections for the national Soviet legislature. The article reports that activists in the Lithuanian reform movement, known as Sajudis, believe the Communist Party will be lucky to win more than a handful of the 42 seats allocated to Lithuania in the new Congress of People's Deputies.

Mr. Speaker, the United States is the citadel of human freedom. We have a responsibility to the peoples of captive nations such as Lithuania as they demonstrate exemplary courage and determination. Our culture has been enriched by the emigration of Lithuanians to our country. Lithuanians like Mr. Klimas have shown through their actions their strong sense of appreciation for the freedoms we enjoy in this country.

Lithuanian Independence Day is a source of both pride and sadness for men like Messrs. Klimas and Grazulis. Lithuanians can take pride in the heroic efforts of these men and of the millions of others who have toiled against Soviet oppression. However, victory will not be had until the people of the Republic are permitted to exercise their God-given right of self-determination.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to join with my colleagues on this day of hope. Let us hope that General Secretary Gorbachev and the powers that be in the Soviet Union will act so that next year we will be celebrating the creation of the new, independent State of Lithuania.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commemorate Lithuanian Independence Day and to focus on the heroic deeds of present-day Lithuanians.

I take great joy in reporting that Viktoras Petkus, a former prisoner of conscience whom I adopted as such nearly 2 years ago, has been released from internal exile and returned to his home in Vilnius. Petkus is the last of the founding members of the Lithuanian Helsinki monitoring group who is still alive and in Lithuania.

Not only will Petkus resume monitoring Soviet compliance with the Helsinki accords, he participated in public demonstrations on January 10 in Vilnius. He delivered what I understand was a tremendously inspiring speech and called for the total independence of Lithuania.

Petkus' return to the public defense of human rights for the Lithuanian people stands out against a dramatic background of recent activity. The national democratic movement Sajudis has built unprecedented grassroots power and worked within the Lithuanian political system to initiate reforms and contest Communist Party candidates in upcoming elections. Perhaps even more significant, the Catholic Church has scored a landmark victory—holding its first mass in the old cathedral at Vilnius since the cathedral was seized by the Soviets in 1950.

The return of the cathedral to the faithful of Lithuania is a remarkable story of perserverence and resistance to compromise—it merits telling here.

All believers in Lithuania regard the cathedral—which the Soviet had converted into an art gallery—as the symbolic center of religious life. After years of protest and silent indignation, the Soviets quietly tried to cut a deal with Lithuanian Cardinal Sladkevicius. They offered to let the cathedral be opened for occasional Sunday services. The Cardinal refused, holding firm that the church belongs to the faithful. The faithful would accept no conditions for returning the cathedral to the church. Under such conditions, he asked that the cathedral remain closed.

One week later, on Saturday, October 22, the First Party Secretary in Lithuania announced on television that the cathedral would be given back to the church. This time—there were no conditions. That night an already scheduled, and approved, rally became an unprecedented celebration—Western reporters estimated 300,000 to 400,000 people gathered near the cathedral. It was also the weekend of the founding of the Lithuanian Movement to Support Perestroika, or Sajudis.

At dawn the next day, Sunday morning, mass was held with the cathedral doors opened to symbolize its return to the church. However, not everything had been set straight. When Soviet authorities offered the Cardinal the keys to the cathedral, he replied that he was not the bishop of Vilnius to whom the keys should be entrusted. In fact, the apostolic administrator, Bishop Steponavicius was still being held in internal exile. The bishop had been banned by the Soviets in 1960 for allegedly violating laws governing religious activity.

In late December, it was announced that the bishop, now 78, would be officially allowed to resume his duties. The bishop himslef had declined repeated offers of release during the past 28 years because he would not have been granted permission to carry out his duties. Now he could do so.

By the cathedral's return, and the bishop's release, the two most grievous examples of direct interference in Lithuanian church affairs by the Soviets were removed. Not by Soviet generosity, but by the years of heroic resistance of the faithful. That is what will turn the tide as the church seeks further restoration—the right to name its own bishops without Soviet pressure, the resumption of religious instruction for children, and the control of seminaries and other fundamental aspects of church life.

I want to pay tribute also to the work of Lithuanian-Americans who have stood in solidarity with their brothers and sisters in Lithuania. Many Lithuanians in my congressional district in northern Virginia have generated tremendous support, and the work of the Lithuanian Information Center, and its partner Lithuanian Catholic Religious Aid in New York, to mobilize this support has been invaluable.

Mr. COYNE. Mr. Speaker, this month marks the anniversary of the founding of the Independent Democratic Republic of Lithuania. It is a very special time of year for millions of Lithuanians and Americans of Lithuanian ancestry. It is when they and their friends remember that, despite all the tragedies that have come to that land, Lithuania is still a nation, it is still a people, it is still a culture.

On that chilly February day in 1918 when the Independent Democratic Republic of Lithuania was proclaimed, the Lithuanian people—whose history goes back to the seventh century A.D. and who take great pride in what the New York Times correctly calls an old and accomplished civilization—looked forward to an era of freedom and national sovereignty. It was to be all too brief. In 1940, in the wake of a secret protocol in the Soviet-German pact a year earlier, the Soviet Army occupied Lithuania and its sister Baltic republics, Estonia and Latvia, and illegally incorporated them into the U.S.S.R.

The United States, to its credit, has never recognized that illegal annexation; but, except for a short and terrible period of Nazi occupation, Lithuania has been under Soviet oppression ever since.

It took little time for the Kremlin to eliminate the most basic human freedoms. The people of Lithuania were subjected to state terror such as they never seen before in all their history. We will never know just how many Lithuanians were deported to Siberia and other distant territory, how many were tortured, and how many were murdered—nor will we ever know how many patriots of Lithuania resisted the oppression against all odds.

The last 49 years have been a bleak period in that nation's history. Recently, however, there have been some extraordinary rays of hope.

The Catholic Church, a rallying point for Lithuania, has been given back its cathedral in the port of Klaipeda, and Pope John Paul II has appointed the first Lithuanian cardinal in modern times.

Lithuanian nationalism, suppressed for decades, has been given a bit of room to breathe. Soviet authorities are permitting a new grassroots political movement called the Lithuanian Movement for the Support of Perestroika that would all but sever the political and economic links with Moscow. Its founding congress was even broadcast on Lithuanian television, and the new Lithuanian Communist Party chief has expressed his sympathy for the group.

Authorities granted official status to the banned scarlet, green, and yellow flag that flew over Lithuania before 1940.

And Lithuanians are openly calling for publication of one of the most important documents in their nation's history the secret Nazi-Soviet protocol that paved the way for their conquest nearly five decades ago.

Does all this mean that Lithuania has finally regained its freedom? Unfortunately not. Lithuanians know that the iron grip of Moscow's domination has relaxed, and things are better now than they have been. But the Lithuanian people have not forgotten the taste of true liberty, and they know they do not yet have it. Their long struggle is not yet over.

There is a lesson all of us can learn from the Lithuanian experience of the last 49 years. It is that a nation whose only resources are tenacity, faith, and courage can survive unspeakable hardship and not be crushed.

The Lithuanian people may not have achieved their goal of national independence just yet. But as long as the spirit of freedom, and love of country, and pride in culture exist, Lithuania will live for all of us.

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to join with many of the colleagues in commemorating the 71st anniversary of Lithuanian Independence.

First, I would like to thank my good friend and colleague FRANK ANNUNZIO for seeking this special order to commemorate Lithuanian Independence Day. I am honored to speak in support of Lithuanians and Lithuanian-Americans who refuse to accept the death of Lithuania's dream of freedom. Indeed, as we speak, freedom is being fought for in Lithuania and throughout the captive nations.

Lithuania, until 1795, was a free nation. It was in 1795 that the once heroic nation's independence was seized by the Russian regime. In 1918, Lithuania declared itself a free and sovereign nation. For 22 years Lithuanians were free from Soviet interference. Then, in 1940, the Baltic Republic lost its independence through the cruel Hitler-Stalin pact, a scheme of the Nazis and the Kremlin. The pact demanded the formation of a Soviet-controlled government and held a one-party election. Lithuania was annexed 1 month later. It is time that the Soviets renounced this corrupt agreement.

Under Soviet rule, Lithuanians have been killed, imprisoned, or deported for fighting for political independence. Their religious beliefs are oppressed. The Catholic Church, by far the dominant religion of the Lithuanian people, is officially outlawed and the target of particularly harsh treatment.

The policy of glasnost is meant to give the Soviet Union a state of openness. It is an opportunity for the people of the U.S.S.R. to speak out about their discontent. The people of Lithuania have spoken. The United States is listening. We have never recognized the unlawful occupation of Lithuania and her Baltic neighbors and continue to maintain diplomatic relations with the representatives of the independent Republic of Lithuania. The question is: Is Mikhail Gorbachev listening?

Gorbachev has been challenged by the Lithuanians' desire for restored independence. Lithuania nationalists made no secret of their plans to commemorate Lithuanian Independence Day last year with church services and public demonstrations. Unfortunately, Soviet officials intimidated would-be demonstrators with threats of repression. Despite this, thousands of Lithuanians participated in the commemorative activities.

We gather today, Mr. Speaker, to honor Lithuanians and Lithuanian-Americans who have kept their dreams of Lithuanian independence alive.

Mr. RUSSO, Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commemorate another year of imprisonment for the captive nations of Europe. Today, we mark a special anniversary for one of those captive nations, Lithuania. Every year we celebrate the anniversary of Lithuanian independence as a fitting and ironic reminder of the Soviet's rule of force. I want to thank my colleague from Illinois FRANK ANNUNZIO for organizing this special order again this year.

Mr. Speaker, on February 16, 1918, the people of Lithuania issued their own declaration of independence. This assertion of self-determination by the people of Lithuania still stirs the hearts of Americans 71 years later.

In the 22 years that followed, the Lithuanian people seized their destiny, working hard to advance their society on many fronts. They raised their standard of living above the prewar level; adopted a permanent constitution which provided for an 8-hour work day and land reform; and undertook a number of public works projects, including the construction of a great many secondary schools. Moreover, the rebirth of an independent Lithuanian state launched a cultural renaissance in Lithuanian music and literature. Lithuanian artists created many moving works that drew on the Nation's rich culture.

This golden age of independence and progress came to a bitter end in 1940, when the Soviet Union invaded and annexed Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia. The U.S. Government has never recognized this intolerable act—nor should it ever. The passage of time does not erode or negate the Lithuanian people's right of self-determination. Under harsh Soviet rule, the Lithuanian people have suffered mass deportations, violent repression of dissent, and suppression of Lithuanian culture in a cruel, brutally choreographed attempt at russification. In the face of the Soviet's overwhelming military might, the Lithuanians have never cease their struggle to be free.

I am honored to speak in Congress and call the free world's attention to the Lithuanian people's courage and resolve. They are a source of inspiration, and a reminder of the irrepressible human spirit, which struggles for freedom and justice even under threat of death. We commemorate the anniversary of the declaration of Lithuanian freedom each year on February 16 to assure the brave people of Lithuania that their struggle is not forgotten.

Today, we see changes within the Soviet bloc that have been inspired—or perhaps I should say permitted—by Mr. Gorbachev's policies of glasnost and perestroika. Just last week, Lithuanians were able to freely articulate their desires for independence openly for the first time in 50 years. Such progress is laudable; but it falls far short of actual independence. Gorbachev's policies of reform will face real challenges as his inspirational rhetoric meets the chilling realities of the Stalinist Soviet system. The free world will watch and pray that the legitimate aspirations of this great people will at least be realized after so many years.

Mr. WELDON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a desire for freedom which burns still in the hearts and minds of the people of Lithuania. The United States recognized the independent Lithuanian Government on July 27, 1922. Yet 67 years later, the people of this nation still struggle for human rights, economic freedom, and cultural autonomy.

This European nation has been ravaged by the tyranny of the Nazis and the repression of the Soviet Union. The Soviets have made extraordinary efforts to dim the religious spirit of the Lithuanians. They have closed virtually every monastery in the country and reduced the clergy to less than half the size which it had before World War II. Many citizens have been forced to relocate away from their homes and families. The people of Lithuania have been denied freedom of the press and freedom of religion, two of the most basic rights enjoyed by Americans.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that all of my colleagues welcome the reforms which Mr. Gorbachev has undertaken. He is attempting to increase civil, political, and economic freedoms for the people of the Soviet Union. As Mr. Gorbachev strives to improve the economy of his nation, I hope that he also remembers the struggle for freedom of ethnic minorities like the Lithuanians.

Mr. Speaker, I am privileged to stand before the Congress today to commemorate Lithuanian Independence Day. I hope my colleagues will take a moment to reflect on their brave attempts to secure basic human liberties.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise with my colleagues to commemorate Lithuanian Independence Day. Forty-eight years have passed since the Soviet Union first occupied the small state of Lithuania at the Baltic Sea. This violation of international rights ended its 22-year-long era of national sovereignty. During this time of independence the Lithuanian people had developed a strong economy and industry. Their culture and national unity flourished. The church and the people enjoyed freedom. But since the annexation by the U.S.S.R. Lithuania and the two other Baltic republics have suffered great religious and national injustices. As with the Jews and other religious groups in the Soviet Union, the Lithuanian Catholic Church suffers oppression. For example, Bishop Julijona Steponavicius spent over 25 years in internal exile. In addition, no free organization of parties and other movements was allowed and the citizens could not express their opinion freely without fear of punishment.

But now it seems that things in Lithuania as well as in the entire Soviet Union are improving. In October, the internal exile of Bishop Steponavicius ended. He was permitted to visit the Vatican and to return afterwards to Lithuania. In another important step in the direction of religious freedom, the cathedral of Klaipeda returned to church control last November. The government had used this church for more than 20 years as a state museum.

There has also been progress toward more political rights for the Lithuanian people. On October 22, Lithuania became the third of the three Baltic republics to set up a popular front, called Sajudis (Lithuania for Unity). This new founded mass organization calls for a degree of autonomy that falls slightly short of national independence.

It seems probable that Sajudis will gain some seats in the Soviet Congress of Delegates that will be elected on March 26; they might even win the majority of Lithuania's 42 representatives in this new Soviet parliament. I welcome this development, particularly because Sajudis works for Lithuania's freedom while avoiding violent conflicts in finding a political solution for Lithuania's autonomy.

But let us look beyond the surface of the new developments in Lithuania. We have to recognize that all these changes happen in an international context of evolutionary—some call it revolutionary—change. In the last year we saw very positive developments in Poland and Hungary, and we say many signals that the Soviet Union is beginning to define its security less by military strength and territorial gains than by reducing tensions within and without its borders.

We have to welcome this "new thinking" particularly if it provides a change for real autonomy for Lithuania and the other Baltic republics. As the Soviet leadership recognizes that it is in its own interests to have a friendly and peaceful Lithuania on its west rather than as a possible center for unrest, there is a higher chance that Lithuania will gain autonomy in the not-so-far future.

As Members of Congress we call on the Soviet leadership to fulfill its promise of more freedom and democracy and to accept the desire of the people of the Baltic Republics for independence and autonomy. We must not forget how often optimistic hopes of more freedom and human rights were proven wrong since World War II. Too often force was used to suppress movements from freedom and independence in the Soviet block. This must not happen again.

Mr. MANTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my distinguished colleague from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO], for calling this special order. I am honored to join him today in commemorating the 71st anniversary of the Lithuanian Declaration of Independence.

When the nation of Lithuania declared its independence in 1918, it brought into the 20th century a tradition of independent nationhood which may be traced back to the 11th century. The Soviet Union's illegal occupation of Lithuania since 1940, has robbed today's Lithuanians of this legacy of freedom. The United States has never, and will never recognize the Soviet Union's unlawful annexation of this independent nation. On February 16 of every year, Lithuanian-Americans across our Nation join to remember the special day in history when Lithuania declared its independence and to look forward to the special day yet to come when Lithuania is again free.

Mr. Speaker, last year Lithuanian-Americans and friends of Lithuania everywhere had cause for hope for a change in the status of Lithuania. The world watched as grassroots political movements took shape in Lithuania and her Baltic neighbors of Estonia and Latvia. The largest such grassroots movement in Lithuania, the Lithuanian Movement for the Support of Perestroika, or "Sajudis," gathered in the capital city of Vilnius on October 23, 1988. The Sajudis issued a platform calling for limits on Soviet control of their nation. Nearly 200,000 Lithuanians congregated there to witness and celebrate this historic meeting.

Mr. Speaker, last year also marked the beginning of improved religious freedom for Lithuanians. On October 23, 1988, 20,000 Lithuanians gathered to celebrate mass at Vilnius Cathedral. What made this service so remarkable was that it was the first mass allowed to be celebrated in this historic cathedral in 30 years.

Mr. Speaker, as we mark the anniversary of Lithuania's declaration of independence, we have cause to celebrate the people of Lithuania's victories during the last year. Today, the strength of the Sajudis continues to build. In January, a member of the Sajudis easily defeated a local Communist official for a seat in Lithuania's Supreme Soviet. Victories such as this have given activists cause for high hopes for success in the nationwide elections for the Soviet legislature scheduled for March 26. We must remember, however, Lithuania's freedom is far from secured and there is much which still must be accomplished.

In a little more than a month, the Soviet Union will hold elections in Lithuania for a restructured Soviet legislature. I urge Soviet President Gorbachev to carry out his pledge to make these elections free, and continue his policy of perestroika, by opening the doors of leadership to Lithuanians, and allowing them the right to self determination. The Lithuanian people and their families in America continue to have my unwavering support and prayers that one day Lithuania will again be a free nation.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleagues in commemorating the 71st anniversary of the Lithuanian Declaration of Independence. Today is a bittersweet anniversary for millions of Lithuanian citizens and their American cousins who recall a brief period of freedom and independence in this Baltic land following World War I.

The Lithuanian people are noted for their rich culture and their religious devotion. This is an affront to totalitarian conformity, and so, for almost 50 years now, the Soviet Union has tried to eradicate all vestiges of an independent Lithuania.

The Soviet Union has failed, and will continue to fail, until it realizes that it can imprison a people, but it cannot imprison a spirit.

A week ago, hundreds of thousands of Lithuanians poured peacefully into the streets for the first time since the Soviet invasion to celebrate this important anniversary. In October 1988, the main cathedral in Vilnius, the country's capital city, was reopened, and earlier this month was reconsecrated by Lithuanian Catholic Bishop Julijonas Steponavicius. The bishop has only recently been permitted to resume his clerical duties after 28 years of internal exile ordered by Soviet officials.

More and more, native Lithuanians want the opportunity to learn their native language in school instead of Russian, which is currently mandatory.

Lithuanian history dramatizes the spirit that motivates ordinary men and women to risk death or imprisonment as they struggle for the right to worship as they please, to speak the language of their parents, and to exercise national self-determination.

It is often said that when freedom is diminished anywhere, it is diminished everywhere. In the name of freedom I call upon General Secretary Gorbachev to withdraw all Soviet personnel from Lithuania to allow its citizens to exercise the national self-determination that is the birthright of all peoples.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, today I am placing in the RECORD a short statement regarding Lithuania's independence. My respected and dear friend from Illinois, Mr. ANNUNZIO, has requested a special order to commemorate today, February 22, Lithuanian Independence Day.

It has been estimated that there are now well over 1 million Americans of Lithuanian descent. Lithuania has had a long and difficult struggle, being known to historians as far back as 1009, when it was still a nation divided into many principalities. The country was seized by German armies during the First World War, and then occupied by the Soviets in the second, ending two decades of independence. It was one of the first countries to experience the aggression of both Hitler and the Soviet Union.

Lithuanian immigrants came to the United States as early as 1688, and until 1850, the chief influxes of immigrants followed periods of famine or intense political oppression by the Russians. They have settled all over this great country; Illinois, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, New York, Connecticut, New Jersey, Michigan, Ohio, Wisconsin, Maryland, Indiana, California, and Minnesota.

The United States recognized the Lithuanian Government on July 27, 1922, and it has never recognized it's incorporation into the Soviet Union. We also continue to maintain diplomatic relations with the representative of the former independent government, which has a legation in Washington.

I support Lithuania's current initiatives for independence and autonomy, and commemorating their independence day is a fitting way to recognize their people as well as those Lithuanian-Americans who are struggling at a distance to regain Independence for Lithuania. I ask you today Mr. Speaker, and other Members, to join me in the honoring of Lithuanian Independence Day.

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I want first to commend Chairman ANNUNZIO for leading this special order today on the floor of the House to commemorate the 71st anniversary of Lithuanian Independence Day. It's critical that Members of the United States Congress show their strong and continuing support for the people of Lithuania, especially at this time, and I thank Chairman ANNUNZIO for organizing this important event.

As many of us know, Lithuanians declared their independence on February 16, 1918, following 123 years of occupation. From 1918 until 1939, Lithuania remained in independent state, until it lost its independence in June of 1940 when it was occupied by 300,000 Soviet troops. During 1940, 6,000 Lithuanians were killed and another 30,000 were shipped to Siberia. During World War Two, one-third of the Lithuanian people were lost, even though Lithuania was a noncombatant during the war. Tens of thousands died in the war, and as many were imprisoned in concentration camps. Nearly 400,000 Lithuanians were exiled to Siberia.

Last week, the people of Lithuania celebrated Lithuanian Independence Day over 2 days. As many as 20,000 people attended a flower-laying ceremony at a cemetery in Kaunas, the second largest city in Lithuania, honoring the remains of soldiers who died in Lithuania's war of independence. Following the ceremony, the national assembly of Lithuania's largest grassroots organization, Sajudis, met for 6 hours and then issued a declaration calling for a democratic and independent Lithuania. The following day, a Mass was held at the Kaunas Cathedral, followed by a rededication ceremony of the freedom monument which had been removed after the Soviet invasion of Lithuania. The ceremony was attended by 200,000 people.

When we compare this year's celebration of Lithuanian Independence Day with last year's, it's evident that real progress has been made during the past year. Last year, Soviet authorities did not allow flower-laying ceremonies to take place. Workers were told to avoid demonstrations or else they would be placing themselves in grave danger. Demonstration organizers were placed under house arrest and prevented from attending their churches where they had planned to observe Lithuanian Independence Day. The telephone lines of key activists were cut throughout Lithuania.

Recent events have shown that glasnost has indeed begun to make its way into Lithuania. Real progress has been made regarding freedom of speech and freedom of assembly. Yet no real changes in power have taken place in Lithuania. Decisionmaking continues to take place in Moscow, not in Vilnius. The free, democratic and neutral Lithuania that Sajudis called for last week clearly does not yet exist.

Despite 71 years of occupation, the spirit of freedom lives on in the hearts of the Lithuanian people. As cochair of the Lithuanian Catholic Religious Liberty Group, I pledge today to continue my support of these brave people in their struggles throughout the coming year, and I urge my colleagues in the House to lend their support as well.

A copy of the full text of Sajudis's statement, as translated by the Lithuanian Information Center, follows:

Lithuania's declaration of independence on February 16, 1918, expressed the Lithuanian nation's aspiration to create a democratic state. The Lithuanian republic, successfully defended in the war for independence, received international recognition and became a member of the League of Nations. Although Germany and the USSR, through ultimate coercion and mutual agreement in 1939–40, annexed the Lithuanian state, the definitive international recognition of Lithuania's independence remains in force.

The Lithuanian nation never reconciled itself to the loss of its state sovereignty. Through various means it resisted Hitlerite and Stalinist genocide and to this date has opposed manifestations of state colonialism. Lithuania's Reform Movement (Sajudis) expresses the nation's determination to regain its rights through peaceful means, to live independent of any kind of dictate.

Relying on the new political thinking declared by the top leadership of the U.S.S.R. as well as on Mikhail Gorbachev's speech to the United Nations General Assembly on December 7, 1988, which stressed the right of nations to choose freely, Sajudis will follow the road to legal, political, economic, and cultural independence for Lithuania, to state sovereignty, without confining itselt to partial achievements.

Sajudis's goal: to struggle against depression and degeneration, to build new foundations for Lithuania's well-being, to create the conditions for free and democratic national self-determination. Sajudis stands for social justice, humaneness and democracy, for cultural autonomy for Lithuania's national minorities in a Lithuanian state, for its traditional status of neutrality in a European demilitarized zone, for universally accepted human and civil freedoms, from which flows the general right of Lithuania's citizens independently to choose and develop their own forms of state existence. Sajudis invites all patriotic forces in Lithuanian society to unite in raising up and fostering our native land.

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commemorate the 71st anniversary of Lithuanian independence. Each year this day serves as a reminder that Lithuania was one of the first victims of Soviet colonial aggression. We are reminded that a country with a rich history spanning nearly 5,000 years lost its independence due to a 1939 pact between Stalin and Hitler. Since 1940, Soviet military occupation has denied the sovereignty of Lithuania and its proud people. Today we must remember the illegitmate origins of Soviet domination of Lithuania, and condemn the Soviet Union's continued denial of self-determination for all Baltic people.

However, today also reminds as that the Lithuanian people have never accepted unjust domination by the Soviet Union, and still continue their courageous struggle against Soviet oppression. In fact, the struggle for independence has resulted in some significant concessions in the past year. On February 16, at least 500,000 people participated in national celebrations of independence day. Unlike the past 70 years, Lithuanians sang their national anthem, flew their flag, and displayed their emblem without punishment. Most notably, on March 4 of this year, the Church of St. Casimir will be restored back to religious use. State funds will pay for the reconstruction of the chapel, which the invading Communists turned into a museum of atheism after World War II. Finally, the majority of political prisoners have been released from Lithuanian jails.

We should find some solace in these concessions by the Moscow government to the irrepressible Lithuanian people. Such changes show that public opinion and diplomatic pressure can have an impact on Gorbachev's policies. These concessions certainly show that the attention and concern of the U.S. Government is necessary and must continue. However, we must remember that what the Lithuanian people justifiably call for is not concessions, but sovereignty.

We cannot afford to be satisfied with Soviet concessions to the Lithuania's call for autonomy. The Soviet Union's military presence in the Baltic States still guarantees its domination of the people. Along with the force of arms, the Soviets still impose their rule through even more insidious methods, such compulsory teaching of Russian at the expense of native Lithuanian, and the suppression of Lithuanian culture and history. Lithuanian Independence Day highlights the ongoing battle against Soviet domination, and reminds the United States that we must not be satisfied with anything short of self-determination for all people. We have seen Gorbachev pull his military out of Afghanistan. We should not be content until military occupation throughout the Soviet empire ends, and Lithuanians and all others gain their due independence after 70 long years.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, today we recognize for the body of the RECORD the 71st anniversary of Lithuania's independence which was declared on February 16, 1918. It is fitting that the representatives of the American people acknowledge the achievements of the Lithuanians. Some of us share in their heritage. All of us share in their spirit for democracy.

Recent history has shown Lithuania's continuous struggle for independence. In 1795, the Russian Army conquered the Lithuanian people and annexed the land to Russia. Despite Russian control, Lithuanians retained their desire for self-determination. They unsuccessfully tried to regain their independence in 1831 and in 1863–1864 before finally obtaining freedom in 1918.

Yet, this freedom was short-lived. Even though the Soviet Union formally recognized Lithuania as an independent nation in 1920, the Soviet's Molotov-Ribbentrop Pact of 1939 with Nazi Germany unilaterally declared Lithuania to be a part of the Soviet Union. Lithuania has been militarily occupied since 1940. The Soviet Union replaced the Lithuanian Government with a Soviet-backed government which is still in operation today.

The Soviet occupation of Lithuania has certainly tested the spirit of these people. During World War II, tens of thousands of Lithuanians were killed and 400,000 more deported to Siberia despite the fact that Lithuania was a noncombatant throughout the war. Lithuania lost one-third of her total population, a percentage loss unsurpassed by any other nation during World War II. Lithuanians have been denied the freedoms of assembly and press. The Soviet Union has tried to suppress the people's strong religious devotion. Nothing better exemplifies this suppression than the Soviet's conversion of the cathedral in Vilnius, long a symbol of the nation's predominate Roman Catholic faith, into an art gallery. Despite these atrocities, however, the spirit for democracy continues to burn strongly in the hearts of these courageous people.

Our own history has taught us the sacrifices and hardships that must be endured to achieve freedom. We wholeheartedly empathize with the plight of these democratic people. Yet, our history also has taught us that when the spirit has survived difficulties, the dream of independence inevitably has become the reality of independence. We celebrate with Lithuania her 71 years of democratic independence and hope with her for the day when, once again, the blessings of independence will be realized.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, today marks the anniversary of the independence of Lithuania—an ancient and proud nation whose people are dedicated to freedom. Since 1940, their country has been occupied by the Soviet Union. Lithuanian culture has been violated and the Lithuanian language has been repressed. Yet Lithuanians of all ages, all over the world, cherish their heritage and their country's independence. With them, we have faith that their courage will one day bring liberty.

Throughout this year, Lithuanians and their neighbors in Estonia and Latvia have taken to the streets to demand that their rights be respected and their histories restored to them. We in the United States do not recognize the Soviet Union's illegal annexation of the Baltic States, and we stand with their citizens in the fight for freedom. Let us hope that the next Lithuanian Independence Day will witness that freedom at last.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to join with my colleagues once again in commemoration of Lithuanian Independence Day.

As we mark today the 71st anniversary of the Lithuanian Declaration of Independence, there is cause for optimism in the homes of Vilnius, Kaunas, and other communities across Lithuania. Moscow is now apparently calculating that allowing Lithuanians some small degree of autonomy, at least for the moment, will advance its broader political objectives. Given the improved climate in relations between the United States and the Soviet Union, it is more important than ever that we continue to support the Lithuanian nationalist movement and to focus world attention on the plight of the Lithuanian people.

I was encouraged to learn that only yesterday the Lithuanian Council of Ministers issued a final decree making Lithuanian the official language of that Baltic Republic. Henceforth, all public business and services will be conducted in the language of the vast majority of the population. This small concession, however, came only after years of pressure from nationalist groups within Lithuania. We must not forget—that which the Kremlin giveth, the Kremlin can also taketh away.

This annual special order serves to symbolize our fellowship with the Lithuanian people in their struggle for national identity. We in the United States look with respect and admiration upon the national pride of Lithuanians and their commitment to the goal of self-determination. It is proof that the short-lived period of independence enjoyed by Lithuanians kindled a love of freedom that nearly 50 years of subjugation has not extinguished.

Mr. Speaker, the message that we wish to convey to the Lithuanian people is one solidarity and of hope—the hope that the Soviet retreat from Afghanistan is but the prelude to the breakup of an empire that spans two continents and holds millions of individuals in thrall. As we reaffirm our steadfast support fo the Lithuanian people's right to self-determination, let us also renew our commitment to freedom for all captive nations.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, this year, Lithuanians around the world celebrated the 71st anniversary of their country's independence. Yet again, so many people showed their loyalty to the cause of an independent Lithuanian state. Such loyalty is a hallmark of these independence days. This year, there were also major new events.

For the first time, the Soviet authorities in Lithuania legalized the holding of independence celebrations for pre-Soviet Lithuania. Last year on November 16, Soviet troops patrolled Kaunas and Vilnius. Planned demonstrations were prevented or disrupted.

While I greet this new official Soviet tolerance towards Lithuanian Independence Day, I regret that such tolerance did not extend to eight Lithuanian Americans who applied for visas to go to Lithuania on February 16. These eight Lithuanian Americans are Ginte Damusis, Lithuanian Information Center; Algimantas Gureckas, Lithuanian World Community; historian Romuald Misiunas, Petras Molis, Lithuanian Scouts; Bronius Nainys, World Lithuanian; Dr. Antanas Razma, Lithuanian-American Community; and Darius Suziedelis, Lithuanian-American Youth Association. In a protest statement, the eight said, "Isn't it strange that a country which has declared a national holiday does not permit us to mark it * * *"

Official and unofficial sources say that it was Moscow and not Vilnius which denied these visa requests. One Helsinki Commission staffer's visa request to attend Lithuanian Independence Day celebrations was also refused. Such arbitrary visa denials by the Soviet authorities do not bode well for similar visa requests to attend the 1991 Moscow Human Rights meeting. I hope that this unfortunate Kremlin response to these visa requests will not repeat itself on other occasions.

It was Sajudis, or the Lithuanian Movement to Support Perestroika which invited some 50 foreign guests to attend independence day celebrations. And, indeed, February 16, 1989 is a day that will be long remembered in Lithuania.

A crowd of some 200,000 people gathered in Kaunas—Lithuania's ancient capital—to mark independence day on February 16. Lithuanians of various persuasions turned out: former political prisoners such as Viktoras Petkus and Balys Gajuskas, Catholic rights campaigners such as Nijole Sadunaite, participants in the Lithuanian Liberty League, liberal members of the intelligentsia, and Sajudis activists.

During a meeting on the eve of February 16, the Sajudis assembly of 220 elected national representatives, issue a remarkable statement:

Lithuania's declaration of independence on February 16, 1918, expressed the Lithuanian nation's aspiration to create a democratic state. The Lithuanian republic, successfully defended in the war for independence, received international recognition and became a member of the League of Nations. Although Germany and the U.S.S.R., through ultimate coercion and mutual agreement in 1939–40, annexed the Lithuanian state, the definitive international recognition of Lithuania's independence remains in force.

The Lithuanian nation never reconciled itself to the loss of its state sovereignty. Through various means it resisted Hitlerite and Stalinist genocide, and to this date has opposed manifestations of state colonialism. Sajudis expresses national determination to regain its rights through peaceful means, to live independent of any kind of dictate.

Relying on the new political thinking declared by the top leadership of the USSR as well as in Mikhail Gorbachev's speech to the UN General Assembly on December 7, 1988, which stressed the right of nations to choose freely, Sajudis will follow the road to legal, political, economic and cultural independence for Lithuania, to state sovereignty, without confining itself to partial achievements.

Sajudis goals: To struggle against depression and degeneration, to build new foundations for Lithuania's well-being, to create conditions for free and democratic national self-determination. Sajudis stands for social justice, humaneness and democracy, for cultural autonomy for Lithuania's national minorities in a Lithuanian state, for its traditional status of neutrality in a European demilitarized zone, for universally accepted human and civil freedoms, from which flows the general right of Lithuanian citizens independently to choose and develop their own forms of state existence. Sajudis invites all patriotic forces in Lithuanian society to unite in raising up and fostering our native land.

This dramatic statement of Sajudis, which represents some 300,000 people in Lithuania, clearly marks a new stage in Lithuania's movement toward national self-determination. My congressional colleagues and I have been consistent supporters of the longstanding United States policy of nonrecognition of the illegal incorporation of the three Baltic States of Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia into the Soviet Union. In light of recent events in the Baltic States, there is reason to hope that history is finally moving toward granting the Baltic States a greater share of that freedom to which they have so long aspired.

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today with several of my colleagues to pay tribute to the Lithuanian people on the 71st anniversary of Lithuanian Independence Day.

Seventy-one years ago, Lithuania released itself from the shackles of foreign domination and declared itself a free and independent nation. It enjoyed 21 years of political independence and economic success. On the eve of World War II, the Soviet Union and Germany concluded a secret treaty that cleared the way for the Soviet invasion of Lithuania and its sister states, Latvia and Estonia. Today, all three of the Baltic States still suffer from unwanted and unwelcome foreign rule.

Lithuania's independence celebration will be darkened by the shadow of this foreign rule. Unlike America's Fourth of July, marked by joy and happiness, Lithuania's Independence Day is marked by hope and determination. Hope that one day their nation will be free, and determination to bring about the reality of that dream.

Even after 50 years of oppression, the Baltic people have never relinquished their hope or resistance. They have endured the years of terror during the alternating Nazi and Soviet rules, the brutal collectivization policies of Stalin's dictatorship, and continued Soviet domination and oppression. Throughout all the hardships, they have never lost their faith in religion and their firm resolve to rule themselves. Today, this faith and resolve is manifest in the efforts of Lithuanians living in the free world, who have formed agencies and organizations to remind the world of illegal Soviet occupation, and to ensure that this issue remains on the international agenda. Of course, it is also characterized by the unyielding resistance of those living in Lithuania, Estonia, and Latvia, who continue their fight for freedom.

Mr. Speaker, we have all heard praise for the new "openness" that is sweeping the Soviet Union. I question the ability of the Soviet leadership to espouse this openness, but refuse to allow a proud people not only its right to self-government, but its right to celebrate an important date in its history. I hope that I speak for all of my colleagues in urging the Soviet Union to allow this celebration to take place in peace, and to remove its iron grip from a proud, peaceful and determined people.

I am honored to represent the many Lithuanians in the Fifth Congressional District of Massachusetts, and I am proud to take part in the celebration of Lithuanian independence being held this month by the Lawrence Chapter of the Lithuanian American Council. I know that the Lithuanian people and their friends will continue their struggle for independence until this hope becomes a reality. On this day we observe this struggle, and renew our vows to make it end in fruition.

Mr. DONALD E. "BUZ" LUKENS. Mr. Speaker, it brings me much joy to be able to recognize and commemorate Lithuanian Independence Day. This is a time in which we recognize Lithuania's struggle for freedom and self-determination. We acknowledge and pay tribute to the thousands of Lithuanians who died in their pursuit for freedom.

For hundreds of years Lithuania has been dominated by Russian and German forces. During this period of time the strength of the culture, values, religion and traditions of the Lithuanian people carried them through years of suppression and enabled them to survive as a distinct group of people.

In February 1918, at the conclusion of World War I, Lithuania finally gained independence after hundreds of years of foreign occupation. The people of Lithuania went on to pursue their dreams and grow and prosper as a nation in the arts, religion, industry, and agriculture. Unfortunately this period of freedom was short-lived as a result of World War II and Soviet expansionist policy.

The strategic importance of Lithuania in World War led the Soviet Union to use that country as a base for Russian troops. Once inside Lithuania the Soviets arranged a rigged election in 1940 to install a regime of their own. This led to the unwilling incorporation of that nation into the Soviet Union. Political repression continues to be the hand that tries to break the spirit of the Lithuanian people. Few who have been able to escape that country report a lack of freedom. The Soviet Union has suppressed their freedom and sovereignty and this is in direct violation to the values which the United States holds so dearly and stands for. As President Reagan once said: "As a nation, we must remain dedicated to the furtherance and preservation of the fundamental human rights and freedoms of all people."

The tragedy of Soviet domination continues to this day. Lithuanian culture, language, and religion faces constant repression. The Catholic Church continues to be the center of attack by Soviet authorities. By suppression of the church the Soviets attempt to break the spirit of the Lithuanian nation, deprive it of its spiritual values and denationalize the people.

Lithuanians are a strong people and very proud of their heritage. They continue to this very day to fight for their independence and they will not give up until they win it back. The United States has never recognized the incorporation of Lithuania into the Soviet Union and we must continue to support freedom and self-determination in that country. It is important that the people of Lithuania know we support them and encourage them to continue their fight for freedom.

Mr. DWYER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with my colleagues today in a tribute to the spirit of the Lithuanian people, and I would like to express my thanks to Congressman ANNUNZIO for again reserving this time for such an important matter.

One year ago, many of us stood in this Chamber to call attention to the struggle of the Lithuanian people in their ongoing fight to regain their independence from Soviet domination. Today, we meet again to commemorate their 71st anniversary of independence. However, while they are still under the rule of the Soviet Union, as they have been for over 48 years, there have been significant changes internally in all of the Baltic countries, including Lithuania.

In this new age of perestroika, the Lithuanian people have renewed their calls for nationalism and late last year a grassroots political movement in Lithuania approved a founding platform dedicated to curtailing Soviet rule in the country.

Throughout the fall, significant events in Lithuania made news in Western papers which raised the hopes of all freedom-loving peoples. In October, the government announced that it was returning to the church a 14th century cathedral after nearly 40 years of use as an art gallery. To coincide with that announcement, the first Mass in 30 years was held at the cathedral with worshipers carrying the yellow, green and red flag that flew in Lithuania during its brief independence so many years ago.

By the end of November of last year, the Lithuanian Communist Party chief was announcing plans to publish a new draft constitution asserting Lithuania's sovereignty and its right to dispose of its own national resources.

The early signs for 1989 are just as promising. In January the official Communist Party official was defeated by a 32 year-old environmentalist in a Lithuanian local election. National elections for the Soviet legislature will be held on March 26. In Lithuania, and in all of the Baltic nations, the Communist Party is on the defensive due to the resurgence of nationalism. I am hopeful that the Lithuanian people will continue to win more of their rights in the coming year; so that next year when we again gather to commemorate the anniversary of Lithuanian independence, it will be a celebration of new-found freedom and independence for these valiant people.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, today, I join many of my colleagues in honoring Soviet Lithuania and recognizing the independence of her people. The United States was founded on the belief that the choice of religion, form of communication, diversity in political ideals and adherence to cultural traditions are an absolute right. We must take this opportunity to remember those who are not able to benefit from these same freedoms.

Since 1795, the Lithuanian people have been forced to live under the religious, political, and cultural repressions imposed interchangeably by both the Russians and Germans. In 1920, Russian leaders signed a peace treaty with the Lithuanian Government recognizing full right of self-determination, freedom to secede from the state, full sovereignty and independence for both the Lithuanian people and their territory. However, with the outbreak of World War II, Lithuania, acting as a buffer state between the Soviet Union and Hitler's Germany, was one of the first to experience the aggression and fury of the war. As an occupied territory during the war, the Lithuanian people experienced communism and Soviet domination and have since been completely incorporated into the Soviet Union.

These soldiers fighting for the simplest freedoms, of worship, of speech and of political conviction, are threatened daily by the repressive Soviet Government. These people who are dissenters in their own state are not nonconformists, they are not rebels, they are fighting for the privileges that are embodied in the freedoms that we Americans so thoroughly enjoy. They are soldiers for peace and independence and are represented by the Helsinki group, which was established in 1976 as a committee for the oversight of Soviet adherence to the Helsinki accords who successfully published over 30 papers bringing to public attention the human rights violations that have persisted in Lithuania. Yet since 1981, there has been no trace of the Helsinki group. They are also represented by the signers of the Baltic Declaration, considered the most prominent dissenters. These dissidents have committed their names to the "Declaration of 45," the "Baltic Declaration," renouncing the legality of Lithuanian annexation. They have condemned the Afghanistan invasion and formed their solidarity with striking Polish workers. Yet these 45 dissenters were more harshly dealt with than all. They have been eliminated, incarcerated and forced to flee their native country.

The most established and effective form of dissidence is the Catholic Church. As the pillar of culture, language and tradition for the Lithuanian people, it fights an ongoing battle for Lithuanian freedoms. The church has been forced to take the brunt of the oppression inflicted due to its ability to act as the repository of the fundamental traditions feelings of nationalism. As the mainstay for the Lithuanian people, the church has become a target for persecution in expectation of shaking the foundations of strength by removing Lithuanian heritage. However, the Lithuanians have the largest practicing population in the U.S.S.R. and even in the face of persecution, these Christians continue to attend Mass and fight for their religious recognition and their right to choose their form of worship.

We should be encouraged by the recent overwhelming approval for State sovereignty by the 200-member council of Sajudis. These representatives of the first political movement have surfaced as the most viable political force among all of the Baltic States. The basis for this overwhelming endorsement was founded on the goals of the Lithuanian people as they were established before the occupation periods began. The desire to remain as a demilitarized zone in the neutral European buffer area, is fused with their struggle for human freedoms including the right to choose their State existence, political ideals and religious convictions. Just yesterday, the Lithuanian Council of Ministers promulgated the official language of the state as Lithuanian in a move even one step beyond that of the Lithuanian Congress. These objections, though they may be met with persecutions and repressions that as a democracy, we can not even fathom, they are a signal to the Soviets and the world, the determination of these people in acquiring the freedoms they so justly deserve.

Mr. Speaker, let us honor these people and be encouraged by their strength and resolve. Their plight is one which allows us, as Americans, to remember and be grateful for the liberties and freedoms on which this country has been built. As leader of the free world, let us continue to support the Lithuanian battle for sovereignty and appeal to the Soviet leaders for their total independence.

Mr. MCEWEN. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in honoring the subjugated peoples of Lithuania in their continuing struggle to regain their economic and cultural autonomy and political liberty.

The brave and honorable people of Lithuania have been repeatedly oppressed for decades by the mailed fist of Soviet leaders from Stalin to Gorbachev. Recently, a strong freedom movement within Lithuania has offered a small but steady glimmer of hope that one day liberty will return. Our recognition today of Lithuanian Independence Day is a step in that direction. Our support sends a critical message to those still enslaved that we have not forgotten them or their noble and worthwhile goal—freedom.

In addition our public support sends an equally strong signal to Moscow, adding much needed pressure on General Secretary Gorbachev to spread glasnost to the peoples of Lithuania.

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to join my colleague from Illinois in this special order to commemorate the 71st anniversary of the declaration of Lithuanian independence. During the period of independence, from 1918 to 1940, Lithuanians took great advantage of their new found freedom to make progress in the fields of agriculture, industry, and education. Furthermore, Lithuania was admitted as a full member to the League of Nations. In 1920 Soviet Russia declared:

> Russia, without any reservation whatsoever, recognizes Lithuania as a self-governing and independent state with all juridical consequences that follow from such a recognition and in the spirit of free and good will renounces for all time all sovereignty rights of Russia concerning the Lithuanian nation and Lithuanian territory.

In 1939, however, as part of the Nazi-Soviet pact a secret territorial agreement was made and the future of Lithuania was determined by two brutal dictators: Adolf Hitler and Joseph Stalin. Soon Soviet troops invaded Lithuania and she fell under Soviet totalitarian rule. Lithuania has been a victim of her powerful neighbor for almost 50 years.

The loss of independence and the occupation by the Soviet Union drastically altered Lithuanian culture, language, economics and national consciousness. Lithuanians, as well as their Baltic neighbors, were deprived basic human rights, including freedom of the press, speech, assembly, and religion.

As a member of the Helsinki Commission, I am aware of our continuing duty to do everything we can to help and improve the human rights situation in Lithuania today. As long as the Soviet Government denies these basic human rights, it is violating its Helsinki commitments. Nobody should ignore the illegal occupation and colonization of Lithuania, which is contrary to the values upon which our civilization is based. I am pleased that the United States has never recognized the takeover of Lithuania and therefore we acknowledge Lithuania's right to seek self-determination.

Along with the people of Lithuania, I appreciate and welcome the reforms that have occurred in the Soviet Union during the last few years. This year Lithuanians were able to celebrate their independence day freely and legally for the first time in nearly 50 years. Although there is still a long way to go to establish a neutral and independent Lithuania, we see a reform taking place in the Baltic countries that is definitely a step in the right direction. I strongly feel that the proud people of Lithuania, who struggle for basic human rights and freedom for their country on day-to-day basis, are entitled to real democracy and political autonomy.

Mr. Speaker, the spirit of freedom is alive. I salute the people of Lithuania and join with them to hope and pray for self-determination and liberty for Lithuania.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, I rise to commemorate the 71st anniversary of the rebirth of an independent Lithuania. On February 16, 1918, the proud Lithuanian people declared their full independence from over 100 years of Russian and German domination. For 22 years, they enjoyed free political institutions and a cultural renaissance unparalleled in their great history.

This brief period of sovereignty ended abruptly in 1940 when Russia invaded and occupied Lithuania and the other Baltic States of Latvia and Estonia following dictator Joseph Stalin's secret nonaggression pact with Nazi Germany.

After nearly five decades of brave resistance to Soviet oppression, Lithuanians are once again tasting the fruits of freedom. Sajudis, the growing democratic mass movement of nationalist Lithuanians, has increasingly challenged the Communist Party in Vilnius and Moscow.

Just last week, Sajudis committed itself to restoring Lithuania's traditional status of neutrality in a European demilitarized zone, as well as—striving for—universally accepted human and civil freedoms, from which flows the general right of Lithuania's citizens independently to choose and develop their own forms of state existence.

On this Independence Day, I applaud the courage of Sajudis and the Lithuanian people, both in their homeland and here in America, who continue to struggle fearlessly for liberty and justice.

Mr. ROWLAND of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I rise today along with many of my esteemed colleagues to salute the people of Lithuania for the courage they have shown in their struggle for sovereignty. At this time, I also commend my fellow Members of Congress for supporting this worthy endeavor. For it is we, as leaders of the free world, who can best empathize with the people of a nation who desire independence.

The state of Lithuania has played an essential role in the development of Europe as we know it today. Its origin dates back to the latter days of the feudal state system and its history is long and rich. There are many notable points about this history. Some are positive, like prosperous cities, cultural development, and recognition by other states as a power to be respected. Some of these points are negative, like regional conflicts, internal struggles, and economic depression. However, the worst of these, and certainly the most saddening, was the Nazi invasion and subsequent Soviet occupation, which ended Lithuania's existence as a sovereign state.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the reason I am here today. Twenty-two years before the outbreak of World War II, and after a resurgence in Lithuanian pride, the citizens of this Baltic State reestablished themselves as an independent nation. They declared themselves free from Polish or Russian influence, or the influence of any other power seeking to interfere in Lithuanian matters. This was done in much the same way our Founding Fathers declared our own independence. For more than two decades, these energetic and industrious people enjoyed the freedom of self-rule. Their culture regained international recognition and Lithuania became a part of the European community as a member of the League of Nations. However, this political prosperity was extremely short lived. In 1939, Hitler's army brutally subjugated these quiet people of the Baltic region and crushed any hope of further Lithuanian statehood.

By virtue of its location, Lithuania was in constant conflict with neighboring Russia. Therefore Lithuania's interests were neglected later in 1939 when the Soviet Union and Germany formed a mutually beneficial pact. The Soviet Union occupied their territory, and to this day has not relinquished its control. They sent in troops and established a political system pleasing to Moscow. Hence, the people of Lithuania have been unable to realize one of the most basic freedoms we know as Americans, self-government. But, it is a freedom they have not forgotten.

In spite of invasions, concentration camps, and foreign rule, the people of Lithuania have not lost sight of their dreams. They work incessantly toward attaining the independence they once had, confident that their goal is within reach. The Lithuanians are a people who have courageously endured many hardships. Fortunately, the casualties of conflict have not extended to the spirit of determination, which is the driving force behind all of their efforts. It is with pleasure I say that progress has been made.

In the era of Mikhail Gorbachev and glasnost we have seen small advances in Lithuania's peaceful fight for freedom. After 40 years, the ban on Lithuanian flags has been lifted, allowing Lithuanians to join their comrades around the world and celebrate the anniversary of their independence. Hopefully, these new Soviet promises of openness will not prove to be empty, and the people of Lithuania will begin to really feel the benefits of glasnost. For it is they who are most affected.

The people of Lithuania have a long way to go in their struggle to be free from Soviet rule and certainly their plight is not over. But, their future is bright. They seek the same independence we often forget as we go about our daily lives in a free society. I think that we need to take time to reflect, to give thanks, and to really realize what we have in America. At the same time, we must remember those who are less fortunate than we, applaud their efforts thus far to attain freedom, and offer our continued support. We must do this for Lithuania and any nation around the world seeking independence.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, February 16, 1989 marked the 71st anniversary of Lithuania's declaration of independence. Hundreds of thousands of Lithuanians gathered last Thursday to legally celebrate their nation's prewar independence for the first time in nearly 50 years. At the same time, leaders of the Sajudis independent mass movement broke one of the last remaining political taboos by defying Communist mandates and openly pledging to work toward restoring Lithuanian independence.

Lithuanians have peacefully resisted the unlawful occupation of their nation since its 1940 incorporation into the Soviet Union while watching the decline of their economies, cultures, and religious lives. But, Lithuania's determination to regain their rightful independence was rewarded in 1988 as Lithuania, along with neighboring Latvia and Estonia, took to heart Mikhail Gorbachev's call for increased democracy. Numerous major strides toward establishing autonomy were made during the past year.

Baltic citizens created independent political movements which now challenge the Communist Party's unlawful monopoly on power. Lithuania's independent Sajudis party is expected to provide the Communists stiff competition in the March 26 elections to revamp the Soviet legislature. While the Baltic efforts have not yet secured their rightful independence from oppressive Communist rule, we should find encouragement in Lithuania's continued determination to fulfill their desire for true independence.

One of the most heartening advancements was the gathering of more than 20,000 worshippers October 23 at the Vilnius Cathedral to participate in the first mass in 30 years. The event, led by the first Lithuanian cardinal of modern times, celebrated the Soviet decision to return ownership of a 14th-century cathedral to the Roman Catholic Church.

Predawn worshippers wept tears of joy and sang nationalist songs as they flocked to the cathedral which had, under Soviet rule, served as a museum to atheism. Officials allowed the once banned scarlet, green and yellow flag of pre-Soviet Lithuania to be flown at the mass. The Lithuanian flag, the overt religious activity and the nationalist sentiment all stood as proof to us that Lithuanians will not allow their culture to be swallowed up by the Soviet Union.

I wish to remind the people of Lithuania that the United States has never acknowledged the authority of the Soviet Union to annex the Baltic nations against their will and we continue to support them in their struggle for freedom from Soviet dictatorship. We will also continue our support of the more than 100,000,000 people in Albania, Armenia, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Estonia, Hungary, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, Romania, and Ukraine who are deprived of their right to exercise the free choice of their government in a democratic pluralistic system.

I join with my colleagues today in reaffirming our pledge to assist the Lithuanian effort. We can only hope Lithuania will celebrate its next independence day as a nation free from Soviet control. In closing, I would like to say to all who celebrated February 16 as both the 71st anniversary of Lithuania's declaration of independence and as another step toward regaining sovereignty, "Dieve palaimink Lietuva." God bless Lithuania.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today on behalf of the thousands of Lithuanian descendants in my district to recognize Lithuanian Independence Day.

It has now been over 45 years since Lithuania was incorporated into the Soviet bloc. The hardships and religious persecution that continue to plague the people of Lithuania are unmeasurable. The Helsinki accord on human rights and the birth of glasnost have yet to bring independence and religious self-determination to a land of over 3.6 million inhabitants.

Lithuania is no stranger to repression. In 1795, Lithuania was annexed by Russia and came under complete Russian domination. While World War I took a great toll on Lithuania, independence was proclaimed on February 16, 1918. Independence, however, was short lived. In January 1919, the Red Army entered Lithuania and installed a Communist government. A independence was soon settled with Moscow but Lithuania again fell to Soviet occupation in 1944.

The United States has always recognized Lithuania independence and has supported efforts to restore basic human rights in that area. As we again commeomrate Lithuanian Independence Day here in the House of Representatives, let us remember those who gave their lives in the name of freedom. In addition, let us work hard and remain optimistic that someday Lithuanians the world over will join one another and truly celebrate independence.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may switch places with the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. BENTLEY] in our special orders.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BARNARD). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

CARL YASTRZEMSKI ELECTED TO MAJOR LEAGUE BASEBALL'S HALL OF FAME

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the Chair for this courtesy in allowing me to speak at this time.

Mr. Speaker, today, I have the great honor of publicly extending my congratulations to a dear, dear friend of mine, Carl Yastrzemski. Last month, the man the baseball world calls Yaz, was elected to Major League Baseball's Hall of Fame, along with one of the games greatest catchers, Johnny Bench.

Mr. Speaker, my colleagues know where I'm from and a great many of them, knowing that I was born and raised in western Massachusetts, know that I am devoutly, religiously, and to the very end, a Boston Red Sox fan.

Those of you who are from New England, of course, know what it means to be a Red Sox fan. Those of you from other areas, areas beyond the Berskshire Hills and Lake Champlain, probably don't know and can only imagine what it is like. New Yorkers have experienced the joy of World Series Championships brought to their Mets and Yankees by the likes of Joe DiMaggio, Mickey Mantle, Tom Seaver, Reggie Jackson, and Ray Knight. In Los Angeles, only last year the moment of victory was brought to you compliments of Kurt Gibson and Orel Hershiser. Those between the coasts—Detroit, St. Louis, Kansas City—have had their victories too. But, you see, those of us in New England have been denied the ultimate victory of the world's greatest game since 1918, back when the doughboys were still in France and Woodrow Wilson was in the White House.

Much has been written about New England's baseball travails. I am no writer but I can tell you that those of us in New England and elsewhere have experienced something perhaps more profound than victory, something that has toyed with our emotions, teasing us into a frustrated state of hope and tension that has only become bearable through years of numbing and the company of generations of fellow Red Sox fans. Yes, it is "near victory" that truly tries men's souls. Red Sox fans have felt the ecstasy of victory in their grasps so many times, have had their fists clenched, waiting for that final out in heady anticipation, only to be put through the agony of another lost victory. It is a ritual that has been repeated many more times than a kinder and gentler God would allow. Through the ups and downs, the joys and the sorrows of seasons like 1946, 1967, 1975, 1978, and 1986, the treacherous journeys were always led by almost mythical heroes who courageously donned the Red Sox uniform to try to slay that dragon which plagued the people of New England. For many years, it was Ted Williams, who fought the dreaded beast. But from 1961 until 1983, it was a man called Yaz who led the entire region into battle.

Today, different Red Sox fans remember different great moments in Yaz' career. Many baseball prophets say that no one will ever again win the triple crown as Yaz did in 1967. So many of us will recall a young and inexperienced Red Sox team entering September of that year.

The experts said that they were sure to crumble under the pressure of the team's first pennant run in over a decade. Indeed, the young team did start to wither and almost certainly would have fallen had it not been for the heroic efforts of a 26-year-old Carl Michael Yastrzemski.

With the team starting to fade Yaz strapped on the harness and the yoke and grabbed the reins of that team and pulled and strained and carried the Sox to their first pennant in 19 years. In the last 2 weeks of that season, Yaz batted .523, hit five home runs, and batted in 16 runners. In the very last two games of that season, with the pennant on the line, Yaz went seven for eight. Seven for eight. The World Series that followed saw the Sox push the Cardinals, led by pitcher Bob Gibson, to seven games before the impossible dream was ended. In that series, Yaz batted .400, had three homers and five RBI's. The dragon wasn't slain that year but Yaz bloodied him as never before.

Yaz played 23 years for the same ball club, a feat unheard of in today's arena of opportunism. Yaz was always there in the lineup, day in, day out, season after season. For an entire generation of Red Sox fans, the idea of the Red Sox without Yaz was as unthinkable as Plymouth without the Rock. He could have played elsewhere but even after years of adversity Yaz came to love the Boston Red Sox as if he had been born and reared in the shadow of glorious Fenway Park itself.

Yaz set many records. Yaz leads players since the dawn of the national pastime in total plate appearances. No player in the American League, not even the mighty Babe Ruth himself, has ever been intentionally walked as many times as Yaz. And, he is the only player in American League history ever to hit over 3,000 hits and 400 home runs.

Baseball fans the world over have heard of the menacing 37-foot high wall that guards Fenway Park's left field. Before it was resurfaced the wall was a contorted warped beast that would deflect line drives in a hellish fashion. Visiting leftfielders would have nightmares thinking of playing the wall. And yet, Yaz would win seven gold gloves playing in front of the foreboding green monster.

Yaz was the captain of the Red Sox most of his career. But he was never a cheerleader. Instead, Yaz led by example and courageousness. During his career, he would suffer strained knee ligaments, torn ankle ligaments, fractured ribs, wrist tears, and a chronic back problem, and yet, in 23 years Yaz was on the disabled list but one time.

If you were to ask Yaz about his amazing durability he would simply say that, after all, he is of "tough Polish stock." Fiercely devoted to his wonderful family, Yaz would always attribute his successes to their love and support.

I could read down the long list of his marvelous career stats and records, but, it is a man, a great man, that I wish to honor here today, not just a list of statistics and awards.

We remember great men not by their awards but by the memories they leave us and our posterity.

One of my fondest memories of Yaz the player, came later in his storybook career. I can remember another young Sox club, one lacking the talents of the once-promising 1975 team that had the likes of Fred Lynn and Carlton Fisk and Rick Burleson. The 1982 Sox were a collection of journeymen, wet-behind-the-ears kids, and cagey veterans. It was a team in awkward transition, but still, in July 1982, a team somehow in contention. With players injured it was once again Carl Yastrzemski that the Sox turned to and, at the age of 43, Yaz who had been DHing, strapped on full armor for battle once again and became the oldest player ever to start a game in centerfield. Yaz knew the possible consequences that such a move would have on an aging body but he again sacrificed himself for his team.

It is true that today I have the honor of calling Yaz a great personal friend. But I stand with all of his admiring fans throughout New England and the baseball world in praise of his truly heroic career. Many have said that great players like Yaz are a lost breed, that heroes are of an age foregone. For all of our sakes, I hope that it is not so. I hope that the children of today are drawn to cheer for their favorite baseball teams just as children of 10 and 20 and 60 years ago cheered for their ball clubs. I recall my own youth and the hours spent trying to hear beneath the static of the radio the play by play of a baseball announcer, calling balls and strikes from a baseball field far away. And I can recall last season stranded in Washington DC, with the pressures of the appropriations process bearing down and still craving for time enough to try and tune in WTIC out of Hartford, the southernmost station broadcasting Sox games, and hearing much more of the static than Ken Coleman's voice transmitting from heavenly Fenway. But as I hope that youngsters today will fall in love with baseball as I did so many seasons ago, I know that they will never see a man play in the Red Sox uniform with the courage and the conviction that Yaz had. During the 23 years of his career, Yaz symbolized what was the very best in New England's team or any other team—commitment, sacrifice, and perseverence.

These are the qualities that endear true heroes to children and adults alike. It just so happens that Carl Yastrzemski chose to devote himself to baseball, but again, it is the man that we have all grown to respect, not just the baseball player. Long ago, Yaz won our respect and our hearts. And now, he has won his place among the other legends of baseball in the Hall of Fame. Yes, Mr. Speaker, there will be other heroes, but there will never be another Yaz. God bless you, old pal.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOAKLEY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, early last month the Baseball Writers of America voted almost unanimously to induct Carl Yastrzemski into the Baseball Hall of Fame in his first year of eligibility.

Carl's selection to the Hall of Fame came as no surprise to those of us who admired his skill, strength, and leadership throughout his 23 years wearing the uniform of the Boston Red Sox. Carl came to embody all that for which the Red Sox professional sports, and indeed, all New England stands. He was the consummate professional: long hours of practice, modest in victory, gracious in defeat, and always accessible to fans and sportswriters alike.

Carl was also known throughout his career as a generous man. He always had time for fans, children, various charities, and other worthy causes. Much of his work was done away from the bright lights and cameras that characterize the "public service" performed by some of today's athletes. And now that Carl has been retired for nearly 6 years, he has been more active than ever on behalf of those in need.

Every year Yaz hosts a golf tournament on Cape Cod to benefit the Genesis Fund—a fund that aids children in need of orthopedic and other corrective surgery. He also works tirelessly for the Jimmy Fund which helps to finance research on cures for children's cancer. Furthermore, Carl is concerned about education as evidenced by the ever-growing scholarship he has funded at Merrimack College in his mother's name. Add to this dozens of personal appearances on behalf of other charities and his duties as a businessman and you get an idea of the kind of man Carl Yastrzemski is.

Carl Yastrzemski is being honored by his induction to the shrine which houses the names of the greatest baseball players of all time. This is a most worthy acclaim as Carl takes his place alongside the Ruths, the Williams, and the Musials. If there were a place for the player that meant the most to a game, a team, and a region, however, Carl Yastrzemski would stand alone.

Once again, I thank the dean of the Massachusetts delegation for allowing me to talk about our friend and our hero, Carl Yastrzemski.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my good friend, JOE MOAKLEY, for the fine remarks about our mutual friend. JOE and I are fortunate to sport that beautiful ring when Carl retired he had made up, and had about half a dozen of these and gave them to the Speaker and some of his closest friends. It is a duplicate of the World Series ring.

I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, my Boston colleague and friend [Mr. MARKEY].

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding and thank him for having this special order.

Carl Yastrzemski is to those of us who lived in New England in the 1950's and 1960's, a savior. We had gone from 1946 to 1967 in a baseball wilderness, waiting for our savior to bring us back to respectability.

In that summer of 1967, Carl Yastrzemski did more for the spirit of Boston and for New England than any single individual had done throughout the entire decade, and in that one miracle summer he took the forlorn hopes of all Red Sox fans and made them a reality as he and Jim Lonberg carried us to the impossible dream, that pennant in 1967, and I spent the bulk of that summer driving an ice cream truck and parking it outside of Fenway Park every single night to catch the overflow of the 30,000 fans who had returned to that ballpark after two decades of despair, and was able to sneak in almost every night to be able to see the final two innings of every game, ending up with Carl Yastrzemski making the catch or the hit that won the game.

So all of us have a special place in our hearts to Carl Yastrzemski for his entire career, but from my perspective, 1967 will always be the special year in all of our lives in terms of what he meant to us in the baseball community because there are only two things that I think most of us really think about as young boys growing up in Massachusetts, and one of them was being a left fielder for the Red Sox, and from Ted Williams to Carl Yastrzemski, and right through Jim Rice, we have had a special relationship with that position, and in 1967, I think was and always will be the most special of years.

I thank the gentleman for bringing this special order to the floor, because there is no one more deserving than Carl Yastrzemski.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, thank you very much, and I yield to my good friend, the gentleman who is not from New England but from Illinois, Chicago, MARTY RUSSO.

I might say, Carl, I will send you this tape, and MARTY is a great athlete in his own right. Lousy baseball player, but one of the best golfers in the House of Representatives, MARTY RUSSO.

Mr. RUSSO. Mr. Speaker, like Mr. CONTE, I love the Sox. But, being from Chicago, the Sox I love are White, not Red. Regardless of my loyalty to the Chicago White Sox, however, I share his great respect and admiration for one of baseball's greatest—Carl Yastrzemski.

As a former young ball player and proud father of Little League players, I understand the value of role models as great as Carl Yastrzemski. His athletic talent and dedication to his team and the sport of baseball merit high praise. His accomplishments are almost too many to count and his contribution to baseball is immeasurable. Throughout his career, Yaz was a class act.

Off the field, Yaz has also been an inspiration. His commitment to helping our Nation's children, especially those kids who need it most, also deserves special mention and commendation.

Mr. Speaker, respect for an athlete transcends an individual's uniform. Carl Yastrzemski is a perfect example of that. He is what baseball is all about. Although Chicago would have welcomed him with open arms and invited him to wear white instead of red, we were still privileged to enjoy watching this tremendous athlete.

I am honored to congratulate Carl Yastrzemski for his election to major league baseball's Hall of Fame.

□ 1550

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my dear and beloved friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RUSSO] for his remarks.

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join my colleagues in paying tribute to Carl Yastrzemski, in recognition of his admission to his Baseball Hall of Fame.

During his distinguished 23-year career, Yaz was a model of consistency, tenacity, and an inspiration to millions of Little Leaguers. During his career Yaz set numerous records worthy of Hall of Fame recognition, both with his bat and on the field. He was the recipient of seven Golden Gloves and the winner of two batting titles, with more than 400 home runs, and 3,000 hits. Yaz's most impressive achievement was winning the Triple Crown, making him the last major league player to win the highest of baseball's individual honors.

Carl Yastrzemski set standards of excellence for players in both the American and National Leagues. As captain of the Boston Red Sox, he provided the leadership and instilled the confidence needed to carry the "impossible dream team" to the 1967 World Series, and again in 1975. Yaz thrilled the fans in Boston with his versatility and his flawless play in left field. To baseball fans everywhere, Yaz is still known as the master of the "Big Green Monster," Fenway Park's famed left-field wall.

Carl's career continued right on into the 1980's as he continued to set records and inspire Boston fans and baseball fanatics around the world. As a fellow Baystater, I take pride in the many accomplishments of my friend Carl Yastrzemski. I want to join my colleagues and all baseball fans in thanking Yaz for his dedication and for the pleasure he brought us, and congratulate him on his admission to the Hall of Fame.

Mr. HOCHBRUECKNER. Mr. Speaker, for 23 years, Carl Yastrzemski was a Boston Red Sox at home in Fenway Park.

Before going to Boston, where he became a baseball legend and where he remains a local hero, Carl Yastrzemski made his home on an eastern Long Island potato farm.

As a fellow Long Islander, I rise today to honor this baseball player. I represent Carl Yastrzemski's home district. Mr. Speaker, Bridgehampton is proud today of its favorite son.

Yastrzemski has officially entered the Baseball Hall of Fame. This honor says again what his fans and neighbors have been saying for years.

Yastrzemski's career stats say it: More than 3,000 hits, more than 400 home runs, a Triple Crown, a Most Valuable Player Award, two batting championships, and seven Golden Glove Awards.

The content of Yastrzemski's character says it.

Yastrzemski himself would be too modest to say it.

But I'll say it: Yastrzemski is an American hero.

Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to join my colleagues in commemorating the election of the Boston Red Sox great Carl Yastrzemski to the Baseball Hall of Fame, and I would like to thank Mr. CONTE for calling this special order today.

I think it is pointless for me or anyone else to defend Yaz' inclusion to the Hall of Fame. If anyone deserves to be in the Hall, he does. Many will remember him only for his 1967 season as the force which brought a ragtag Red Sox team to the World Series. Yastrzemski hit for the Triple Crown that year, the last ballplayer in the major leagues to accomplish that feat. But plenty of players have outstanding seasons; what sets him apart in my memory, however, is a lifetime of achievement. Yaz' career statistics alone—over 3,000 hits, 400 home runs—put him in a very elite league of ball players.

Most New Englanders, however, will not remember the numbers. They may not even remember the awards or the American League Pennants. What will always be retained, however, is that Yaz, by virtue of his character, leadership, and longevity came to embody the unique mania that is Boston Red Sox baseball. History will show that Carl Yastrzemski received more Hall of Fame votes than almost anyone to ever play the game. Memory will tell those of us who follow the Sox that he deserved it.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, I thank my good friend from Massachusetts for recognizing me. As a lifelong fan of the game of baseball, I am proud to join with him in extending our congratulations in Carl Yastrzemski upon his induction into the Hall of Fame.

I have followed Carl Yastrzemski's career with great appreciation for his talent and his style. Over the years, when talk in the cloakroom has turned to baseball, Mr. CONTE and our former colleague and Speaker, Tip O'Neill, have recounted the exploits of "Yaz" in proportions worthy of Homer's epics.

But, Mr. Speaker, with the kind indulgence of my friend from Massachusetts, I want to take just a moment to call attention to another legend of baseball whose achievements have been overlooked by the Hall of Fame.

A few years ago I joined with many others in urging the selection of Willie "Devil" Wells to be inducted into baseball's Hall of Fame. In his day he was recognized as the best shortstop in baseball and his record proved it—a .358 lifetime batting average and 111 home runs.

Many oldtimers consider Willie Wells the finest black shortstop ever born, and Mrs. Effa Manley—who owned the Newark Eagles, which Willie managed from 1936 to 1941—would have amended that statement to read "the finest shortstop ever born—black or white."

Mr. Clark Griffith, the owner of the Washington Senators, used to love to watch Wells and third baseman Ray Dandridge so much that he would beg sportswriter Rick Roberts to let him know whenever "those two bow-legged men" were coming to Washington.

After attending Sam Huston College in Austin, TX, Willie Wells began his professional career in 1925, playing shortstop for the St. Louis Stars. Not only did he establish himself as a star on the team, but in 1929 he led the Negro league with an even .400 batting average. Three years earlier, he led the league in home runs. In 33 post-season games against teams from the major leagues, Willie hit .392.

In 1929, Willie played against big league teams that included Hall of Famers Charley Gehringer, Heinie Manush, and Harry Heilmann. In the first game, against 17-game winner Willie Hudlin, Willie went 2 for 5. His ninth-inning triple knocked in the tying run, and he scored the game-winner himself a moment later by stealing home, kicking the ball out of Wally Schang's glove. The next day he slammed two triples and stole home again against Jake Miller, who won 14 games for the Cleveland Indians that year. Finally, against Detroit's George Uhle, he collected three more hits, knocking in the winning run in the ninth inning.

Willie Wells' also contributed to the game of baseball through his innovative approach. After being knocked unconscious by a pitched ball, Willie returned to action a week later and came to the plate wearing a workman's hardhat. The batting helmets that protect today's players are the result of Willie's resourcefulness.

Everyone who saw Willie Wells play agreed that he was an intelligent student of the game and a superb teacher. He passed on his experience and secrets to young ball players including Monte Irvin, Larry Doby, Ernie Banks, and Don Newcombe, all of whom went on to become stars in the major leagues.

Willie Wells recalled that, upon entering college in Austin, "I was so wrapped up in baseball. I played all sports. I was wrapped up in sports, period. I guess that was my career right there; wasn't nothing else interesting to me. Every day I had a ball in my hand, I just loved it that much. Well, the big teams were playing down South—Kansas City, the Chicago American Giants, St. Louis—and the colleges picked all the best ballplayers from each school to play against those boys. They were professionals, you know; we weren't. When Chicago saw me play, they said 'We want you'. Chicago wanted me and St. Louis wanted me. That was 1927, and I was only 17 years old, so I picked the closest town. I said, 'I think I want to go to St. Louis'. Well, when I left Texas to go to St. Louis, I cried. They said I wasn't going to make it, but I was determined to make it. If you have desire, you'll make it. But if you give up * * *"

Mr. Speaker, to this day many students of the game consider Willie "Devil" Wells to be one of the finest shortstops ever to step on to a baseball field. But, because he performed at a time when major league baseball was not integrated, Willie never got the chance to play in the big leagues—yet among his peers he played the game to perfection. Despite his outstanding record and the legacy he left behind, his friends and advocates have never been able to get him into the Hall of Fame. Willie Wells deserved to be recognized for his achievements during his lifetime. Sadly, we no longer have that opportunity, because he died January 24.

Mr. Speaker, the name and accomplishments of Willie Wells should be resubmitted to the Hall of Fame's veterans selection committee and that committee should posthumously induct him into the Hall, so that future generations of baseball fans will know about his excellence and marvel at his achievements.

And, again, I thank my good friend from Massachusetts for permitting me to recount the achievments of Willie Wells. In doing so, I do not in any way want to detract attention from the equally impressive achievements of Carl Yastrzemski. I am proud to join Mr. CONTE and all Boston Red Sox fans in congratulating Mr. Yastrzemski on this recognition of his outstanding career.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks, and to include extraneous matter, on the subject of my special order here today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BARNARD). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STOKES] is recognized for 60 minutes.

[Mr. STOKES addressed the House. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. BENTLEY] is recognized for 60 minutes.

[Mrs. BENTLEY addressed the House. Her remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.]

THE PRESIDENT'S BUDGET

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER] is momentarily delayed, and, therefore, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to begin the special order that the gentleman from New York has requested and then yield to him upon his arrival.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARKEY] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, the special order that has been requested here today is one that deals with a very important issue, the issue of the budget and the roles which this administration and the previous administration have played in changing the relationship that exists between the budget and various parts of the American society that are funded by that budget. What we hope to do here today is to lay out some of these issues for the American public.

Mr. Speaker, I see that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER] has now arrived, and so at this point I yield to the gentleman so that he may proceed under the special order which he requested.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend and colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARKEY].

First, Mr. Speaker, let me say that this is one of several special orders that various Members on our side will be taking out to deal with different aspects of the budget.

Why did we decide to do this? I think it is quite simple. First, this year, unlike in previous years, the budget is basically in the dark. By administration's own admission, there is a big blank box that has a lot of things whirling around in it. But the most ironic thing of all is that the budget the President has submitted is not a budget at all. It is much more like an outline that does not really fill in the blanks, and we feel it is our job at least to probe the budget and reveal it in its dark little corners so that people will know what is in it. That is, as I said, difficult, because they have not given us traditionally what an administration has always done; the administration, since the Budget Act was passed, whether it be a Democratic or a Republican administration, has always stepped up to the batter's box and swung at the pitch. By that I mean the administration has submitted a complete budget.

The Bush administration is something different. We heard a grandiose speech in this room about increases that the President had wished to make. He wanted more money for education, and that is a cause we would probably all support. He wanted more money to fight drugs, and that is something that I think is supported from one end of this Nation to the other. That all sounded very nice, but then the next day, when we opened up the blue and white book that was the President's budget and we looked for specific details, we saw there were very few to be found.

As I am sure my colleagues know, we divide up the budget into approximately 15 functions—050 for defense and 150 for foreign aid, et cetera. But the budget plan submitted by this administration is so vague and is so nebulous that we cannot even fill in those numbers. The President has said he does not want to do that, that he wants to let Congress make the choices, but again an examination of the budget and the rhetoric that surrounds it reveals that is not to be the case because the President has made a choice about taxes. He made that clear in his campaign: "Read my lips," and "ducks"—you name it. Put it any way you want to talk about it, the President has made it clear that he does not want anymore taxes.

Of course, there are different euphemisms. They are willing to go for user fees. Today the Budget Director appearing before the House Budget Committee said that fairness treatments would work, and some kinds of things are called fairness treatments. But basically the President says he does not want taxes.

He has also in some detail said that he wants to increase programs in certain places. We heard that in his speech. But what he has not said is where he wants to make any cuts, and one does not have to be a Ph.D. in mathematics, economics, or nuclear physics to know that if you have a deficit of approximately $150 billion and you are not going to increase taxes and you are going to increase about 20 programs and you are not going to make any cuts, you are not going to reduce the deficit.

This budget was a budget of public relations. It was a budget that was meant to say to America, "I'm not President Reagan. I am kinder, I am gentler." But what was not said in the budget is how we were going to get there.

There was a cartoon in the Washington Post that summed it up very well. It was a Herblock cartoon, and the title was: "The Bipartisan Budget." There was President Bush, who has filled in the one chart, saying, "I want to increase"—and then they listed 10 things—and then he is saying to Congress, "here, you make the cuts."

There cannot even be the pretext of bipartisanship when that is happening. So what we are here to say to the President today is this: "President Bush, step up to the plate. Swing that bat. Submit your budget." We will disagree in some areas, and we will work with you in others. We certainly don't want the acrimonious kinds of fights that have characterized relationships between the President and Congress, whether they be Democratic or Republican, over the past 8 years, but we can't do anything until you have actually laid out your blueprint. Otherwise here is what will happen, Mr. President: There will be one gigantic fudge. We won't make any cuts. If you are unwilling to make cuts, why should Democrats in Congress then make the cuts?

"There won't be any tax increases, you have made that clear, and I think the Congress would agree with that. There may be some increases. It is going to be awfully hard, Mr. President, when the Congress wants to increase education by a billion dollars for you to say, 'No, that is too much,' after the rousing speech that was given."

Then the budget deficit will get greater and greater.

So why we are asking you to submit a detailed budget is because that is how the process has all worked. There are responsibilities, as well as privileges, to being the President. One of them is to submit a budget under the Budget Act, and then we can go to work in a bipartisan, compromising way. But, Mr. President, for you to say you will do the increases, let Congress make the cuts, is not only unfair, but it is a formula for disaster. It is a formula for increased deficits, not increased deficits. It is a formula that will see the great economic strength of this country slowly ebbed away.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk on one specific area, as well as giving that overview, before I yield to my colleagues, and that is on the FSLIC plan, the budget implications of the President's FSLIC plan. Let me say at the outset that I have been generally supportive of the actual plan he has put together. I have some disagreements with it, but overall in this area, unlike the budget, the President deserves a lot of credit. He bellied up to the bar, he put his plan on the table, something the previous administration had ducked for over a year, and said, "Fellows, ladies, here's how I want to fix it." There was not too much political gain, but in the end the President will be given a lot of credit for doing it early and doing it forthrightly.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think the President deserves credit not only for putting a plan in action, but for putting a tough plan in action. We have seen the industry already try to rally its forces to dilute the plan, but let me says that I agree with the President. We are not going to allocate $50 billion and then have no reform for things that appear like reform but really are not. But in the budget implications of the FSLIC plan we have two very serious problems.

Mr. Speaker, the first problem is a consequence of "read my lips." Because the President does not want to increase taxes, he had to set up a separate financing agency. That finance agency would be the place where the $50 billion was raised, and because it is separate it does not come under the budget. When it goes and it makes obligations of $50 to $90 billion, that does not show up in the budget. But that has two consequences that are quite disturbing from a budgetary point of view.

The first consequence is that it costs more because the Treasury is not the one backing up these notes, but rather with this separate financing agency; the acronym for it is REFCO, it costs more. Some people say it will cost 1 percent more to issue these bonds; the administration says it will only cost 0.25 percent more to issue the bonds. But in either case over the 30-year period of the bond it will cost us anywhere from $12 to $15 to $20 billion more.

Mr. Speaker, that is an awful price to pay given our deficit and given "read my lips," and then there is a second budgetary problem which is probably even worse than the first.

In this budget that the President has submitted the fact is because of budgetary legerdemain that the Government on the balance sheets will look like it is saving money because the REFCO will issue money for these bonds and incur obligations ultimately of the United States. That is off budget so that does not appear.

On the other hand, the money that REFCO gives to the Treasury and to the FDIC to close or merge insolvent institutions is on budget and is a net gain for the budget.

So, Mr. Speaker, what we have is the anomalous situation where in the first few years of this plan because of this REFCO it looks like on paper that the Government is actually making money by issuing $50 billion of bonds because the issuance of bonds is off budget, the money that comes in and is spent, new revenue is on budget, and until we have to start paying the interest down the road and the interest payments exceed the amount of money actually coming into the Federal coffers, it looks like, although we have not, it looks like we have made money, and so we have the situation where the Government is actually going to gain $0.2 billion over the Reagan budget and $8.5 billion over the CBO baseline because of this fiscal, and I would not call it gimmickry, but it is close and, my colleagues, taxpayers of America should not be fooled.

Mr. Speaker, it is costing us money to rescue the thrifts. It is costing us a heck of a lot of money, and it will continue to cost us quite a bit of money for probably 30 years. But the budget actually shows a gain because of the moneys that are coming in, so that is a very, very serious problem with the budget. The off-budget character of the REFCO makes the costs higher, but makes it look like for budgetary purposes on paper, a problem.

There are several other problems that I would just like to quickly go over with the budget.

No. 1, with the financing plan there are very aggressive expectations of the proceeds from the receiverships. When the Federal Government takes over these ailing institutions, what they are going to do, of course, is take over the assets which are not worth that much but are worth something. The estimates as to what those assets will be worth is certainly optimistic. If not, it is going to cost us more.

Second thing that is rather optimistic is the fact that the administration is projecting that overall money that goes into the thrifts will increase at the same rate it is increased over the last few years. That is certainly gainsaid by the fact that money is actually now flowing out of the thrifts, and so, given the fact that everyone expects the industry to be smaller, the amount of money that it will be able to pay into this plan through the premiums paid to the FSLIC will be smaller, and this idea that they will increase at 7 percent each year is not likely to occur.

All of that means that the costs in the outyears to the taxpayers will be even greater than stated in the plan, and it is certainly true that, if one looks at the budget implications of the President's FSLIC plan that, No. 1, the budget does not actually show the costs the taxpayers are going to entail. No. 2, even in actual dollars those costs are likely to be significantly higher than stated in the plan.

What does that mean? Well, I think very simply it means that by "read my lips," by the dilemma that we find here and ultimately by the President's desire not to make tough choices not only our children and grandchildren, but we ourselves through the 1990's will pay more even than we have to for the FSLIC mess that has been created in the eighties, and so I hope that when the American people review this plan they will see those costs and perhaps we will have some change of heart in the administration of showing the courage they showed in actually putting a plan forward to deal also with the budget crisis and come up and belly up to that bar to solve it in a way that all of us would welcome.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER] very much for calling for this special order because I do think it is important, as he has pointed out, that we separate fact from fiction in the Bush budget. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER] has now gone through several Bush policy initiatives which clearly are at odds with the reality of what is in fact taking place out in the American economy at large.

Mr. Speaker, what I would like to do during this special order is to discuss several aspects of the President's 1990 budget request. First, I will address funding priorities within the Department of Energy, with special emphasis on the crisis at DOE's weapons production facilities. I will also say a few words about the budgets for the Environmental Protection Agency and the regulation of our Nation's financial markets.

Let me begin with an overview of the budget for the Department of Energy.

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY BUDGET

Under the Reagan administration the Pentagon executed what amounts to a highly leveraged buyout of the Department of Energy. A department which was primarily geared toward overseeing all of the Nation's civilian energy programs was gradually transformed into a wholly owned subsidiary of the Department of Defense. In the process, the subsidiary was forced to cut back on what was once its central mission—securing our Nation's energy future—and refocus its attention on military activities.

If you will take a look at this chart, you will see that in 1981 41 percent of the DOE budget—or just under $4 billion—was for atomic energy defense activities; 53 percent of the DOE budget was for civilian energy programs, and the remaining 6 percent was for general science. The Department of Energy was primarily a civilian energy agency that also carried out a secondary military mission.
